intimated that he is acting in disrespect to an opinion which Congress had a right to express. If Congress sees fit to abolish the office, that is one thing; but so long as the office continues I think he holds it by right and by law.

Mr. HOWE. I do not dispute that while that office exists Mr. Harvey is entitled to hold the office. For my part, I shall not quarrel with him if he continues to hold it. If he is content to do the work and do it for nothing it is his legal right to do so. The Senator from Connecticut suggests that we may rightfully abolish the office. His argument seems to be that Mr. Harvey has a vested right in the salary of the office, but no vested right in the office itself. So far as his vested rights are concerned, the effect upon Mr. Harvey would be the same whether we terminated the office or refused the appropriation. He gets no money; he is obliged to do no work in either case. The honor he will have as long as he stays there, whatever honor there is in being the representative of a country which will not pay him a dime for his services. That he has a vested right in as long as the President sees fit to continue it to him, I suppose. But I think the Senator, if he takes time to consider the question, will not deliberately affirm that Congress has not the right to withhold appropriations for the payment of this or any other representative we have abroad or at home.

Now, as to the question of dignity, if it be the deliberate opinion of the Senator from Connecticut that Mr. Harvey is behaving with any peculiar dignity, I do not know that I feel called upon to controvert that opinion. If I did, I should certainly say I had a different opinion. I do not precisely see the dignity of holding on to an office which calls upon him to represent a country whose representation that country repudiates. If it were conceded, if it could be claimed by Mr. Harvey or by his peculiar friends, that he could better judge of the value of his services to his country than the country itself, or than the representatives of that country in Congress, then it might be held up as an act of magnanimity, of great generosity, and of even forbearance on the part of Mr. Harvey to continue in the service of the country notwithstanding its Legislature repudiated his work. But I think a modest man, standing in the place of Mr. Harvey, would be bound to concede that the Congress of the United States knew what his services were worth as well as he could know himself, and ought to know whether it was worth their while to continue those services as well as he could judge of the matter himself; and I think a modest man would accept such a declaration as we put upon the statutes last year as a very plain intimation that the country did not require his services at that Court, and would acquiesce in that judgment. Certainly, if the single individual who holds the place of President, only one man of the millions belonging to the Government of the United States, should convey an intimation that he did not want his services there any longer, and should select another man for the place, Mr. Harvey would not be tolerated in questioning that intimation. I do not know why the opinion of Congress, expressed not upon the question of continuing him there, over which we are not called upon or allowed to express an opinion, but expressed upon the question of paying him for staying there, is not entitled to just as much respect with Mr. Harvey as the opinion of the President expressed in the other way and in the other direction.

Mr. DIXON. A single word in reply to the Senator from Wisconsin. I am not unwilling to admit that there might be circumstances in which a modest man would decline to hold an office when the Legislature of his country had by solemn statutes provided that he should not be paid; but although it may seem improper in me to reflect on the conduct of Congress, and I do not wish to do so, I am under the necessity of calling attention to the peculiar circumstances of this case. I think a minister abroad has a right to inquire what was his offense. The people have a right to inquire what was the offense. If Congress see fit to provide by law that a given minister shall not receive his salary, he has a right to ask "Why? what was my crime?" And when they say to him, "Your crime was writing a private, friendly letter to the Secretary of State with no intention of its publication, what amounted to a private conversation which you did not intend to have made public, and for that you are condemned," then he has a right to say, and it is not inconsistent with his dignity to say, "I shall continue to hold my office so long as the law gives me the right and the power to do so."

Now, sir, that is a very different case from the general idea that a man is unfit for the office because Congress has so expressed an opinion. Congress has expressed no such opinion. Congress has barely said, "Mr. Harvey wrote a private letter to the Secretary of State, which appeared without his knowledge or consent in the newspapers, and therefore his salary shall cease." I say, under these circumstances, Mr. Harvey is justified in my judgment—I may be wrong—in saying that he will retain the office. As to his right to the salary, I did not intend to go into that question, and do not now. It is immaterial to my argument. I did not rise for the purpose of saying a word about it. I have no very great wish about it one way or the other.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then I wish you would omit it, because we want to take a vote.

Mr. DIXON. I was not addressing myself particularly to the Senator from Maine, and I do not recognize his right to express a wish on that subject as to whether I shall speak or not.

Mr. FESSENDEN. You said you had no wish about it.

Mr. DIXON. I am addressing the Senate. On page 81 of Brightley's Digest the law will be found:

"That ambassadors, envoys extraordinary, and ministers plenipotentiary, ministers resident, commissioners, chargé d'affaires, and secretaries of legation appointed to the countries hereinafter named in schedule A shall be entitled to compensation for their services respectively at the rates per annum hereinafter specified."

Then a list is given. Schedule A is as follows:

"Great Britain and France, $17,500; Russia, Spain, Austria, Prussia, Brazil, Mexico, and China each, $12,000; all other countries each, $10,000."

Now, sir, the law says they "shall be entitled" to compensation. When they take the office and are legally appointed, unless I am very greatly mistaken, the right vests to the salary so long as they hold the office by law. It is very true Congress has the power to refuse an appropriation. So it has power to refuse an appropriation for anything, under any circumstances; but that, I take it, does not cut off the legal right. Whether there is any tribunal which would enforce the payment, or any tribunal that could do it, is another question which I am not now raising; but I say that the law entitles the minister while he holds the office to the salary, and that right is not destroyed or in any way affected by the neglect of Congress to make an appropriation.

If the Senator says that the provision of the law which provides that he shall not be paid the salary is a repeal of that act so far forth as he is concerned, that is another consideration. It may be so. Perhaps that may be considered as virtually an abolition of the office; but that is not the way in which it strikes me. Still, as that is a point upon which I do not wish to dilate, I will drop the subject. It is to me a matter of indifference whether Mr. Harvey is paid or not. The Senate will do as they please with regard to that. But, sir, attention ought not to be called away from the reason of the failure to make the appropriation, and when his honor is assailed, then I think somebody ought to stand here and say a word in his behalf. Mr. Harvey is a gentleman of character. He held a high position in this country. He was sufficiently respected to be appointed by Abraham Lincoln minister-resident to Portugal and to be confirmed by the Senate. I was going to say unanimously confirmed; but perhaps there was opposition. At any rate he was confirmed. He committed the offense of writing a private letter. For that, and for that alone, the appropriation is refused. Now, sir, it is enough to refuse the appropriation, to deprive him of the compensation to which I think the law entitles him; but at least his honor ought not to be assailed. That I think we ought to respect.

Mr. FESSENDEN. According to the doctrine expressed by the honorable Senator from Connecticut, if we should have a minister abroad a drunkard, a debauchee, a reviler of his country, a man who had no sense of decency and no character, and the President chose to continue him in office, Congress would have no right to refuse to pay him. The doctrine of the English constitution is, that the great safety of the country depends upon the power of the representatives of the people over the public purse; that they can say when money shall be paid and when it shall not. That is the great protection which the people have; and those who made the Constitution of the United States took care that that power over the public purse and the appropriation of money should remain in the hands of the people, to be exercised by their representatives; but according to the Senator, when the law has provided that an office shall exist, if the President chooses to retain a man there, all that Congress has to do is to pay him. Sir, it is a slavish, miserable doctrine that the people of this country will never assent to; and although I have nothing to say about Mr. Harvey or this particular case, I enter my dissent in toto to any such idea.

Mr. DIXON. I understand the position of the Senator from Maine to be this: that if a man holds an office in this country to which a salary is attached by law, he has no vested right to that salary; but that it may depend on the question of his character, or whether he is a debauchee or a drunkard. I deny that doctrine. I say that while any man holds an office in this country to which a salary is affixed by law, he is legally entitled to that salary so long as he holds the office. He may be unfit for the office. If he is unfit for the office, there is a mode of reaching him. I believe all civil officers can be reached. If he is a drunkard, if he is a debauchee, he can be reached. At any rate, while he holds the office, the question is not and cannot be raised, in my judgment, with deference to the Senator from Maine, what is his character. A good man or a bad man is alike entitled to the salary while the office is in his possession.

But, sir, I do not take the ground that the Senator claims that Congress has not the power to refuse to make appropriations. I know perfectly well that Congress holds the purse-strings. I know that not a single officer of the General Government from the President down can receive his salary without an appropriation from Congress. He never can draw a dollar of his pay under any circumstances until that appropriation is made. But take the case of the highest officer of the Government, the President of the United States. He holds that office; he is entitled to that salary; Congress may refuse an appropriation and he fail to receive his salary; but still he has a right to the salary so long as he holds the office. He would be entitled to claim the salary up to the end of his official term; and I do not know but that the Court of Claims would give a judgment in his favor. Whether they would or not is not the question now, but that is the position I take.

Now, sir, I think the Senator from Maine is mistaken. He says my doctrine is slavish. He says that under it the President can keep any one in office as long as he pleases, and Congress is bound to make an appropriation to pay him. I say no such thing. Congress is not bound to make an appropriation for any purpose, not even for our pay. Congress has entire discretion over the subject of appropriations, but still the right of the officer under it is not affected. He has a moral right, and perhaps a legal right, to his pay notwithstanding. That I think is a doctrine that can be maintained.

Mr. HOWE. I understand the position of the Senator from Connecticut to be this: that the minister has a legal right to his pay, but that Congress has a legal right not to pay him.

Mr. DIXON. Is that a very inconsistent statement? Let us look at that for a single moment. Here is an act of Congress which provides that he shall be entitled to his salary.

Mr. FESSENDEN. And a subsequent act of Congress saying that he shall not have it. Will not that repeal the other?

Mr. DIXON. As I said before, if the Senator takes the ground that that is a repeal of the other law, then I have nothing to say upon it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is the ground that has been taken all through.

Mr. DIXON. I have no further controversy upon that point if that is the ground he takes. When we come to legal rights against the Government of the United States, that is a somewhat difficult point to meet. I perhaps may have said "legal right." I should have somewhat modified that. I say that the officer has a right to his salary so long as he holds the office. The Senator from Wisconsin has a right to his salary as a Senator, and still I say that Congress has full and entire power over the question of appropriations to meet that salary. That is the position I take.

Mr. SUMNER obtained the floor.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I desire to ask a question.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope the Senator will pardon me; I would rather not give way.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I only want to ask one question, and probably the Senator from Massachusetts can answer it quite as well as any one: the distinction exactly between right and power.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, I regret that this question has been presented to the Senate. I wish that the bill had come from our committee as it came from the House. As it is now, the question is raised by the committee. I am sorry for it; but it is here, and we are obliged to meet it. I shall feel constrained to vote against the committee; but when I say that, I am not going to be led even by the eloquent and pertinacious Senator from Connecticut into any discussion of the original offense of Mr. Harvey. He has introduced again on this floor a letter. Very well. I shall not follow him with regard to that letter. I content myself with reminding you of the action of Congress at the last session. That is enough. I will not now discuss whether Congress was then right or wrong. Suffice it to say, it eliminated from its appropriation bill all appropriation for a mission to Portugal, and then positively forbade any payment to the actual minister-resident there. If that was the action of Congress at the last session, does any one doubt that we had the power?

The Senator from Connecticut tells us that the minister there had a vested right in his office. He uses technical terms. I doubt whether any reading of law would sustain him in that. Our ministers abroad are appointed by virtue of two different statutes. One is the original diplomatic act of 1856, which says that we shall have a minister-resident at Portugal, and to that extent creates a mission at Portugal, and the other is the annual appropriation bill. The office stands, if I may so express myself, on those two legs: the original statute creating the office, and the annual appropriation bill supplying the means. Congress may, as the Senator from Connecticut argues, repeal the original diplomatic act, and in that way, if I may so express myself, sink the whole ship under a minister or all our ministers in Europe, or it may refuse all appropriation for an individual mission. That has been done constantly in our history. Every year the question is whether we shall have a mission here or there, in one place or in another place, and it is determined by the appropriation bill. Last year by that bill it was determined in the first place that we should have no mission in Portugal, and in the second place that the actual minister there should receive no compensation or salary out of any fund whatever.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator will excuse me, I shall not be long.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I only wish to ask a question.

Mr. SUMNER. I beg the Senator's pardon. I am determined to finish what I have to say briefly.

I was saying that by the appropriation bill of the last session this question was definitively settled; at least so far as the minister-resident there was concerned. You may call it a repeal to that extent of the original diplomatic act, or a refusal to supply means for his salary; but in one way or the other, or in both ways, the same conclusion was reached. There was no basis for that minister to stand upon.

And now I am brought to the question which the Senator from Connecticut has argued so constantly, as to the power of Congress to deal with this case without repealing the original act creating the office, as he expresses it. I think he is entirely mistaken in his argument. I am sure that the Senator from Maine answered him positively and completely. I know that the Senator from Connecticut put cases, and asked whether the same principle would apply to those cases. I decline to follow him there. He asked whether we could repeal the act creating the salary of the Chief Justice. I shall not undertake to answer that question. The time has not come for us to answer that question. When it does, should it ever come in this Chamber, I shall be ready to meet it. The only question before us now is whether we can, so far as this minister is concerned, refuse all appropriations. There I believe the rule is clear and absolutely beyond question. If it were not clear and absolutely beyond question, I think that Congress would be shorn of one of its best powers. It is no answer to say that it is a power that in our history has been rarely exercised, for the occasion for its exercise happily has been very rare; but Congress has exercised it now, and I submit that it is a power beyond question. It was a power, as the Senator from Maine has reminded you, recognized in English history. It was perfectly familiar to the framers of the Constitution of the United States, for it had been proclaimed in a work of authority which had been read at that time by all of our fathers. I hold in my hand the work of Delolme on the British Constitution, from which, with your permission, I will read a few words, for they seem to settle this constitutional question. I read as follows:

"The King of England, therefore, has the prerogative of commanding armies and equipping fleets, but without the concurrence of his Parliament he cannot maintain them."

Just the same as our President has the power of commanding armies and of equipping fleets; but what can he do without the power of Congress? Delolme then goes on:

"He can bestow places and employments."

So can the President.

"But without his Parliament he cannot pay the salaries attending on them."

Is not the position of Congress in this regard at least as high as that of the British Parliament?

"In a word, the royal prerogative, destitute as it is of the power of imposing taxes, is like a vast body which cannot of itself accomplish its motion, or, if you please, it is like a ship completely equipped, but from which the Parliament can at pleasure draw off the water and leave it aground, and also set it afloat again by granting subsidies."

Now, all that Congress proposes to do at this moment, so far as I understand, is, according to the language of this writer, to draw off the water and leave the ship aground. Perhaps the time may come when, again adopting the language of this writer, Congress may set the ship afloat again. That time has not yet arrived.

Mr. DIXON and Mr. McDOUGALL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DAVIS. I submit that the Senator from California is entitled to the floor from the number of times that the Senator from Connecticut has spoken on this subject. The rule is express that will give him the right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognized the Senator from Connecticut first.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I addressed the Chair first.

Mr. DAVIS. When a Senator has spoken twice on the same subject, he is not entitled to the floor against another Senator who has not spoken at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such is the rule, but it has never been observed in the Senate. If the Senator from Kentucky makes that point it will be the duty of the Chair to enforce the rule.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not want to make any point, but I should like to see the rules administered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It never has been the custom, the Chair understands, to enforce that rule.

Mr. DAVIS. But when a Senator persists in claiming his right, as the Senator from California has done, it seems to me the Chair has but one course to pursue, and that is to yield the floor to him under the positive rule of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from California claims the floor, no Senator having a right to speak twice on the same subject until other Senators have spoken, he is undoubtedly entitled to it under the rule.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I claim the floor, but I yield it in courtesy to the Senator from Connecticut, but shall claim it again.

Mr. DIXON. With the consent of the Senator from California, I desire to say a word or two further. The question has been raised here by the Senator from Massachusetts in his last remarks as to whether an officer holding a position has a right to his salary, or whether it is wholly dependent upon an appropriation by Congress. I wish to be understood as admitting that it is fully in the power of Congress to withhold the appropriation. Whether it is right to do so is another question; but the fact that Congress has the power to appropriate shows that Congress has the power to fail to appropriate. Nobody doubts that.

But Senators have seemed to be shocked because I stated that an officer holding an office, an office which was vested in him, was entitled to his compensation during the term of that office. If the Senator from Maine will pay me the compliment of listening to what I will read from the statutes I shall be very much obliged to him. I do not wish to dwell upon this question of Mr. Harvey's salary; I wish to vindicate my own position if I can do so. If I cannot do it I am willing to admit that I was wrong. If the Senator will look to the eighth section of the act of 1856 he will find this language:

"That no person appointed after this act shall take effect to any such office as is mentioned in the first, second, third, sixth, or seventh sections of this act."

That is, ministers resident, chargés, secretaries of legation, the ministers to Great Britain, France, Russia, Spain, and Austria; the very offices of which we are now speaking—

"Shall be entitled to compensation for his services therein except from the time when he shall reach his post and enter upon his official duties to the time when he shall cease to hold such office, and for such time as shall be actually and necessarily occupied in receiving his instructions."

He shall be paid from the time he takes the office up to the period when he ceases to hold the office. That is the express legislation on this subject.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is not as the Senator read it.

Mr. DIXON. I say that is the meaning. I am now giving the meaning. I was not professing to read it. The Senator must have known I was not professing to read it, because I had already read it and was giving a paraphrase of it. It was not, therefore, necessary for the Senator to caution the Senate against any deception being practiced by me on that subject. I had read the statute, and I was then paraphrasing it. I was giving its meaning. The statute says:

"That no person appointed after this act shall take effect to any such office as is mentioned in the first, second, third, sixth, or seventh sections of this act, shall be entitled to compensation for his services therein except from the time when he shall reach his post and enter upon his official duties, to the time when he shall cease to hold such office."

Now, I say when you take that in connection with the previous portion of the statute, that ambassadors, ministers, &c., "shall be entitled to compensation for their services, respectively, at the rates per annum herein-after specified," and it is then provided that they shall not receive it except from the period of the commencement to the end of their term, the fair intent and meaning of that is, that they shall be entitled to it during that period. That, I think, is clear. Why, sir, what is the marginal note? "During what period salaries to be payable." And then the section provides that they shall not be payable—

"Except from the time when he shall reach his post and enter upon his official duties, to the time when he shall cease to hold such office, and for such time as shall be actually and necessarily occupied in receiving his instructions, not to exceed thirty days, and in making the transit between the place of his residence when appointed, and his post of duty at the commencement and termination of the period of his official service, for which he shall in all cases"—

If the Senator had been patient he would have heard another expression—

"For which he shall in all cases be allowed and paid, except as hereinafter mentioned, and no person shall be deemed to hold any such office after his successor shall be appointed and actually enter upon the duties of his office at his post of duty, nor after his official residence at such post shall have terminated, if not so relieved."

Now, sir, there is an express law of the land providing that the officer shall receive his pay during the period for which he is appointed and while he holds the office, and no longer. If the Senator says that this law has been repealed, if that is the ground he takes, of course I should have no controversy with him on that subject. If the effect of the act of Congress last year is to repeal that law so far forth as the minister-resident at Portugal is concerned, then of course my argument falls to the ground. But what was the act of last year?

"And the compensation of the consul at Hankow is established at $3,000 annually, and no money shall be paid to the present minister-resident at Portugal out of any fund whatever on account of further services in his office."

That is the language. If it repeals the former act of 1856, then there is no law for his payment. If it does not repeal it, then the amount of it only is that the appropriation is withheld, and that the minister has still a right under the existing law of the land to the compensation which the law gave him.

Mr. McDUGALL. The law that gives the right to our representative at Portugal to receive a salary does not depend entirely upon the statute law. By authority of this Government we sent him abroad, gave him full authority to represent our Government in one of the States of Europe. There was both an express and an implied obligation that the Government of the United States would subsidize him abroad. The statute law furnishing the provision for his pay is only an adjunct to the obligations existing from the necessity of our being a Government and having relations to other Governments in the civilized world. The denial of the pay of the minister to Portugal is perhaps the grossest outrage that has been perpetrated during the existence of our Government since 1787. I do not know who he is. I take no interest in him except as I take interest in other persons who are in offices of the Government and citizens of the United States. I could not have conceived it possible ten years ago that we could have sent a minister abroad, regularly commissioned to represent us at a foreign Court, and while he was there, away from home, with the faith of the Government pledged by sending him there, deny him his supplies and attempt to starve him into submission to the rule of those who call themselves now a culminating majority. That this is cruelty is within the conception of any man. Perchance he may be a man of wealth, able to maintain himself abroad independent of what the Government is bound to concede to him. I trust he may be a man of wealth, able to maintain himself abroad independent of what is denied to him as a matter of right and as a matter of law; for it is a matter of right when we sent him abroad that he should be maintained abroad according to the laws that then existed.

I am pleased that the Committee on Finance of this body have chosen to place Portugal again in the list of missions. It should have been there last year. I am pleased that it has been done; but I am astonished at the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations denying (for he professes to understand all these questions of our relations abroad) to the minister to Portugal the compensation that may be necessary for his personal expenses, while he is still the minister of the United States, with the right to have his flag flying and to protect our citizens, and whose duty it is to maintain our interests at that Court. It seems to me like malice. I never was able to induce myself to the study of what malice meant; yet I have seen the word, and I have oftentimes felt on the outmost surfaces of my thought this thing of maliciousness. I cannot understand why or wherefore, except it be for malice, we can deny to one of our ministers abroad, whom we have sent abroad ourselves, and who represents our flag abroad, the means whereby he can maintain himself at a foreign Court. It is not for him; it is for our nation. Our honor is involved. He represents us there, and he has a right to maintain himself with proper respect and proper surroundings. This is understood by the Finance Committee in reporting this matter; but I do not understand how the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, who should know those things and understand them well, can undertake to have our flag dishonored at the Court of Portugal. I cannot understand why he, learned in languages, master of things abroad, acquainted with foreign States, will allow our representation at a Court yet important, once one of the first Courts of the world, to be degraded by not giving the proper concessions that belong to our representative by law and upon principle. We are a Government. We have our representatives at Copenhagen, at Stockholm, at Berlin, at Florence, and at the Courts of France and England. We subsidize them; that is, we give them such salary as the law permits, and deny it to the minister at Portugal. For what? For writing an unconsidered letter; that is all. I did not like the taste of that letter when I heard it read myself; it did not meet with my full approbation; but what of that? He said what he did think, and probably said what he felt. It was in the power of this Government to have withdrawn him from the Court of Portugal; but while remaining there it belongs to our own honor, it belongs to the dignity of our Government, to sustain him there until he is legally withdrawn.

I say these things for the purpose of expressing a sentiment, most particularly for the reason that I am filled with astonishment, and have been before filled with astonishment at the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, who is a minister of State so far as we are concerned, endeavoring to behold a man who is on the other side of the Atlantic, to deprive him of his means of subsistence, to deny him the rights he has upon principle and by law. The proposition, I affirm, is an outrage upon principle if Governments be maintained. If we send a minister to the Feejee Islands, among the cannibals, with a law to pay him, he would have a right to his pay. Upon what principle of right could you deny it? Upon the circumstance that he had written a letter here that the Senator from Massachusetts does not exactly approve? If legislation is thus to be conducted in this Republic we had better change our system and find new masters and another rule. Rather than be subjected to such accidents and such wrongs I would place myself in the hands of a dictator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask that it be reported.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was in line eleven, in the clause providing for the salaries of envoys extraordinary, ministers, and commissioners, after "Peru" to insert "Portugal."

Mr. JOHNSON. That I suppose is a mere appropriation for a mission to Portugal. It has nothing to do with the past. The question is, whether we will, or will not now have a mission to Portugal, and continue our friendly relations with that Government. I should suppose the Senate would have no objection, therefore, to that amendment. It does not affect Mr. Harvey, as I understand it, in any way. My own opinion in relation to the treatment which the Senate felt itself bound to extend toward Mr. Harvey has been already expressed. My own conviction is, that he ought to be paid the salary during the whole of the period that it has been denied him; but that is not a question, as I understand it, which is involved in this appropriation. The single proposition in the appropriation is whether we will or will not have friendly diplomatic relations with the Kingdom of Portugal, and looking to the past I can hardly imagine that there should be any ground of objection at all to coming to such a result as that.

Mr. WILSON called for the yeas and nays on the amendment, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 19, nays 14, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Hendricks, Johnson, Kirkwood, McDougall, Morgan, Poland, Riddle, Ross, Saulsbury, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, and Yates—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Fogg, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Howard, Howe, Morrill, Sumner, Trumbull, and Wilson—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Buckalew, Cattell, Cowan, Edmunds, Foster, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Lane, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Patterson, Pomroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, and Stewart—19.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was on page 4, line seventy-one, in the list of "consulates, schedule B," after "Kanagawa," to insert "Kingston, Jamaica."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 6, line one hundred and thirty, to strike out the word "commissioners" and to insert "ministers-resident;" so that the clause will read:

For salaries of ministers-resident and consular general to Hayti and Liberia, $11,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 7, line one hundred and forty-four, after the word "dollars" to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That when this sum shall be exhausted, no further expenditures shall be made or authorized.

So that the clause will read:

For expenses of the commission to run and mark the boundary line between the United States and the British Possessions bounding on Washington Territory, $28,070.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 7, after line one hundred and forty-six, to insert:

For defraying the expenses which may be incurred by dispatches over the Atlantic cable, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the amendments reported by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to offer an amendment on page 6, after line one hundred and fourteen to insert the following:

For salary of United States consul at Chemnitz, Saxony, $2,000, which consulate is hereby established.

I hold in my hand letters from the consul-general of Saxony, likewise the Saxon consul at New York, and from the Secretary of State, all recommending that this consulate be established. I will not trouble the Senate with reading them. The committee were unanimous in recommending it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The amendment does not state exactly when the salary is to begin, or anything about it.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no consul there now, and of course the salary would not commence until the consul was appointed and confirmed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suggest to the Senator, instead of the amendment that he proposes, that he insert "Chemnitz" in the list of consulates on page 4, and then add so much to the whole sum appropriated.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well; it is immaterial to me where it is put.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will ask the Senator why he puts the salary at $2,000. Is not that more than the other consuls receive?

Mr. CHANDLER. That is the amount recommended by the Secretary of State.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The salaries of the three new consulates we have established at Rome, Quebec, and Spezzia are fixed at $1,500.

Mr. CHANDLER. I know, but this is deemed to be the proper amount by the Department.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then the Clerk can insert "Chemnitz" after "Canton," in line sixty-seven, page 4, and after the word "Zurich," in line eighty-six, insert "and the salary of the consul at Chemnitz shall be $2,000 per annum;" and on page 5, lines one hundred and six and one hundred and seven the sum appropriated should be $431,000 instead of $429,000, adding $2,000 to the amount. That will make it right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan accept the amendment suggested by the Senator from Maine in lieu of his own proposition?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I offer the following amendment as an additional section to the bill:

And be it further enacted, That the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Spain shall be accredited as such to the Government of Portugal; and it shall be the duty of the said envoy to divide his time between the capitals of Spain and Portugal as the interests of the United States shall require; and for the additional duties and expenses imposed by this act said envoy shall receive an annual compensation of $5,000 in addition to his present salary; and the salary of the secretary of legation to Portugal shall be $2,500.

This makes the mission to Spain one of the highest-class missions. By uniting the two countries it adds to the standing and dignity of the Spanish mission and costs the Government no more. It adds $5,000 to the salary of the minister to Spain, and allows $2,500 for a secretary of legation. It settles this whole controversy about Mr. Harvey.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope this amendment will not be adopted. I do not think we have sufficient information on the subject. It seems to come from the honorable Senator from Massachusetts; I do not know on what grounds; I suppose on his own mere motion. We certainly cannot change the character of our missions without some more information than we have on this subject on a mere motion here. It may be that these missions could be united, but Spain has a minister here, and Portugal also has a minister here.

Mr. SUMNER. Not now.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is because the minister is dead and his successor has not yet been appointed. I do not know but that this might be done, but it ought to be done on consideration by a committee. I do not think the Senate is in a condition, on the motion of the Senator, to abolish the mission to one country and give a united mission to two countries to one individual. It may be all right; it may be done; or it may be not very proper or wise. My complaint about it is that we have not sufficient information on the subject. I suppose it is a contrivance to give our old friend who is minister to Spain some more salary. I know he has been calling for it very loudly; but with all our regard for him, I think it is hardly worth while—I do not remember what he gets now—

Mr. SUMNER. Twelve thousand dollars.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is hardly worth while to give him an additional mission and an additional secretary of legation, for he must have one in each place, and probably he would have no duties to perform in addition of any sort of consequence, and thus raise the mission in that way. I think the Senate would be acting hastily and unwisely on a mere motion of this sort to take a step that may be a step of consequence. I hope it will not be done. At any rate, a question of this character ought to be submitted to a committee who could inquire about it, get the necessary information on the subject, and decide understandingly.

Mr. FOGG. I hope this amendment will be adopted by the Senate, not as a favor to the present incumbent of the Spanish mission, but because I believe the principle to be right. Those two countries of Spain and Portugal occupy one peninsula, and the diplomatic business there is not large. My own impression is, and I believe that will ultimately be the impression of Congress when they have investigated the subject, that we should consolidate a great portion of our smaller missions, and I had intended to introduce a bill for that purpose. In Europe it is the most common thing in the world for missions to be thus united. For instance, the Spanish minister to Switzerland is also accredited to the King of Bavaria, to the King of Wurtemberg, to the Grand Duke of Baden, and I think one or two others of the German Powers. Brazil is represented in the same way. A great number of the ministers in Europe, at every Court or nearly every Court, except perhaps the first-class Courts, are thus accredited to different Courts. I do not think the ministers to Paris and London are ever accredited to any other place.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Spain is a first-class Power.

Mr. FOGG. Certainly it is. But take our small missions in South America. There is no reason in the world why one man should not represent us just as well at two or three Courts, where they are accessible, not far apart, as one man at each. It would be a great saving. It would be a great saving to us pecuniarily, and it would enable us to employ better men, men of more experience and more ability than the men we now have there. It is a very general complaint that our foreign ministers are not well paid. In some cases it is a just complaint; in some cases I do not think it is just. In some cases they are very well paid. But there should be a general reform of our diplomatic system. For instance, I would accredit one minister to Brussels and the Hague; I would accredit one minister to Stockholm and to Copenhagen; I would accredit one minister to Switzerland and to the same small Powers in Germany to which the Spanish minister is accredited.

I think there is great propriety in the proposition now presented to us. The present salary of the minister at Madrid is clearly not sufficient. He is paid $12,000. The cost of living at Madrid, for rents, for provisions, for servants, for carriages, for everything is higher than at almost any other Court in Europe. There is more ceremony there than at almost any other Court in Europe. A man is less able to control himself there. No gentleman of position can walk in the streets of Madrid, much less any lady; and no lady can ride in the streets of Madrid unless she rides with an old duenna. She cannot ride with her own father, and she cannot walk at all. It is therefore very expensive living in Madrid. But that is not the principal reason. The principal reason is that our diplomatic relations are not very extensive with either of these Powers, and one man can represent us at both Courts just as well as two can. I hope that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SUMNER. I take it that there is but one objection to the theory of the Senator from New Hampshire. He proposes to consolidate certain missions—the missions to Spain and Portugal, and then the missions to Brussels and the Hague. I say that I take it there is but one objection to that, and it is purely a political one. We shall not have the same number of offices then to bestow upon political aspirants. Public economy probably would be consulted by the idea of the Senator from New Hampshire, and I do not believe that the public interests would suffer. And now with that remark I am brought directly to the proposition before us.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will ask the Senator how much is saved in an economical point of view? We now pay our minister to Portugal $7,500.

Mr. FOGG. We do not pay him anything.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I mean ministers of that class. This amendment proposes to pay the minister to Spain $5,000 additional, with a secretary of legation at Portugal at $2,500. If the Senator can figure it out how much is saved by that operation I shall be glad to be informed.

Mr. SUMNER. My remark was general with regard to the principle of consolidation.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not see the economy of the thing at all.

Mr. SUMNER. Take for instance the case of the missions to Brussels and the Hague. Unless you increase the salary—and I do not suppose that was the intention of the Senator from New Hampshire when he made the suggestion—you would save a whole salary if those two missions were consolidated. However, it seems to me, whether there is a saving of salary or not, the only objection to it is the political one: you will not have the same number of offices for political aspirants. I do not doubt that in those places that have been named the public interests would be advanced at least as well by one as they now are by two ministers. I do not doubt that one representative of the United States can do all that is required both at Madrid and at Lisbon.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Can he do it better than two? The same amount of money is involved.

Mr. SUMNER. I am sure he can do it as well. Now I am brought to the proposition itself. It was introduced without any knowledge on my part that it was to be introduced. The Senator from Maine very properly says that it has not engaged the consideration of a committee. Agreed. We are left therefore to meet it as it is. We have got to vote upon it. I am to vote upon it. I wish that it had been introduced in such a way that it could have been considered by the appropriate committee. I should have liked, for myself, the opportunity of considering it in advance; but I am ready to vote on it with such light as I have. I see no practical objection to it. I see no way in which the public interests can suffer from its adoption; and I do see that it is a settlement of an unhappy controversy, where there has been contumacy on one side and an assertion of prerogative on the other. I think it would be for the advantage of the country to have that question settled, to have it eliminated from our debates, and, if I may so say, from our statutes. This proposition of my colleague would accomplish that purpose without any public detriment.

Mr. DIXON. I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, a question. I desire to know whether it is in the constitutional power of Congress to vest in the minister at Spain the duties of minister-resident at Portugal; whether he can be appointed to that office by act of Congress—for that is virtually the amount of this amendment. It seems to me there is a question whether he can be appointed a foreign minister to Portugal by act of Congress.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not doubt that it is in the power of Congress to declare that the envoy extraordinary at Madrid shall hold the same office at Lisbon also. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. As no money is to be saved by this proposition, I do not see why we may not as well have the services of two men as one? The same amount of money is involved. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 15, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Cragin, Creswell, Fogg, Fowler, Howard, Lane, Morrill, Poland, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Wilson, and Yates—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Conness, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foster, Harris, Hendricks, Kirkwood, McDougall, Morgan, Patterson, Riddle, Ross, Sherman, Van Winkle, Willey, and Williams—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cattell, Cowan, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Guthrie, Henderson, Howe, Johnson, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Sprague, and Stewart—17.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILSON. I now offer the same amendment, somewhat modified, reducing the sum to be allowed to the minister at Madrid for this service from $5,000 to $3,000, which will save $2,000. It is to insert as an additional section, the following:

And be it further enacted, That the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Spain, shall be accredited as such to the Government of Portugal; and it shall be the duty of the said envoy to divide his time between the capitals of Spain and Portugal, as the interests of the United States shall require; and for the additional duties and expenses imposed by this act, said envoy shall receive an annual compensation of $3,000 in addition to his present salary; and the salary of the secretary of legation to Portugal shall be $2,500.

This will increase the importance of the Spanish mission, make our minister there an important officer, and unite the two missions. Communication between them is perfectly easy, as easy as it is to go from here to Philadelphia, and is done in less time or about the same time. The amendment will save $2,000 a year, and will settle this controversy between the two Houses of Congress in regard to Mr. Harvey. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SUMNER called for the yeas and nays on the amendment, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 12, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Creswell, Fogg, Fowler, Howard, Lane, Morrill, Poland, Sumner, Wade, Wilson, and Yates—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foster, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Kirkwood, McDougall, Morgan, Patterson, Riddle, Ross, Sherman, Van Winkle, Willey, and Williams—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Cattell, Conness, Cowan, Cragin, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Guthrie, Howe, Johnson, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Sprague, Stewart, and Trumbull—20.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED RECESS.

Mr. WILSON obtained the floor.

Mr. FESSENDEN. With the permission of the Senator, I should like to move that at half past four o'clock the Senate take a recess until seven o'clock.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us go into executive session in the meanwhile.

Mr. WILSON. I yield for that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved that at half past four o'clock the Senate take a recess until seven o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

ASSAY OFFICES IN OREGON AND IDAHO.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope the Senator will give way for one moment, to enable me to call up a bill reported from the Committee on Finance, which will not occupy long. It is House bill No. 674, to establish additional offices for the assay of gold and silver, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio withdraw his motion?

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will simply allow me to take up the bill, I shall not then object to going into executive session.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw it for that purpose, with that understanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York, to take up the bill indicated by him.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. As the Senator's bill is now before the Senate, I renew the motion that we proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in the consideration of executive business, the doors were reopened at half past four o'clock, and the Senate took a recess until seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at seven o'clock p. m.

ASSAY OFFICES IN OREGON AND IDAHO.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The consideration of the bill which was before the Senate at the time of the recess will now be resumed.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 674) to establish additional offices for the assay of gold and silver, and for other purposes.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to establish assay offices of the United States, for the receipt and for the melting, assaying, and stamping of gold and silver at Portland, Oregon, and at Boise City, in the Territory of Idaho, and appropriates the sum of $50,000 for carrying its provisions into effect. For each of these assay offices, as soon as the public interest shall require their service, the President is to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one superintendent, one assayer, and one melter; and the superintendent is to employ as many clerks, subordinate workmen, and laborers, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, as may be required. The salaries of the officers and clerks are to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the recommendation of the Director of the Mint; and to the subordinate workmen and laborers such wages are to be paid as may be determined by the Superintendent of the Mint, and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; but such salaries and compensation are not to exceed that allowed for corresponding services under existing laws relating to the Mint of the United States and its branches.

The bill also repeals the act entitled "An act to establish a branch mint of the United States at Dalles City, in the State of Oregon," approved July 4, 1864. It further directs the Secretary of the Treasury to dispose of or remove the property, buildings, and machinery belonging to the United States and erected for the purposes of a branch mint at Charlotte, in North Carolina, and Dahlonega, in Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Committee on Finance have reported the bill with an amendment, which will be read.

Mr. CONNESS. Before the amendment is read I desire to ask the Senator who has this bill in charge why it does not make provision for an assay office in Montana Territory, where unquestionably it is of more importance to the public than even in Idaho, as the production of the former Territory is greater than that of the latter. I have been in communication with gentlemen from that Territory of the highest character, and I may say that I have much knowledge in regard to it, because it is populated largely by citizens of California, experienced miners of California. They are constantly in correspondence with myself. My attention has been called to the need of an assay office there, and I am a little astonished that this bill does not provide for it. I desire to know of the Senator from New York whether inquiries and investigations were made in that direction.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not understand that there ever has been any application for an assay office in Montana. This bill passed the House of Representatives at the last session. The committee have simply reported to strike out the ninth section, which is now unnecessary, as provision was made in the legislative appropriation bill last year for disposing of the public property at Charlotte, in the State of North Carolina, and at Dahlonega, in the State of Georgia. I have never before heard that there was any application for an assay office in Montana. It is competent for the Senator to move an amendment providing for Montana, if he insists upon it.

Mr. CONNESS. I can assure the Senator an assay office is even more needed in Montana than it is in Idaho, because Idaho has direct connection with Oregon and California. Boise City, in Idaho, is within four days' staging of Virginia City, in Nevada, which is within a few hours of California; while Montana is still further inland, and is inaccessible, except at enormous expense, to those who produce gold there. There is no doubt in the world but that an assay office at Helena, which is the central point and a considerable town in Montana, is a public necessity. I do not know exactly the form of amendment that would be necessary; but I will examine and see, while Senators are directing their attention to it.

Mr. WADE. There have been a great many applications for an assay office in Montana sent to the Committee on Territories; but we supposed it did not belong to us to initiate any such measure, and we directed those who came to us that the Finance Committee was the proper committee having that subject in charge; but, from all I have heard about it, it seemed to me to be as necessary that there should be an assay office there as in any other Territory. From all the facts that I can gather on the subject, I believe that Montana is the great mineral Territory of all our Territories; I think the richest of any. Probably more gold will be taken out of that Territory than any other. Its communication with other parts of the country is less facile than that of almost any other Territory. I am strongly inclined to the belief that if an office of this kind is to be established in Idaho, there are like or stronger reasons for the establishment of a similar office in Montana also. I am glad that the amendment is moved. I think there is a bill pending on the subject.

Mr. CONNESS. Let the committee's amendment be acted upon, and then I shall be ready to move the proper amendment.

Mr. WADE. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the Finance Committee, to strike out the ninth section of the bill, which will be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to dispose of or remove, wholly or in part, the property, buildings, and machinery belonging to the United States, and erected for the purposes of a branch mint at the town of Charlotte, in the State of North Carolina, and also the property, buildings, and machinery used for like purposes at Dahlonega, in the State of Georgia, upon such terms and conditions as he may deem advisable. And he may authorize the retention of such portion of said property, buildings, and machinery, at either of said places, as may be necessary for the purpose of assaying metals as provided by this act, if, in his judgment, such office or offices are necessary.

Mr. MORGAN. That is stricken out because a similar provision was inserted in the legislative appropriation bill last year. I have the law before me.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to amend the bill by inserting in section one, line six, after the word "Oregon" the words "at Helena, in Montana Territory;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to establish assay offices of the United States for the receipt and for the melting, assaying and stamping of gold and silver at Portland, Oregon, at Helena, in Montana Territory, and at Boise City, in the Territory of Idaho.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator from California really deems it necessary, as I suppose he does from the statement he has made here—

Mr. CONNESS. There is no doubt of it.

Mr. MORGAN. And if the Committee on Territories have had applications on this subject, and they also concur in the propriety of this amendment, I shall make no objection to it.

Mr. WADE. Perhaps I am misunderstood. I do not say that the Committee on Territories have acted on the subject. I say applications have frequently been made, and so far as we considered them we thought favorably of them; but we did not act definitely on the subject.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. I now move in section one, line seven, to strike out the word "fifty" and to insert "seventy-five;" so as to read:

And that the sum of $75,000 be appropriated for carrying the provisions of this section into effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move to amend the first section of the bill by inserting after the word "silver," in the sixth line, the words "at St. Louis, Missouri."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to know of the Senator what is the necessity for an assay office there.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was not aware that this bill was coming up, and have not had time to have any conversation with the committees on the subject; but for the last year I have been urged by the business men and merchants of St. Louis to have an assay office established there. I am not prepared at this moment to say how far the necessity for the establishment of an assay office there will be removed by the establishment of the office at Helena, in Montana, and Boise City, in Idaho; but I am prepared to say that for the last couple of years a very large quantity of gold has been brought to St. Louis, the gold as it is mined, and we have suffered very considerable inconvenience there in consequence of the want of some standard, some measure of the gold. I am inclined to think that an assay office ought to be established there. It is in the knowledge of Senators that we have now a line of packets, several lines, indeed, between St. Louis and Fort Benton, on the Missouri river; and the entire business of Montana Territory and a large portion of the business of Idaho is done at St. Louis; that is, the merchants lay in their stocks of goods, groceries, dry goods, &c., at St. Louis, and large payments are made in St. Louis. Heretofore those payments have been made in the mineral as it was mined. Large quantities are brought there and shipped down the Missouri on packets, and very great inconvenience has been sustained.

My attention has been called to this matter by many of our business men in St. Louis during the present winter; but owing to engagements of another sort I have neglected it, and really was not aware this bill was coming up at the present time. I had intended for the last two or three weeks to prepare a bill, and to offer it; but finding a bill now pending on this subject, I move the amendment; but at the same time that I do it I am not prepared to say how far the offices to be established under the bill will remove the necessity.

Mr. MORGAN. It seems to me that we ought to have some information before we act on this amendment. The Senator from Missouri will bear in mind that if the amendment be adopted it will not be discretionary with the Secretary of the Treasury to establish an assay office at St. Louis if there is a public necessity for it. By referring to the third and fourth lines of the bill he will see that the Secretary is "authorized and required" to establish assay offices at the places named; and it seems to me before we require him to establish an assay office at St. Louis the necessity for it should be shown.

Mr. HENDERSON. As to the necessity, I have stated all I know in reference to it. I cannot speak, and do not intend to speak, on my personal knowledge, because I never make statements here that I am not perfectly aware of. I can only state what the business men of St. Louis have written to me on the subject. The Merchants' Exchange there took action on the subject last winter and have also done so this winter, recommending and urging this proposition, and the papers of the city, I believe without exception, of all parties are urging it as an absolute necessity. However, if it is thought improper to urge it at this point of the bill, I will withdraw it and offer it as an independent section, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury, if he shall become satisfied of the necessity of it, to establish an assay office at St. Louis, so as not to require it to be done.

Mr. CONNESS. The necessity of an assay office at St. Louis is a subject upon which I would say nothing, for I know little; but I know that New Orleans is not far off, where assaying may be done. But what I rose to suggest to the Senator was this: that if an assay office should be required at St. Louis, become a necessity there, it would require quite a formidable institution, not such a one as is provided by this bill in the Territories, for they are of inconsiderable magnitude. What St. Louis would require, if it requires one at all, would be something corresponding to the institution at New York, and one that ought to have due inquiry and facts developed before it is attempted. I make that suggestion to the Senator because I have no doubt that is the case.

Mr. FESSENDEN. According to the Senator's own statement, the establishment of these assay offices in Oregon and Idaho, and especially in Montana, will do away with the necessity for one at St. Louis.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not prepared to say that that is not the case. Under the circumstances I will withdraw the amendment until I can get further information on the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri withdraws his amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Some days ago I presented to the Senate a joint resolution of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon protesting against the passage of this bill, notwithstanding it proposes to establish an assay office at Portland, in Oregon. Three years ago Congress passed a law establishing a branch mint in the State of Oregon and appropriating $100,000 for its construction, and since I have been here I have made diligent efforts to have that money expended according to the requirement of the law. It has not been done, and one reason and another has been assigned by the Secretary of the Treasury, the chief one being that there was no necessity for a branch mint in Oregon, assuming, as it seemed to me, by that decision to revise and correct the decision which Congress had made on the subject. My efforts in that direction have been wholly unavailing. During the last session a bill was introduced into the other branch of Congress by the Representative from Oregon to remove the branch mint from Dalles, where it was located by the original act, to Portland, where it ought to have been located in the first place; but the House, instead of adopting the bill which he proposed, passed the bill now before the Senate, repealing the law that established a branch mint in Oregon and substituting in place of it an assay office at Portland.

I presented to the Committee on Finance, who reported back this bill and recommended its passage, with such considerations as occurred to me to induce an unfavorable report and to maintain the law which establishes a branch mint in Oregon; but the committee were unanimously in favor of reporting this bill and repealing the law of 1864, and providing for an assay office at Portland. I do not propose under such circumstances, and I hardly suppose it is necessary, as the whole subject was at one time thoroughly discussed before the Senate, to go over the arguments that were then offered in favor of this branch mint which this bill proposes to repeal. I think there is quite as much necessity for a branch mint in Oregon, and it is not difficult to show, I think, that there is more necessity for a branch mint in Oregon than there is for one in Colorado or even in Nevada, because Portland is the point to which a very large proportion of the gold that is made in Idaho is brought. The commercial intercourse between Portland in Oregon and the Territory of Idaho is very intimate, and the business transactions are very large. Much of the dust that is obtained in Idaho is brought to Portland. If there was a branch mint there it would do a very large business, and I have no doubt would be of advantage to the Government and to the people of the country. But the amendment which has been proposed by the honorable Senator from California will probably produce the same effect upon this bill that a vote against it will in the Senate, so far as this session is concerned. I presume that the bill will be referred in the House to a committee to examine into the necessity of this amendment; and if it be so referred, of course it will not be reported back and passed at this session of Congress. I can only, under the instructions I have received from the Legislative Assembly of my State, protest against the passage of this bill. If it be the pleasure of the Senate to overrule my objections and to adopt the report of the committee, of course I shall be compelled to acquiesce, and so will the people of Oregon.

The bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 234) to incorporate the National Capital Insurance Company, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. E. C. INGERSOLL, of Illinois, Mr. ULYSSES MERCUR, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. J. W. CHANLER, of New York, managers at the same on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 347) to change certain collection districts in Maryland and Virginia;

A bill (S. No. 399) relative to collection districts in North Carolina;

A bill (S. No. 605) to amend the twenty-first section of an act entitled "An act further to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes," approved July 18, 1867; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 159) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the owner of the yacht Mayflower to change the name of the same to that of Silvie, and to issue an American register to the steam yacht Glance.

RECONSTRUCTION OF LOUISIANA.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, I gave notice that at the first opportunity I should move to proceed to the consideration of the Louisiana bill, but seeing how the Senate is—"Let us take it up now." Very well. I was going to move to take up one or two little bills before that; but I agree with Senators about me that everything else should be postponed for that. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House bill known as the Louisiana bill.

Mr. BUCKALEW. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

BUSINESS OF MILITARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. WILSON. Before the vote is taken on that subject I should like to make a motion to set apart to-morrow evening for the consideration of some ten or a dozen little bills from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BROWN. If you will give me half an hour for my committee I shall not object.

Mr. WILSON. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion can only be entertained by unanimous consent, there being another motion pending.

Mr. WILSON. I move that by common consent to-morrow evening be set apart for the consideration of certain bills from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BROWN. And the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will ask that Wednesday evening be set apart—

Mr. WILSON. That is set apart now.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Then that Thursday evening be assigned for the consideration of the bill pending between the House and the Senate in reference to Indian affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that Wednesday evening has been set apart for the consideration of the business of the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that the bill referred to by him, at least in my opinion, ought not to be considered at night. It should be considered in a full Senate. It is a very important question indeed as to what shall be done with Indian affairs. I hope the Senator will call up that bill in the daytime. I will vote with him to get a vote upon it.

Mr. McDUGALL. I desire to make a suggestion to the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER.] In his hot haste, I hope he may bring up the question of Louisiana. I do not care for long delay. I hope he may be able to bring it up and I will give him my support that it shall come on the tapis now.

Mr. WILSON. I should like to have the question put on my motion.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understood this morning that the Niagara ship-canal bill was to come up immediately after the passage of one or two appropriation bills that would take time. It has been understood that this was the next bill to be considered. I consider it as important as any other bill before us. I hope the Senate will not take up any other bill until this Niagara ship-canal bill is passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate, by unanimous consent, is the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. WILSON,] that to-morrow evening be assigned for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

RECONSTRUCTION OF LOUISIANA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] to proceed to the consideration of the Louisiana bill, and upon this question the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. SUMNER. Before the vote is taken I wish to say that I feel that it is the duty of the Senate to proceed with the consideration of that bill. I will not undertake to foretell the decision of the Senate upon it; but it should be considered. It is a bill of too much magnitude, and bearing too extensively upon the great interests of the country and on the chances of peace and security, to be postponed. We ought to consider it; and so far as I can exercise any influence here I must insist that the Senate shall proceed with that, and for a time put aside other business. My friend from Michigan knows very well that I am with him on his bill. I have always voted for it; but he, too, must be in favor of a just reconstruction in Louisiana. He knows how these poor people there are suffering at this moment for the want of such a system. I look to him to help to establish such a system. There ought to be no delay, no postponement.

Mr. McDUGALL. I am disposed to meet the demon at the threshold. If the Senator from Massachusetts desires to thrust upon us the consideration of the Louisiana question I would as soon meet it to-night as on any adjourned day. Let it be met, disposed of, determined for good or evil. There is a style about the gentleman who represents the extreme opinions on the other side that looks like—I will not denominate the word; it will be found in some good dictionary. If he desires the rencontre that is involved in that, the sooner the better. I would rather it should be determined this night or at this midnight or in the morning light of to-morrow than adjourn it to a subsequent day. I am willing to meet the question. I speak not for others, but only for myself. I am willing to meet it at the moment.

Mr. WILSON. I hope we shall take up this bill now for consideration. I was among those who thought we ought to take it up in preference to the military bill. I voted for the military government bill, but I should have preferred to take up the Louisiana bill and amend it so as to extend its provisions to all of these States. I think it would be a good thing to pass the Louisiana bill, amended in some respects, certainly in the fifth section so as to extend the suffrage. I think that we can take up the bill and amend it so as to make it equal and just, and pass it, and then we shall have the bill passed at the last session of the Senate, if it is supported by the House of Representatives, and we shall have this Louisiana bill going to the root of the matter; and these rebels who are in power will see that if they do not take the one they must come to the other. I think these rebels who are in power ought to be dispossessed of that power at the earliest possible moment. Sir, the great charge that the country has made against the President of the United States, the great wrong that he has done the country, is, that when we had conquered the rebellion; when, by his own confession, there was no authority in these States; when the rebels were all out of power; when these States were without civil governments; when they were completely under the government of the nation, he, without consulting Congress and without the authority of law, by his own will put these ten States into the hands of the traitors. Sir, I believe that the President, in doing that act, was guilty of as great a wrong against the country as General Grant would have been had he surrendered his army at Appomattox Court-House to General Lee after General Lee's army was driven out of Richmond. Had General Grant surrendered the Army of the Potomac on that field to General Lee's shattered army I do not think he would have done a greater wrong to the country than the President has done in putting these ten States back into the hands of traitors. The first duty we owe to the country, and it is a duty that has been too long neglected, is to remove these traitors from power in the rebel States. I do not raise the question whether they are States or Territories. These rebels have no right in power whether they are States or Territories. Offices held by rebels should be immediately vacated. Justice to loyal men, protection to life, liberty, and property, duty to the country, demand that rebels should vacate offices held by them.

I have this evening read a letter from the editor of the Savannah Republican. I will give his name, as objection was made by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. DAVIS] that we did not give the names of the writers of letters quoted there. I give the name of Mr. Hayes, the editor of the Savannah Republican. He was put in possession of the old Savannah Republican by General Sherman's positive order when General Sherman entered Savannah; Mr. Hayes came North, begged money, obtained subscriptions, bought new type, the old being nearly worthless, and went on with the paper; and the first thing he knows the old owner comes back with an autograph letter from the President demanding him to give it up, and not only claiming the paper, but the new type. Mr. Hayes, editing a loyal paper, and a paper that has supported the country, has just been tried for saying that Mr. Cohen, who has been elected to Congress in that district, and who was a postmaster when the war commenced, and turned over the assets of his office to the rebel government, was a defaulter; and for saying that Cohen was a defaulter he has just been tried before a rebel jury, under a rebel judge, and convicted of a libel. For saying that a postmaster who turned over the Government property to the rebellion was a defaulter to his country, he has been sent for one year to the common jail and fined $1,000. That is the justice that is meted out to loyal men in that part of the country.

Sir, these rebels have no right to be in office. They have no right to hold these offices. Here is a bill that dispossesses them in one State; a State where they had, I will not call it a riot, for it was made a massacre, where a large number of men were murdered without cause, and many others wounded without cause; a State where we have a strong, earnest, and devoted class of Union men. This bill proposes to try the experiment there. It turns these men out of power and provides that the President, with the consent of the Senate, shall appoint a provisional governor for that State. I think it will produce order there; that it will place men in power who, if not entirely loyal, are earnest men and will do justice. Then these rebels will see that if they do not conform to the requirements of the act passed at the last session of the Senate, if it shall become a law, they will be put out of power, Governors will be appointed and means taken to put the government into the hands of loyal men, where it ought to be; and then our military act will come to the support of a loyal Governor and loyal authority. The loyal Governor and loyal council will be supported by the military power of the country. They will be in harmony, and justice will come to all. By the present system the rebels are in power, and if the Army, clothed with the authority we have given in the bill passed yesterday, is able to mete out justice to Union men and to protect them, it must do it in conflict to the rebel authorities, who deny that justice. I want to try the experiment during the next few months in a State where we have a loyal Governor and where the rebels are out of power. I believe that if this Louisiana bill, modified so as to extend suffrage to the mass of the people in that State, can be passed and become a law, it will be of incalculable value to the cause of the Union, the cause of liberty, and the cause of justice in the country.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. With the permission of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER,] I desire to submit a motion in regard to the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill which passed the Senate this afternoon, in order to correct an error which inadvertently happened in that measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion can be entertained only by general consent, there being another motion before the Senate. Is there any objection?

Mr. GRIMES. I prefer that there shall be a motion to reconsider.

Mr. MORRILL. I make that motion with a view of submitting an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 904) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, was passed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move to amend the bill on page 4, line eighty-six, by inserting after the word "Quebec" the word "Munich," so as to transfer that consulate, which is in schedule B, the effect of which would be to take it out of the consularships with a salary of $1,000, and place it among those that are paid $1,500. I was instructed by the Committee on Commerce to move this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move further to amend the bill on page 5, line one hundred and seven, by adding $500 to the gross sum appropriated in that clause, so as to make it $429,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. In the thirty-second line of the first section I move to strike out the words "sixty-five" and to insert "thirty;" so that the clause will read:

For contingent expenses of foreign intercourse, $30,000.

Before the war the amount appropriated and the amount appropriated in 1860 for this purpose was $20,000. It was payable in gold, and it is payable in gold now. I propose to reduce it from $65,000 to a sum fifty per cent. more than we paid before the war, $30,000.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We reduced it last year somewhat.

Mr. GRIMES. It was $80,000. During the war it was necessary that an extra amount should be appropriated for this purpose. It may be that the condition of our diplomacy is such as to require more than was appropriated six years ago. In order to obviate any trouble that might arise from cutting it down to the amount that was thus allowed, I propose to allow fifty per cent. more than was allowed in 1860, namely, $30,000, as against $20,000 allowed at that time.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is, as the Senator says, that before the war there was only about twenty thousand dollars appropriated for this purpose. After the war had commenced it was increased to $80,000 from the necessity of the case, and afterward to $100,000. Last year $80,000 was asked for again, if I recollect aright, and the Committee on Finance struck it down to $50,000; but the State Department, on looking into it, stated that they could not get along with the necessary expenditures for contingent expenses with less than $65,000, and it was put at $65,000. I do not know but what we struck it down to $40,000 at first. I believe we did. I am not very sure of the accuracy of my recollection in that particular.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It was struck down in the Senate, and then raised I think afterward.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We reported a less sum from the Committee on Finance, and finally fixed it at $65,000 after consultation with the State Department, that being supposed to be the sum that was absolutely necessary. I do not know, I am not permitted to know, at least I have never made application to know, and I really do not know anything about the details of the expenditure of this fund for contingent expenses. I cannot tell, therefore, from my own observation, how much or how little is necessary. I was of opinion last year that the amount which we had been in the habit of appropriating for two or three years previous should be reduced. I am unable to say how much is needed for this purpose. I only know that we fixed it last year, after consultation had been had with the State Department, and the assurance given that $65,000 was requisite.

We have appropriated for something in the nature of contingent expenses at this session in one act the sum of $250,000 to the State Department, being satisfied that they needed it for a special purpose. How much of it has been used, or how much of it will be necessary for the particular purposes to which it was appropriated, I am unable to say. No communication has been had with the State Department on that subject. I presume it would not be used for any of the purposes covered by this particular appropriation. I am really unable to state anything about this matter. We are obliged to take many of these things on the faith of the Departments. I believe that money in the State Department has been very economically expended always. I think there has been no occasion for complaint in that particular.

Mr. GRIMES. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GRIMES. I have simply to say that this amendment will leave to the Secretary for this specific purpose fifty per cent. more than he had before the war. In addition to that, since this session of Congress convened, we have placed in his hands $250,000 beside. I think that ought to be ample for him to conduct the affairs of the Government in our foreign relations.

Mr. SUMNER. It does not belong to me to vindicate this appropriation. I have no instructions with regard to it from any quarter, neither from the committee I have the honor to represent here nor from any other person; and I have had no communication on the subject, but I have reason to believe that this was not inserted in the bill originally in the House, from which it came, without authority.

Mr. GRIMES. "Authority!"

Mr. SUMNER. Without authority, I say. I presume that the committee of the House had evidence before them as to the amount required. I thought it very possible also that the Finance Committee of the Senate might have had evidence; but the chairman of that committee tells us he has no particular information on the subject. I presume, therefore, that he like myself takes it on the authority of the House and of the House committee. I presume that the House committee would not report such a sum unless they had before them the data which would justify such an appropriation; and in the absence of any counter evidence, it seems to me it would be rash on our part to undertake to set their judgment aside. I certainly am no stickler for such an appropriation. I am very anxious to bring every Department of this Government to a just accountability, and I do not except the Department of State from that desire; but I have no evidence before me, and I see none before the Senate, that can justify us in interfering with this appropriation. If the Senator from Iowa has the evidence, let him produce it, as I understand he simply announces that there was a certain appropriation made before the war. Then he jumps to the conclusion argal no appropriation now should be made larger than that which was made before the war.

Mr. GRIMES. This is one half larger.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator says this is one half larger. That does not alter the case. The question is, whether the committee of the House when they introduced it into the appropriation bill had data to justify the appropriation to this extent. I know no reason to the contrary, and in the absence of any reason to the contrary the Senator from Iowa must excuse me if I cannot embark with him on his fearless speculation. I know he is a bold naval officer, but I do not see how we can venture to follow him now.

Mr. CONNESS. Foreign affairs as managed and carried on are very mysterious. Mystery seems to be a material part of the system. Certainly it may be said with truth that there are a great many who are uninitiated, and among those I think may be classed Senators now and hereafter. The honorable chairman of the Finance Committee says he had no figures and never had any, but he has no reason to believe but that the moneys have always been economically expended by the State Department. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs says he knows nothing about it at all, but draws upon his faith in the House committee and the authority referred to by which that committee was instructed. It seems, indeed, to me to be rather a queer proceeding and a loose handling of money. I incline to think that if we asked for an appropriation here for some great improvement or commercial advancement in connection with the Pacific States involving thirty or sixty thousand dollars, there would be a very close inquiry at once directed as to where the money was to go; what we were to get in return. And finally, in the process of investigation, the Senator from Iowa is challenged and asked to prove that the money is not well spent, and if he cannot prove a negative it is supposed he has lost the case.

Well, Mr. President, I am like all the other Senators: I know nothing about it. It does appear to me that committees ought to be able to enlighten us in regard to these things. Already it has been stated that a minister representing us at a foreign country, who was prohibited from payment by law, had received his compensation. It was guessed, as it must necessarily be if he did receive it, that that compensation came from a contingent fund connected with the State Department. I do not think that anything beyond what may be called the secret service money of the Government is beyond investigation. I know there is another contingent fund of $50,000, but as I have observed, there are no expenditures that are made by this Government in connection with its foreign affairs that are beyond investigation but those involved in what is called the secret service fund. As to all other expenditures we ought to know, and ought not to be called upon to prove a negative. I feel very much inclined in this state of the case to vote with the honorable Senator from Iowa.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know what evidence it is necessary to submit to the Senate in order to justify an appropriation of this kind. I believe that this bill proceeds upon the same ground as other appropriation bills. Whenever an estimate is made by a Department, that estimate is submitted to the committees, and, if it is a customary estimate, I believe it is the practice of the Committees on Finance to adopt the estimates that are submitted and report them to Congress, and it is most usual for the committees to be furnished with the evidence of the necessity of the appropriation, or to accompany the report with evidence to the body that there is a necessity for that appropriation.

Mr. CONNESS. I wish to ask the Senator whether these estimates are not itemized. I think they are always itemized.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think not. There are only certain estimates that are itemized; but where an estimate is made for the contingent expenses of any particular Department of the Government, or where it is desired by any department that a certain sum should be appropriated for a certain purpose, it is not customary to state the particular items for which the money is to be expended; and in a case of this description it would, I suppose, be impossible to submit any items, because the money is to be used as the emergencies of the Department may require. There are no specific purposes, as I understand, to which this money is to be applied, but it is a fund which is placed in the hands of the Secretary to use somewhat at his discretion, to promote the interests of the country; and this estimate, as it was submitted to the committee, was $65,000, and it was reduced by the committee last year. I do not know that there is any evidence, I do not know that any can be procured unless an application is made to the proper Department. I suppose the Secretary of State may be required at any time by resolution of Congress to show in what manner he expends the money placed at his disposal, and it would not be difficult for Congress to ascertain whether it is or is not properly expended. I think the objection which lies to this appropriation would lie to very many others, and it seems to me not tenable.

Mr. GRIMES. I am very much gratified to get the information that I do from the Senator from Oregon. I have never been able to succeed before in penetrating into the mysteries of the Finance Committee of the Senate and knowing what was the basis on which they acted in reporting for or against appropriations. I had fancied that when they reported an appropriation bill they knew specifically what the requirements of the Department were, and what the necessities of the case were that made the demand for each particular appropriation. It seems, however, from the statement of the Senator from Oregon, that the committee accept the estimates as final and complete upon their judgment, and that they report them to the Senate whatever they may be. When, however, we, who are the representatives of particular departments, propose an amendment upon any given bill, we are not only required by the Finance Committee to prove that the Department asks for the appropriation, but we have to go on and convince the judgment of the Finance Committee that the public interests require that that appropriation shall be made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask the Senator if that is true of the usual appropriations.

Mr. SUMNER. I think I must ask the Senator now to proceed—

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let us finish this bill.

Mr. SUMNER. This was taken up informally.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is up, and let us finish it.

Mr. SUMNER. I want to have the Louisiana bill taken up.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Wait till we get through with this.

Mr. GRIMES. Now, Mr. President, with regard to this particular appropriation, by a reference to the estimates of last year it will be observed that the State Department estimated for $80,000, which was the amount we had appropriated the year before. We cut the appropriation down to $65,000, and this year they do not estimate for $80,000, as they did last year; but they estimate for $65,000, precisely the same sum which we fixed here arbitrarily in the Senate as the proper amount they should have. Now, if we can cut it down to $30,000 this year, their estimate for this purpose next year will be $30,000, the amount we fix it at, neither more nor less. They will just take up the appropriation bill of the preceding year and direct a clerk to copy it off, specifying the amounts that were voted the year before. That seems to be their rule.

I think it is hardly fair that the Senator from Massachusetts should call on me to prove a negative to show that this money is not required. It is for the affirmative side to show that it is required. I show that in a like condition of the country, when we were at peace, $20,000 for this purpose was enough. It is therefore incumbent on them, I think, to show that in a like condition of the country a greater amount is required than was given them, and yet I am content to allow them fifty per cent. more than we gave them in 1860.

Mr. DAVIS. I believe I shall vote against the motion of my honorable friend from Iowa. I ordinarily have very great confidence in any proposition that he may make, and I usually have as much distrust of anything that is supported by the Senator from Massachusetts; but I really believe to-night those Senators somehow or other have swapped seats. I think the Senator from Iowa has got upon the wrong side, and by a very great chance the Senator from Massachusetts has got upon the right side.

But, in addition to that, I am a strong convert to the ability and vigilance and fidelity of the Secretary of State. It is true that I was a long time coming to any such faith and confidence as that; but for the last year or two the honorable Secretary has been behaving so very well in his office, with so much patriotism and with such a fidelity, not only to the duties of his place, but to the demands of the Constitution and of proper policy in the administration of the Government generally, that he has won very greatly indeed upon my feelings. I never doubted the ability of the Secretary of State. He proved that many years ago in his early manhood, when he was Governor of the great State of New York, and he assumed the heretical position that where a man was indicted as a criminal in one State and he fled to another State and was demanded in conformity to the Constitution by the Governor of the State from whence he fled he could not be surrendered to be tried upon an indictment in the State from whence he came unless the act which he was charged to have committed was an offense in the State to which he fled. I considered that a very dangerous position. I recollect when that principle was enunciated by the Governor, Mr. Granger, who was then a member of the House of Representatives from the State of New York, responded to it in about this way: "That is a very grave error, I conceive, of the Governor of my State, because it would operate against some of the great interests of the State of New York. She has a great canal, a great internal channel of commerce. In that canal are most magnificent and expensive locks. It is made a felony by the laws of New York for any man to destroy one of those locks. Now, according to the principle laid down by the Governor of New York, if a man who had committed the crime of blowing up the locks of the great Erie canal should become a fugitive from justice by betaking himself to the State of Kentucky, that State having no canals, consequently no canal locks, and consequently no laws making the destruction of a canal lock a felony, according to the principle enunciated by the Governor, if he himself was to demand this fugitive from the State of Kentucky, the Governor of that State would not surrender him to the justice of the laws and courts of New York, because the destruction of a canal lock was not a felony by the laws of Kentucky." But, Mr. President, that question has become among the things that were. Most States now have canals and canal locks, and they have made the destruction of those locks a felony punishable by confinement in the penitentiary.

This is rather a digression I admit from the matter that is under consideration; but I could not forbear to get up and express my full concurrence with the position and remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts, and however painful and unpleasant it is to me to dissent so essentially and distinctly from my honorable friend who represents the State of Iowa, I feel that I am constrained by a just consideration of the subject to give my vote with the generally heretical Senator from Massachusetts, and against the generally sound and correct statesman who represents in part the State of Iowa. I shall therefore vote against the motion of my honorable friend from Iowa.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I believe the appropriation last year for this object was reduced on my motion some $20,000. I have had no information since last session on this subject. It seems to me we are voting very much in the dark upon it. Our committees do not seem to have investigated it. The chairmen of the Committees on Foreign Relations and on Finance both avow their ignorance on the subject. I think under such circumstances it is rather perilous to reduce this appropriation, or at least to reduce it so largely as from sixty-five to thirty thousand dollars. I would not object very much to voting for some reduction—not so great however—trusting that the committee of conference, which of course will be held on this bill, will have more information than we have, and fix it about right. But as the Senator from Iowa moves to reduce it so very much I am constrained to vote against his particular proposition.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I will not in this instance, as I believe I have never done, vote against any appropriation which is deemed by the head of a Department necessary for properly carrying on the functions of that Department. But I cannot sit quietly in my seat and hear a eulogy pronounced by my friend from Kentucky upon the present Secretary of State of the United States. Sir, he "tinkled that little bell," and the people of the State that I represent suffered too much from his touching that little bell for me to remain quietly, silently in my seat when a eulogy is pronounced upon any such man. Sir, I regard him as the Mephistopheles of the age—a man who for twenty years had been preaching doctrines which led to the dissolution of the Federal Union. When an encomium, a eulogy is pronounced upon any such man as that, in sorrow and in sadness I rise in my place, while voting for the bill, to protest against the eulogy.

Sir, great complaints are made against Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, my present friend, as I am his. But what can he do? With William H. Seward on one hand and Edwin M. Stanton on the other, what could you expect any man to do? He has fulfilled, as far as he could, the office of patriotism, and discharged with patriotic fidelity every obligation that he owed to the Constitution of his country; but surrounded by such men he could do nothing more. Discarding them when he took his stand upon the platform of constitutional American liberty he would have commanded the respect of the civilized world. With them as his advisers he has done the best he could; but they are dragging him down to-night in the face of the civilized world, and trying to make a compromise with the Senate and House of Representatives. I hope he will regard the great behests of the Constitution, and by the eternal God, whom he adores, discard the counsels of such men—discard them from his Cabinet, get them out of his councils—and then the American people will rally to Andrew Johnson, as all the patriotic hearts now beat in unison with his purposes, his hopes, his objects.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I find, Mr. President, that at the last session I submitted a motion for reducing this item in the appropriation bill from $80,000 to $50,000. Subsequently, and after debate, on motion of the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. TRUMBULL,] the amount was fixed at $40,000. What was done subsequent to that in the committee of conference I am not aware. I believe the amount was increased. I should be willing now to vote to fix this sum at the amount which was settled in the Senate after debate last session—$40,000.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I had no expectation when I pronounced what my friend from Delaware called a eulogy on the Secretary of State, of bringing down upon myself, "like a thousand of brick," the torrent of his indignant eloquence. I know that my honorable friend has a Christian and magnanimous heart, and I ask him if he does not feel that there is a locus penitentiae for any man, even for the vilest political sinner? I conceded in my remarks that the Secretary of State, in his former life, according to my judgment, had been a very considerable political sinner, and that I dissented very essentially from his principles and practices; but since radicalism has assumed so malignant a type, and has become so powerful and so threatening of mischief and ruin to our constitutional form of Government and to the Union, I think the honorable Secretary of State has behaved very well, ably, patriotically, and that if this administration of his Department for the last eighteen months or two years could be measured by the principles of the Constitution it would be found to square essentially very well with them. Certainly the foreign relations of our Government, under his administration, have been managed with very signal tact, judgment, ability, and statesmanship. He has, with the skill of an experienced and able mariner, steered the ship of state from many a breaker and over the stormy waves on which it was threatened to be dashed to pieces. In respect to his general administration of the foreign relations of our country, I have no essential exception to make, but I have a great deal to admire and to approve; and I am deeply convinced that the country has received benefit and averted the dangers and horrors of foreign war by his skillful and statesmanlike administration of our foreign affairs. I believe that if there had been a less skillful pilot at the helm we should have been involved in war with two of the most formidable European Powers; and such a contest as that would have been disastrous, coming on at a time when the great civil war, the internal strife that had rent the confederacy almost in twain, and with earthquake force was uprising and heaving one half against the other, was so terrible and at the same time so doubtful that the wisest and most sagacious man could not foretell into which scale the victory would eventually fall. For the Secretary of State to have carried triumphantly, ably, with perfect preservation of the interests and honor of the nation, the ship of state through these dangers, I think was a signal service, for which he deserves the commendation, and if my friend please, the eulogy of every American patriot.

Now, in relation to his administration of his Department more immediately in connection with our own Government and the internal affairs of the country, that portion of it that transpired mostly under the inspiration of Mr. Lincoln, I admit did not receive my approval; but since the present President of the United States has been in office, and Mr. Seward has been his Premier, I do not now remember any essential point, any great question of policy, upon which I have materially dissented from the Secretary of State.

Well, Mr. President, when an American statesman who had wandered so far from the school in which I was educated in politics, who had maintained for so long a period principles to which I was utterly and irreconcilably opposed, which I believed unconstitutional and unjust to the people of a large number of the States and destructive of the harmony of these States and this people, has changed the tack upon which he was steering the ship of state and has brought it to these safe waters and soundings in which the honorable Secretary of State has been sailing that noble vessel the last two years, I cannot withhold my approbation from his administration within that time. I therefore pronounce upon it in very unqualified terms that approbation.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I did not intend to engage in any debate on this question; but as I entered the Senate Chamber I heard words of eulogy pronounced, and I could not remain silent under them. I have been provoked to this controversy by that eulogy. I always dislike in this body very much to say a word against a man who is not present to defend himself; but for years I served in this body with the present Secretary of State, and what did I hear? When great truths and soul-stirring thoughts were considered by the statesmen of America Mr. Seward was silent. When the fate of this nation hung upon him, when he had it in his power to save this Union, in this Senate he uttered unmeaning things in unmeaning words. Then I did not believe that he meant to save my country—to save it to me, to save it to my children, and to save it to posterity. He allowed the occasion to pass by. He had it in his power to save it. One blast from his bugle-horn would have averted this whole calamitous civil war in which we have been engaged and from the discussions of the great questions in which we have been involved. But, sir, no! Party was his law, not country. I now charge upon the Secretary of State distinctly that after the war commenced he summoned to his presence an ex-Governor of my State, who had been for some time sojourning in Europe, and commanded him—it was an invitation, but that Governor considered it as a command—to be and appear in the city of Washington, and then and there he demanded of him to sit as vice president at a Republican meeting of which a renegade Breckinridge Democrat was to be president, and he then and there told him that they had given to their friends in Maryland $200,000 to carry the election; and their friends in Delaware could have "aid" if they would do the same. Sir, I will not sit quietly in my seat and hear a eulogy pronounced upon such a man, who, as I said, is the Mephistopheles of the age, without uttering my solemn protest against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 16, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Conness, Cresswell, Fogg, Grimes, Howard, Howe, Lane, Morrill, Patterson, Ramsey, Ross, Stewart, Wade, and Wilson—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Hendricks, Johnson, Morgan, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sumner, Van Winkle, Willey, and Williams—15.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

TENURE OF OFFICE.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

Mr. SUMNER. The question now comes back on my motion to proceed with the consideration of the Louisiana bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was the question before the Senate which was laid aside informally.

Mr. SUMNER. And the yeas and nays were ordered on that motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to make a report from a committee of conference.

Mr. SUMNER. When the bill is taken up the Senator can make his report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It may be some time before the bill is taken up, and I wish to have the bill on which I desire to make a report enrolled so that it may go to the President.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I called for the yeas and nays on this motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I understand that it is the object of the Senator from Massachusetts to proceed with the consideration of the Louisiana bill this evening. He does not propose to take it up for the purpose of assigning some particular time to-morrow or at some other regular session; but he proposes, if his motion shall prevail, to go on with the consideration of the bill and act upon it finally this evening. Now, sir, I desire to submit some reasons why this bill ought not to be acted upon to-night; but I understand that the Senator from Oregon desires to make a report from a committee of conference; and, for the present, I will give way to him for that purpose.

Mr. SUMNER. Let the question be taken now on taking up the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask leave to make a report from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 453) regulating the tenure of certain civil offices.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be received and read.

Mr. SUMNER. I must object to that unless the Louisiana bill is laid by informally with the understanding that we shall proceed with it when this report is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report of a committee of conference, as the Chair understands, has always been a privileged question. Of course the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts is only laid aside informally while this report is being considered. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (S. No. 453) regulating the tenure of certain civil offices, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate agree to the first amendment of the House, with an amendment, as follows: at the end of section one of said bill insert the following words:

Provided, That the Secretaries of State, of the Treasury, of War, of the Navy, and of the Interior, the Postmaster General, and the Attorney General shall hold their offices respectively for and during the term of the President by whom they may have been appointed, and for one month thereafter, subject to removal by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the second amendment of the House and agree to the same.

GEORGE H. WILLIAMS,
JOHN SHERMAN,
ROBERT C. SCHENCK,
THOMAS WILLIAMS,
JAMES F. WILSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I found myself unable to agree with the majority of the committee of conference in recommending the particular arrangement which is reported. I am persuaded in my own mind that if the Senate should adhere to its position upon this bill the House of Representatives would eventually concede a concurrence with the Senate amendments. At this time of night, and with business pressing upon us, I shall of course decline entering upon an argument against the limitation proposed in the report of the committee upon the tenure of these particular officers. It is a novel proposition and deserves more consideration than it can receive at this time. It is an entire departure from anything which appears in the bill. We had no provision in the bill in regard to the tenure of these particular officers, and I think the committee strained a point in order to reach the conclusion at which they have arrived.

These officers from the foundation of the Government have held their offices at the pleasure of the President; they have been removable at will. Now, however, they are to have a duration assigned to their office similar to that which is assigned by the Constitution to the President himself. If appointed by an incoming Chief Executive they are to hold their offices for a period of four years, unless they shall be sooner removed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. And then, sir, they are to hold their offices for one calendar month after the term of the President has expired, and during all that interesting period in the history of a new Administration they are to have control of the several Executive Departments, and a new President coming into office is to be fettered with a former Cabinet for this whole period of time while he is making all the necessary arrangements for his Administration, and is to be precluded from calling the men he intends to select to his aid. I see no utility in an arrangement of this kind, no good to be accomplished by it, no reason why we should depart from past practice upon this subject. I am therefore indisposed to do it.

Now, sir, one other thought, and I shall leave the subject. The point upon which gentlemen of the House of Representatives proceeded on this particular subject of the tenure of office by the heads of Departments was that those officers should be considered as independent of the President of the United States; that they were not to be considered as his agents, as his officers, hardly as his assistants, in carrying on the business of that branch of the Government. All the time we have been told that these officers should be separated as far as possible from the President of the United States; that they should in their high offices act independent of him; that they should have no dependence upon him; that they should be, to sum it up in one word, independent, or as independent as possible. Now, the proposition which is submitted to us as a concession to the House is to tie these officers to the President; they are to continue in office as long as he does; they are to go along with him during his term, and then they are to vacate their office in thirty days afterward. Thus, sir, the reasoning upon which we were asked by the House of Representatives, or by gentlemen of that House, to proceed upon this particular point involved in the bill is utterly abandoned in the arrangement that is made. These appointments are to be connected with a particular President and to continue during his term, and their tenure to depend upon the existence of his; and they are to go out of office very nearly at the same time. The whole reasoning on which on this particular point we were asked to concede our disagreement to the House amendment is departed from entirely in the arrangement which has been made by the committee.

I might go on and point out other inconveniences besides those which I suggested before on this subject, but I will not do so. I will content myself with recording my vote against the report of the committee, assuring the Senate that my conviction is that if they reject this report an agreement can without particular difficulty be obtained in a different manner.

Mr. HOWARD. I should like to have the amendment of the committee of conference again reported, and I should like very much if some member of that committee would explain the effect of it briefly, so that we can all understand it. It is a very important provision, and ought not to be acted upon without a full understanding.

The Secretary again read the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think there is no difficulty in understanding this report, as it amounts to the adoption of the amendment proposed by the House of Representatives, with certain qualifications. It will be remembered that the House put the heads of Departments on the same footing with other civil officers, and provided that they should not at any time be removed without the advice and consent of the Senate. Objection was made to that, because it was said that when a new President came into office he might be compelled to have a Cabinet not of his own selection. This amendment provides that when the term of office of the President expires the offices of the members of the Cabinet shall also expire, with a provision that they may continue in office for one month, so as to enable the incoming President to arrange his new Cabinet. If it was provided that the members of the Cabinet should go out of office when the President went out the new President would be entirely without a Cabinet till he and the Senate could agree upon a new set of Cabinet ministers; but this enables him to have the advice and assistance of the old Cabinet till he can nominate and secure the appointment of a new Cabinet. The report of the committee is intended to put the heads of Departments upon the same footing with all the other officers named in the bill, with this exception, that their terms shall expire when the term of office of the President by whom they were appointed expires. That is the effect of the provision.

Mr. HOWARD. I think it an improvement upon the bill as it originally passed the Senate; but I wish to call the attention of the Senator to this point: the amendment of the committee of conference declares that the Cabinet officers shall hold their office for and during the term of the President, by whom they are appointed, and then proceeds to say that they shall hold over for one month after the expiration of that term. Of course their new successors cannot be appointed by the new President at the commencement of his term, and hence it would be impossible for the Cabinet officers to hold their offices strictly and literally during the term of the President. Is there not a little ambiguity in the language? May there not arise a controversy respecting the actual legal term during which they are authorized by this law to hold their offices? I merely throw out the query for an explanation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think not. They are to hold during the term of the President by whom they are appointed, and one month thereafter, so that to the term of the presidential office is added one month within which to enable the new President to arrange his new Cabinet. Of course it is to be presumed that the Senate will perform its duty; that when a new President during that month nominates his new Cabinet the Senate will confirm them; and as soon as the new Cabinet ministers are nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate, the old Cabinet ministers go out of office. They go out of office at any time when the President nominates new men and they are confirmed by the Senate. Thus the President is not bound, if the Senate sees proper so to agree, to have a Cabinet minister any longer than when he desires; but when he undertakes to remove a Cabinet officer the Senate must consent to that removal.

I will add that I have from the beginning of this controversy regarded this as quite an immaterial matter, notwithstanding the fact that the two Houses have been very tenacious in the respective positions they have taken, for I have no doubt that any Cabinet minister who has a particle of self-respect—and we can hardly suppose that any man would occupy so responsible an office without having that feeling—would decline to remain in the Cabinet after the President had signified to him that his presence was no longer needed. As a matter of course the effect of this provision will amount to very little one way or the other; for I presume that whenever the President sees proper to rid himself of an offensive or disagreeable Cabinet minister he will only have to signify that desire and the minister will retire and a new appointment be made; but it was considered by the committee of conference that this report was in accordance with the spirit of the bill, and the only one upon which we could agree. So far as I was concerned, I would rather have receded entirely from the position taken by the Senate than to have lost this bill, for I consider the bill of very great value and I am very anxious to see it pass.

Mr. HOWARD. I have no doubt that the practical interpretation of the bill will be such as the honorable Senator from Oregon has suggested, and I shall vote for this amendment with a great deal of pleasure, and I hope the Senate will concur in it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I agreed to the report of the conference committee with a good deal of reluctance. The Senate had by two deliberate votes declared its purpose not to make the duration of the Cabinet officers fixed by any time, but that they should hold their offices at the pleasure of the President; and that was the original design in the creation of their offices; but the general purpose of this bill is so very important, it establishes so salutary a reform, that I thought it ought not to be endangered by a dispute on a collateral question. The House conferees and the House by two votes were very tenacious upon the subject, and there seemed to be a probability that the bill would be lost upon a question that was collateral and unimportant. I take it that no case can arise or is likely to arise where a Cabinet minister will attempt to hold on to his office after his chief desires his removal. I can scarcely conceive of such a case. I think that no gentleman, no man with any sense of honor, would hold a position as a Cabinet officer after his chief desired his removal, and therefore the slightest intimation on the part of the President would always secure the resignation of a Cabinet officer. For this reason I do not wish to jeopard this bill by an unimportant and collateral question.

The proposition now submitted by the conference committee is that a Cabinet minister shall hold his office during the life or the term of the President who appointed him. If the President dies the Cabinet goes out; if the President is removed for cause by impeachment the Cabinet goes out; at the expiration of the term of the President's office the Cabinet goes out; so that the Government will not be embarrassed by an attempt by a Cabinet officer to hold on to his office despite the wish of the President or a change in the Presidency. The great danger that might have arisen from the bill as it stood amended by the House is relieved by this amendment, and I think it is much better for us to agree to this modification rather than endanger the passage of the bill. I therefore signed the report of the conference committee, though with some reluctance. I think, under the circumstances, the Senate had better agree to it. If it shall be found to work badly at any time it will be very easy by a law or joint resolution to change it.

Mr. FOGG. I should like to ask the Senator one question. Suppose the President should die during the session of the Senate, would the Cabinet still go out without their successors being nominated to the Senate and confirmed?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Cabinet would continue for one month to enable the new President to arrange a Cabinet.

Mr. FOGG. But would they go out at the end of that month, though the Senate was in session?

Mr. SHERMAN. The appointment of a new Cabinet might be made immediately, and they would take their offices at the end of the month. I think the provision is a very wise one.

Mr. FOGG. The question which I wished to ask and have answered is whether at the end of that month the Cabinet must go out though the Senate were in session? Would that Cabinet go out till the new Cabinet had been confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, yes. The confirmation may precede the commencement of the office. It is very often the case that a nomination is confirmed where the office does not commence for a month or two afterward. An appointment may now be made for an office to take effect the 1st of July next. There is no practical difficulty in that respect.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I shall not vote for this report. I do not think the committee were justified in presenting it. Two votes of the Senate decided that it was not the pleasure of the Senate to have this provision in the bill. I think they were emphatic votes on the part of this body. The result of the conference is simply that two or three gentlemen legislate contrary to the will of the Senate. I do not myself believe that this is such an important bill as that we should pass it with the most important feature in it perhaps contrary to the will of the Senate. That is the result of it. The Senate has said twice that this is a disagreeable feature of the bill. Now we yield that in regard to the officers next to the President and make them independent of his will. Senators say that of course members of the Cabinet will not remain if it be the pleasure of the President that they should resign. There are two objections to that excuse for this legislation. The first is that this seems to establish a new proposition, and a mean person getting into the Cabinet would say, if the President desired him to leave, "Congress has said I may stay; therefore I will stay." The very person who ought to be turned out is the very person who will stay in. A gentleman of course would not, but a man who would have purposes to accomplish independent of the good of the country would stay. He is the very person that would.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask the honorable Senator if the Senate would not consent to the removal of such a man?

Mr. HENDRICKS. That would depend on circumstances; it is a question of doubt. I am not prepared to say. I have a great respect for this body, but I am not prepared to answer the question in the affirmative. But suppose the Senate would, can the President of the United States bring before the Senate all the considerations that make it disagreeable for one of his Cabinet ministers to remain? I think there is a radical evil in this bill. It is that removals cannot be made from important offices except with the consent of the Senate for cause stated and shown. Each one of us knows that officers oftentimes prove themselves unfit for the office, and yet you cannot prove it against them. You are frequently more satisfied that a man ought to be turned out against whom you cannot bring a case by proof showing the fact than a man against whom the proof may be stronger. You know it by his manner, the way he conducts the business, his disagreeable style toward the people with whom he has to transact business for the Government. A great many things may satisfy the President or a head of a Department that for the good of the country a man ought to be turned out, and yet where a case against him could not be made before the Senate.

I think the whole bill is vicious, and I will not vote for this report of the conference committee. I do not much like this way of legislating through committees of conference; there is too much of it. I do not choose to discuss that on this occasion. I say this report will keep in a Cabinet the very man who ought to be out. A decent man, a gentleman would not wait till he was turned out; but a dirty fellow who had no respect for himself or the high office would hold on under this bill.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, in my opinion it is wrong on the part of Congress to attempt to prevent the President of the United States from having the choice of his own Secretaries, who are substantially his clerks in a confidential relation to him in the administration of affairs, who are to meet with him daily and weekly in consultation, whose personal relations with him as a matter of course should be of such a kind that the President could consult with them in daily intercourse, and for whose removal a President might not be able to give any particular cause. We know that in the course of the Administration of the late lamented Mr. Lincoln a crisis arose when it was found by him necessary for the proper administration of the public affairs that certain gentlemen of his Cabinet should go out. It was not that those gentlemen were not men of great ability; it was not that those gentlemen did not agree with him upon the great questions of policy; but we know that particular relations arose between the President and certain members of his Cabinet, so that it became incompatible with the relations which were necessarily imposed upon gentlemen holding such a position that they should continue to go on together, and the President could assign no other or better reason perhaps why a member of his Cabinet should go out.

But, sir, without going into that, I desire to look into this most marvelous production of this committee of conference, which has utterly failed to accomplish the very thing which they design by the terms of the bill and the language which is used. I suppose it is aimed at the present head of the executive department, to bind him to keep certain members of his Cabinet, for it was openly avowed in the discussion of this bill when it was up before that it would be intolerable to allow the present Executive Magistrate to have the power of removal over certain members of the Cabinet, mentioned by name. Now, this project does not reach those members at all. The terms of this provision are:

That the Secretaries of State, of the Treasury, of War, of the Navy, and of the Interior, the Postmaster General, and the Attorney General, shall hold their offices respectively for and during the term of the President by whom they may have been appointed, and for one month longer.

Now, let us look at the facts. The Secretary of War was appointed by Mr. Lincoln during his first term; he never has been appointed since; he has never received any appointment since. Mr. Lincoln gave him no appointment during his second term, but he held over. Mr. Johnson has given him no appointment, but he has held over. So of the Secretary of the Navy, and so of the Secretary of State. The Secretary of the Interior, to be sure, and the Postmaster General and the Attorney General have been appointed by Mr. Johnson since the presidential office devolved on him; and by the terms of this law the Secretary of the Interior, the Postmaster General, and the Attorney General must remain during Mr. Johnson's term; but the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy, according to the terms of this provision, may be removed by him to-morrow.

I am a little surprised at this proposition. It is a perfect abandonment of the principle upon which the Senate stood in voting twice that, although they would not allow the removal of other officers in the Government without the consent of the Senate, yet as to members of the Cabinet, from their confidential relation to the President, from their being his Secretaries, with whom he must hold daily constant intercourse, Congress should not undertake to proceed so far as to take from the President his power of removal over them. It is substantially an encroachment to that extent upon the power of the Executive as I deem the whole bill to be an encroachment upon the powers of the Executive as they have been established by the uniform construction of the Government from the beginning of its organization down to the present time. I admit that as an original question, had it been submitted to me, looking alone to the language of the Constitution, I might not have given the same construction which was originally given; but that construction having been given by the men who made the Constitution, and having been continued for seventy years, it seems to me if anything can be settled by construction this question has been already settled. But I do not propose to go into that; I simply call the attention of the Senate to the principle upon which they stood.

This attempt to legislate for personal reasons, because there is a personal feeling toward a particular individual who may hold an office, always misleads. The time may come when some of my friends around me here may be President themselves, and they may want to choose their own Cabinet, but they may find a Senate politically opposed to them. Then, under this bill, a Senate politically opposed to the incoming President would have it in their power to compel him to keep in his Cabinet his political opponents. I say it is an outrage upon the Constitution to propose a thing of that sort.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator has not given the correct construction of the amendment. They go out with the President, but may continue for one month afterward; and that provision is to enable a new President to have time to form his Cabinet, so that the President when he commences his duties on the 4th of March, shall not be entirely without a Cabinet, but shall have the old Cabinet till he appoints new Cabinet ministers. When he makes an appointment, the Senate, of course, will consent.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It forces him to keep them for a month.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It does not force him to do any such thing.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. He cannot turn them out without the consent of the Senate, and the Senate may be politically opposed to him. Again, take the case of a President and Vice President elected together and the President, as in the case of General Harrison, dies at the end of one month, and the Vice President becomes President: he cannot change that Cabinet; he cannot choose a Cabinet of his own without the consent of the Senate. I think this is suffering ourselves, in the heat of this excitement and feeling, to do injustice to ourselves and injustice to the Departments of the Government. The Senate ought not to yield; it ought to stand by the principle which was adopted in the first bill; certainly not go beyond it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not understand the logic of the Senator from Wisconsin. He first attributes a purpose to the committee of conference which I say is not true. I say that the Senate have not legislated with a view to any persons or to any President, and therefore he commences by asserting what is not true. We do not legislate in order to keep in the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, or the Secretary of State.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I referred not to the committee of conference, but I referred to the debate on the original bill when it was pending, in which debate it was openly stated by some friends of this restriction on the President's power over the Secretaries that it was not to be tolerated that the present Chief Magistrate should have the power to remove the Secretary of War by name.

Mr. SHERMAN. Some Senator may have had that purpose.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I heard it in debate; I speak not of what may have been the views of individual Senators not expressed on the floor of the Senate. I allude to what was openly stated in debate.

Mr. SHERMAN. That the Senate had no such purpose is shown by its vote twice to make this exception. That this provision does not apply to the present case is shown by the fact that its language is so framed as not to apply to the present President. The Senator shows that himself, and argues truly that it would not prevent the present President from removing the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of State. And if I supposed that either of these gentlemen was so wanting in manhood, in honor, as to hold his place after the politest intimation by the President of the United States that his services were no longer needed, I certainly, as a Senator, would consent to his removal at any time, and so would we all.

But this is the position of affairs: the Congress of the United States now intend to assert the power of the Senate to prevent removals from office. We have seen within the last year the spectacle of the whole revenue service upturned. Why? To reward partisans to betray a party. That was the purpose; everybody knows it. Last fall certain executive officers entered the shambles and removed by wholesale persons appointed to collect revenue, the most unpolitical office in the world, for the purpose of controlling the elections of members of Congress, thus deranging our financial system. The evil of this course became so palpable that men of all parties desired some change. When we came to examine the Constitution of the United States we found that the framers of the Government contemplated a control over the power of removal; that the true construction of the Constitution required that the Senate shall take part in the removal of an officer as well as in his appointment; and we now by law assert the principle that the President of the United States shall not, without the assent of the Senate, remove an officer appointed with the consent of the Senate, except in certain cases. The correctness of that principle the Senator himself concedes, for he says that if he looked to the Constitution alone he would say that was right, but he thinks a different construction has prevailed. The whole history of that construction has been debated in the Senate; and we now propose to go back to the true interpretation of the Constitution, and say that the power of removal ought not to exist in any man unless it is restrained by the power of the Senate. That is the true constitutional rule.

In framing this bill the committee who drafted it said there were certain offices which ought to be excepted from this rule. The committee declared that this rule should apply to all the officers of the Government except the Cabinet ministers. I think the Cabinet ministers ought to be within the power of the President. I do not think any Cabinet minister should hold his office against the wish of the President. I think the President's power over the Cabinet should be ample, sole, and exclusive. But the House of Representatives are of a different opinion; they say this exception is not founded on a good reason: they approve of the general principle of the bill, but not of the exception: and they ask us to modify the exception. Here is a case of disagreement between the two Houses. A committee of conference is appointed. Must we, according to the idea of the Senator from Indiana, stand by the action of the Senate? If so, there is the end of the bill: there is the end of all agreement. A committee of conference is appointed for the purpose of enabling the positions of the two Houses to be, if possible, brought in harmony, and to present the question again before each House with a view to a compromise or an adjustment. Very rarely on committees of conference does one House abandon its position and the other House triumph entirely: there is usually an adjustment on a reasonable basis. In this case the committee of conference—I agreed to it, I confess, with some reluctance—came to the conclusion to qualify to some extent the power of removal over a Cabinet minister. We provide that a Cabinet minister shall hold his office, not for a fixed term, not until the Senate shall consent to his removal, but as long as the power that appoints him holds office. If the principal office is vacated the Cabinet minister goes out. The reason why the provision was made for his continuance one month beyond that time was to enable the new President to arrange his Cabinet. Perhaps one month is longer than is necessary; but I take it that practically there will be no difficulty, because when a new President comes in upon his suggestion the old Cabinet will retire, and the field will then be clear.

It seems to me, on the whole, that the adjustment is a reasonable and fair one, no departure from principle, but simply a modification of the exception which the Senate deemed to be wise.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I took as much interest perhaps in the discussion of this question when it was before the Senate as any one member, and it is therefore proper, perhaps, that I should say now that I will vote to adopt this report of the committee of conference, though I do not like it. I liked the proposition of the House of Representatives, and I wished the Senate to agree to that, but the Senate declined to do so. I am induced to agree to this report, not because it secures any practical good beyond the mere assertion of a sound constitutional principle. During the last session of this Congress both Houses were vehemently importuned to take from the President of the United States this power of removal, which it was said then, and has been repeated again during the pendency of this bill, existed in him by virtue of statutes and not by virtue of the Constitution. Both Houses obstinately refused to take the power away from him; and I desire to say now, by way of reminder, to the Senator from Ohio, that it was because of that obstinate refusal to legislate at the last session, instead of the present session, that these great revolutionary upturnings to which he has alluded have taken place in the country, and that you have seen the whole revenue service of the country demoralized.

When it seemed to be conceded by the great majority in both Houses that that power did vest in the President by reason of statutory enactments and not by virtue of anything in the Constitution, I asked the attention of the Senate to the fact that his power over a Cabinet officer—I called him so because others called him so, but it is a term not known to the Constitution, and, so far as I know, not known to law—was derived from precisely the same source that his power over a postmaster was, and when we saw fit to take from him the power to remove a postmaster I thought for the same reason we should take from him the power to remove any officer. Others thought we had better make an exception of these officers, and that opinion prevailed in the Senate. I regretted it profoundly. I regretted then and I regret now to hear these declarations that the President ought to have ample plenary control over these Secretaries. I insist upon it that the Constitution never designed it; I insist upon it that whatever statute confers it does a wrong to the public service; and I dissent for myself altogether to the proposition submitted by the Senator from Indiana, and which I understand the Senator from Ohio substantially to agree to, that the head of an executive Department who should remain in office after receiving from the President the slightest intimation that his services were not acceptable, would deserve to be expelled from his office. I hold that when the head of an executive Department is placed there by the joint action of the President and the Senate, if he shall presume to leave that post of public duty at the intimation or at the command of the President, unless by statute you clothe the President with the power to issue such command, deserts the posts of duty and is derelict to his duty or is amenable to public censure, and he ought to be held up to public censure. That is my judgment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. JOHNSON. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Before the vote is taken I wish to say one additional word, which, I think, I ought to say because of what has been said by the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Wisconsin. I think some questions of fact ought to be regarded as settled at some time. A month ago I was not surprised that Senators should speak about the entire official service of the country having been changed during the last year; but now, when the facts are known to the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Wisconsin, I am surprised at the general terms which they use.

Mr. SHERMAN. I spoke of the revenue service.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Out of two thousand four hundred and fifty presidential appointments I believe the present Chief Magistrate has changed four hundred and forty; and the Senator from Wisconsin speaks of that as a revolution, and thinks he is justified upon the facts in thus speaking of it. In regard to the statement of the Senator from Ohio touching the revenue service, my observation is that there has been no demoralization of that service. The information I have upon the subject is that the gentlemen who have been appointed during the last year, in some instances at least, have by their care and diligence added largely to the revenue. I think I could name two districts in the State of Indiana in which that is the case, where, because of care and diligence, thousands were added to the revenue in each of those districts. I do not admit that the persons who were appointed during the last year were at all inferior in fidelity or capacity as public officers to the men they succeeded.

Mr. SHERMAN. I said that the whole internal revenue system was disturbed, the whole machinery of a system that yields us $311,000,000. I cannot now recall a single collector or assessor in the State of Ohio that did not change his politics who was not removed; and so it was in the State so ably represented by the two Senators from Indiana, because I have passed on a great many of these nominations for assessor and collector.

Mr. HENDRICKS. You are mistaken as to Indiana.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know it was the case in Michigan, also, and generally throughout all the western and middle States: nearly every assessor and collector who did not conform to a certain line of policy was removed. I think it must have been so in Indiana to a great extent.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I should think now, without counting them, about half the officers there were changed.

Mr. LANE. I should think a much larger proportion than that. With the exception of the tenth district, I do not know a single district where either the assessor or collector has not been removed, and generally both. In the tenth district I believe there have been no removals: that is Mr. McCulloch's district.

Mr. HENDRICKS. In the first, second, and fourth districts but one officer has been removed in each; so in the eighth; in the tenth both remain. So I might go over the list; but I will not go into that sort of examination. What I wanted to say in reply to the Senator from Ohio was that there was no demoralization of the service so far as my observation had extended.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will ask the Senator if he knows of any assessor or collector who has not been removed who openly supported the policy of Congress. Did not those who have been left in office silently acquiesce in or support the policy of the President? Have not all the assessors and collectors, so far as his knowledge extends, who openly advocated and voted for the policy of Congress been removed?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I dislike to speak in the Senate upon a question that I do not have personal knowledge about; I like to speak rather accurately here. My opinion had been that the gentlemen who were left in office in the State of myself and my worthy colleague who were not removed were supporters of Congress, as it is called. I know nothing to the contrary. I never heard of their taking any ground in support of the President, at least several of them. That has been my impression. I do not have much information about them, for, to tell the truth, I have not run that question down with a great deal of zeal.

Mr. HOWE. Since we are posting accounts, I think it proper to remark on the experience of Wisconsin during the late recess of Congress. There are six congressional districts in that State. In the first district both the assessor and collector were removed; in the second district both the collector and assessor were removed; in the third district the assessor was removed; the collector was not; in the fourth district both the assessor and collector were removed; in the fifth district both the assessor and collector were removed; in the sixth district only one of those officers was removed. Out of twelve revenue officers ten have fallen. Two yet live.

Mr. SHERMAN. What are their politics?

Mr. HOWE. Extremely doubtful. [Laughter.]

Mr. McDUGALL. It is about time to inquire what was meant by the term "President of the United States." It was thought when he was clothed with office that he should stand as the Chief Executive, having the responsibilities of the administration of the executive functions in himself in the first place, and through those whom he should appoint. It was thought in the organization of this Republic that it was necessary that there should be such a person to make our institutions harmonious and to make them effective. These are the first days when it has been undertaken to make him who is constitutionally and by right the Chief Executive of the nation, a man shorn of authority, a mere puppet, not even with the authority of the Queen of England, not with any authority, except the privilege of the action of the day and the right to live in the Executive Mansion.

This may be well if our institutions are to be upturned from their foundations until there shall be a perfect demolition of the past and of the ideas of the past, and some of the wise and able men, the large thinkers, the great constructors of the day, shall build up for us new institutions, better, nobler, deeper founded, more broadly founded, and better constructed than the foundations of 1787. Sir, the pride that aims at such attempts is a pride that must have its fall, and fall it will.

It may be that Senators and Representatives do not think that the present Executive is exercising his legitimate and constitutional power in the most discreet manner; and for the temporary evil of the hour they propose to strike at institutions, at systems, and overturn what was intended to be established as law resting upon great principles. The Executive of the United States has his functions, just as the House of Representatives, just as the Senate of the United States, just as the judiciary, each in its place to be maintained. It is a strange and wild thought, it seems to me, and bold as well, that the Chief Executive, authorized to have his counselors about him appointed by himself, for his own advice, for his own service, should not have the privilege of selecting them; that his Secretaries as they are denominated in the Constitution, should not be his Secretaries, but the Secretaries of the popular voice or of Congress, not advisers selected by himself to give him information on questions of public law, or of foreign relations, or of the condition of our Navy, of the condition of our Army, or of our internal relations, not persons whom he can call upon to advise him, but men who are thrust upon him, or forced upon him, or held upon him without or against his consent.

If this policy be inaugurated absolutely, then farewell to the systems established by those who, having studied all histories, undertook to found the Republic of the United States of North America. It is a simple task, and the task of the barbarian, to pull down and destroy an edifice both strong and beautiful. I see nothing here of building up, of edifying, constructing, or beautifying anything. The tendency now is to tear down institutions that have gone through three generations, which have been admired by the civilized world until they commanded their respect, and do to-day, except as now we are beginning to lose their respect, because they begin to think that after all the American people, who have been a nation in the past, are incapable of conducting a Government when they see that that people appear to imagine that all power can rest in one. The Senate wants to usurp the President's office, and Congress wants to usurp all the powers of the Government and the judicial office; and that is the patent proposition of the majority here.

I do not fear that it will triumph; if I did, I should lose all hope for my country. I know that there is a latent, and will soon be a potent power in the American people, understanding the truths that belong to our system, that will not permit to remain in force these dogmas of the anarchists who seek disorder instead of order, or who never knew what order was. Who would be so low as to be the Chief Executive of this Republic, if caged, cribbed, confined, circumscribed, as this report would make the President of the United States, President in name? He should be no kin of mine—a man shorn of all authority, seated in his place like the Grand Lama, who could nod his head with the wool upon it and yet shorn of even the wool. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, these are no jesting observations of mine. These are dealings with great things, with high considerations, that belong, not only to to-day, but belong to the ages, and men trifle with these things, dare to trifle. It seems somewhat strange to me that men dare to undertake to occupy themselves about the destruction and demolition of institutions most magnificently framed, without any idea of architecture, who know not what a structure is, who understand not anything of the forms of art, who understand simply demolition, and know nothing about construction or edification. I, for my part, would not dare, I am too much of a coward to dare, to do these things which so many dare, to do with a thoughtless eye and an unattending ear, not thinking that their conduct involves the condition of millions, the condition of our nation and its perpetuity. We are not yet a century old. May the good God who reigns in heaven permit us to fill out our century; but I fear we are threatened by a non-continuance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference, and on this question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 22, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Con-ness, Fogg, Fowler, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Ramsay, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Hendricks, Johnson, McDougall, Patterson, Van Winkle, and Willey—10.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cattell, Cowan, Cragin, Creswell, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Kirkwood, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Riddle, Saulsbury, and Sprague—20.

So the report was concurred in.

RECONSTRUCTION OF LOUISIANA.

Mr. SUMNER. I now ask that the Senate proceed with the consideration of my motion to take up the Louisiana bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion is now before the Senate, having been displaced by the report of the committee of conference, which was regarded as a privileged question.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I gave way when this motion was pending earlier in the evening for the purpose of having the report of the committee of conference considered. This afternoon I voted for an evening session for the direct object of considering the appropriation bill which was then pending. A measure of this sort ought to be fixed beforehand, if it is to be considered at a special session. A great many members do not come out at sessions ordered in the evening unless they have notice of some measure which will provoke discussion, upon which the polling of a full vote is important. No notice was given when we ordered this evening session that a bill of this description, a general bill, a political bill, would be called up or a vote demanded upon it. This of itself is a sufficient reason why this measure ought not to be taken up and considered at this time. It ought to be taken up at some regular session during the day, when a full Senate can have its attention called to the subject.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania give way to a motion to adjourn?

Mr. BUCKALEW. I am content to yield to the motion, but I am not particular about an adjournment on my own account.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CONNESS. I trust the Senator will change his motion to one, that we proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Several SENATORS. Not now; it is ten o'clock.

Mr. SUMNER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken resulted—yeas 18, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Conness, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fogg, Foster, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane, McDougall, Patterson, Sherman, Stewart, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Willey, and Williams—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Fessenden, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Morgan, Morrill, Ross, Sumner, Wade, Wilson, and Yates—15.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cattell, Cowan, Cragin, Creswell, Edmunds, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Guthrie, Kirkwood, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Riddle, Saulsbury, and Sprague—19.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at ten o'clock and five minutes p. m.) adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 23, 1867.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOXTON.

On motion of Mr. STEVENS, the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

ORDERING OF EVENING SESSION.

On motion of Mr. KELLEY, it was Ordered, That the House take a recess this day from half past four to half past seven p. m.

LAND-GRANT RAILROAD.

Mr. PRICE. I ask unanimous consent that the House proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 439) granting land to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Puget Sound or Admiralty inlet, in Washington Territory, to the Columbia river. This is a bill very important to the interests of Washington Territory.

Mr. SPALDING. I object.

RECORDING A VOTE.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent to record my vote on the bill passed on Thursday last, entitled "A bill to provide ways and means for the payment of compound-interest notes."

There being no objection, leave was granted.

Mr. GARFIELD. I vote against the bill as passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER announced as the first business in order the bill (H. R. No. 859) to declare valid and conclusive certain proclamations of the President, and acts done in pursuance thereof, or of his orders, in the suppression of the late rebellion against the United States.

Mr. STEVENS. As the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] who has charge of that bill is not here now, I move that by unanimous consent it be postponed, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1173) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the motion was agreed to.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. THAYER in the chair) and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1173) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. STEVENS, by unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with, and the bill was read by clauses for amendment.

Mr. PRICE. I move to amend by inserting at the end of line twenty-two "Rock Island bridge, $250,000." I desire to say that the commission appointed by the Secretary of War to examine this matter has reported in favor of an appropriation of $1,000,000 for this object; but I have thought proper to ask an appropriation of only one fourth of this amount. The reason why this work has not been included in the estimates is that the report of this commission had not then been made. The Secretary of War, with whom I have spoken on this subject, will, in a few hours, send in a letter recommending this appropriation.

Mr. STEVENS. I suggest to the gentleman whether he had not better withdraw the amendment and allow it to be added in the Senate. The report on the subject will, I suppose, be here by that time.

Mr. PRICE. If it be right that the amendment should be made at all, it ought to be made now.

Mr. STEVENS. I only suggest that the matter be postponed till we can have more information.

Mr. PRICE. I hold in my hand a document accessible to every member—the report of the commission on this subject. It has come in very lately, and that is the reason why this work has not been included in the estimates, in which case it would doubtless have been in the appropriation bill as reported. As I have before stated, the amendment I have offered is for only one fourth of the amount reported by the commission appointed under the law of Congress.

The amendment of Mr. PRICE was not agreed to.

Mr. HIGBY. I move to amend by inserting after line one hundred and ninety-five "for the establishment of a light-house at Poi: t Reyes, $15,000." An appropriation for this work was included in the estimates of the Department: but the committee did not report it in the bill, because the information which they desired was not before them. If any information is now desired I am ready to give it. I have here a letter on the subject.

Mr. STEVENS. It is possible that after examining this subject the committee might be in favor of this amendment. We added an appropriation for one light-house on that coast which had not been estimated for at all. Several others which we considered, the committee thought might be dispensed with.

Mr. HIGBY. My recollection goes further than that. I was appointed by the committee to make inquiry at the Department, and it is not likely any action would be taken during my absence.

Mr. McRUER. I desire to say to the committee there is no point upon the whole of our western coast which requires a light-house more than Point Reyes. During the last eighteen months there has been property destroyed at that point from the want of a light-house equal to four or five hundred thousand dollars. It is a very prominent point, round which the commerce from the Northern Pacific approaches San Francisco. There is an imperative necessity to protect that commerce from danger at that point. Therefore I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HIGBY. I ask the Clerk to read a letter from the Treasury Department.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.
OFFICE OF THE LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD,
WASHINGTON, February 22, 1867.

SIR: It is perceived from the light-house bill reported from the Committee on Appropriations of the House that certain items recommended by this board are omitted. They are, [see printed estimates:]

Point Reyes, California.....	$15,000
Point Arenas.....	65,000
Cape Blanco, Oregon.....	75,000
Cape Fear.....	120,000
Southwest Pass.....	108,000

It is also noticed that the bill appropriates $100,000 for reestablishing lights on the southern coast, instead of $200,000, as estimated by this board.

These items are all regarded as of primary importance, and if possible the board would be glad to see them inserted when the bill comes before the House. If, however, all that is asked for cannot be given, and any item must be stricken out, it is thought that the item for Cape Fear, of $120,000, can best be spared, and in that case might with least injury to commercial interests be thrown out.

Very respectfully,

ANDREW A. HARWOOD,
Naval Secretary.

Hon. T. D. ELIOT.

Mr. HIGBY's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HIGBY. I move the following:

For establishment of a light-house at Point Arenas, $65,000.

Mr. STEVENS. I think California has been very well treated in this bill, and I hope she will not be allowed more than her share.

Mr. HIGBY. That is a novel way of opposing an amendment.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. LONGYEAR. I move the following amendment:

For a light-house at Trowbridge Point, in Munde bay, Michigan, $10,000.

Mr. ELIOT. That amendment is recommended by the Committee on Commerce.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONGYEAR. I have sent up a number of amendments by direction of the Committee on Commerce. They are to cover the cases provided for in the bill reported from that committee which has passed this House. There are no other cases whatever. They have been estimated for by the Light-House Board. I offer them altogether.

For a light-house at Mendota, on Lake Superior, Michigan, $10,000.

For a light-house at or near Braddock's Point, Georgia, in place of Calibogue light-vessel, $15,000.

For a light-house to mark Combahee bank, Georgia, in place of Combahee light-vessel, $15,000.

For a light-house to mark Tybee Island Knoll, Georgia, in place of light-vessel, $15,000.

For range lights on Morris Island, as guides in crossing Charleston bar, South Carolina, $15,000.

For rebuilding a light-house at Deep Water Shoals in James river, Virginia, $16,281 73.

For rebuilding a light-house, tower, and keeper's dwelling at St. Simons, Georgia, $45,000.

For rebuilding Wolf Island beacon lights and buildings connected therewith, $14,000.

For rebuilding Sapelo light-house and beacons, Georgia, $15,000.

For building three light-houses and buoy steam-tenders, $100,000.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes twenty-eight; noes not counted.

The CHAIRMAN ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. LONGYEAR and Mr. SCOTFIELD.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 73, noes 22.

The CHAIRMAN voted in the affirmative. So the amendment was agreed to.

For continuing the work on the Capitol extension, $250,000.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I move to strike that out, for the purpose of inquiring of the chairman of the committee why something is not done with this money which we appropriate from year to year. It ought to say for protracting this work. As we come here session after session, except with the aid of a glass we cannot tell there has been any change in this building, and still we make an appropriation of a quarter of a million for "continuing" it. I ask why this is not completed?

Mr. STEVENS. The reason is that it is a larger work than those of us who are accustomed to small things can realize, and therefore it is found that it takes a longer time to build a Capitol, which is superior to any in the world, than it does to build a saw-mill. I have known a saw-mill to be built in a year; this Capitol you could not build in less than twenty years. Every year when I come here I see some progress made. There may be workmen employed who are lazy, though I do not know it. I always see them busy as I pass. I know there are more wanting work than can get it, and very possibly there may have been some unjust discriminations made. I believe there have been some mistakes made by the architect. For instance, this end of the Capitol in which we are is supplied with air which is first made putrid below. All outside air is excluded, and, if it would not cost so much, it would be well to alter the construction of this Hall so that we could breathe some purer air. But, then, if it is better ventilated, perhaps our prospective successors may complain because of our longer lives. [Laughter.] If any of the money that has been expended upon the building has been thrown away, that is a matter for the consideration of the Committee on Accounts. They ought to look out for that. I am not aware that any of the money last appropriated has been thrown away more than usual. The gentleman asks how much more money it is going to take. If he will ask my successor some years hence perhaps he will find out. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCOTFIELD. The answer of the chairman of the committee is more witty than satisfactory. What he says about persons being accustomed to small outlays I suppose is designed as wit.

Mr. STEVENS. That is my case.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I do not care anything about it, but I do care something about these wasteful expenditures from year to year, when everybody can see that the policy is to protract this work and do just as little as possible with the large appropriations, so as to make it, as the gentleman says, a twenty-year job. Now, I have no idea that this Capitol is to remain at Washington. The action of the last session of Congress upon the mileage question looks to the removal of it westward. Whenever the people of the extreme West cannot make a fortune on mileage in coming here they will demand that the Capitol shall go that way, as it ought to go. It is not likely to remain on the Potomac, with one little, crooked, irregular line of railroad for the vast North and Northwest leading to it. Such is the policy of the legislation around us that they are not likely to allow any other mode of reaching here. The single monopoly line between here and Baltimore is to be the only railroad by which anybody is ever to reach this place. Now, these two things operating together will result in the removal of this Capitol. In that view I want the workmen to get what little marble work they have here cut, so as to make the freight as little as possible when we come to move the Capitol to the West. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. McKEE. I move to insert the following: For repairs of the marine hospital at Louisville, Kentucky, $10,000.

I will only say that there was an original paragraph in for that purpose, that this hospital is very much in need of repairs, and it is the only one on our side of the river from Cairo up.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky if this is not the same appropriation that we voted down last year?

Mr. McKEE. I understand it is.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. We voted it down upon full discussion.

Mr. McKEE. It is an appropriation of $10,000 for the only marine hospital on the Kentucky side from Cairo up, the one at Paducah having been burned down during the war and discontinued.

Mr. SPALDING. We voted this down simply because the member from Kentucky from that district was not here to defend it. I recollect it very well; the appropriation ought to be in.

Mr. KASSON. I only wish to say that the information received from the architect of the Department, as well as from the gentleman's colleague, went even further than the gentleman from Kentucky now on the floor [Mr. McKEE] states. The information is that the building is in a condition that renders it unfit for patients to be placed in, on account of the miasmas that arise from want of draining, the drain being a cesspool right by the building. This is recommended by the Department, and I believe by the committee, to be absolutely necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BIDWELL. I have an amendment to offer, but before offering it I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations why payment for the census marshals has been excluded from the paragraph contained between lines two hundred and twenty-one and two hundred and twenty-three?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would remind the gentleman that no amendment is pending.

Mr. BIDWELL. Then I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of line two hundred and twenty-four:

For payment of the amount of balances due to census marshals for taking the eighth census in California, $9,460 48.

I now ask that the letter which I send to the Clerk's desk may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
WASHINGTON, D. C., February 5, 1867.

SIR: The Secretary of the Interior requests me to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 4th instant, asking to be informed in relation to the amounts due to the census marshals in the State of California—1860, and payment thereof.

No appropriation having been made looking to the payment of the eighth census marshals and their assistants, and the fund for that purpose being exhausted, the Department is not prepared to liquidate said claims, but awaiting the action of Congress, where, in the House Committee on Appropriations, the Secretary has submitted, by States, the total amount due, with the recommendation that provision may be made therefor. California is represented in the sum of $9,460 48.

As soon as funds are provided, the marshals in your State will be fully notified without any delay.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN C. COX, Chief Clerk.

Hon. J. BIDWELL, House of Representatives.

Mr. STEVENS. There was a communication from the Department laid before the committee asking a large amount to pay all the marshals, loyal and disloyal. The committee thought fit to separate the two classes, and to insert in the deficiency bill only the loyal ones, among whom are those of California.

Mr. BIDWELL. That being the case I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. KUYKENDALL. I move to insert the following:

For wharf and barge office at Cairo, Illinois, $10,000.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. CHANLER. I would like to ask the chairman what is the object of this provision for the establishment of a custom-house at Newport, Vermont. What is the necessity for a custom-house there?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the gentleman that debate is out of order, as there is no amendment pending.

Mr. CHANLER. I move, then, to strike out the lines two hundred and twenty-five and two hundred and twenty-six, as follows:

For a custom-house in Newport, Vermont, $10,000.

Mr. STEVENS. If the gentleman will examine the tonnage returns he will find that Vermont, inland as she is and with few ports, has more registered tonnage than the State of Virginia ever had.

Mr. CHANLER. That is a very good point, and I am much obliged to the gentleman for mentioning it; but the necessity for a custom-house does not necessarily arise because there is a certain amount of tonnage. The Erie canal has a great deal of tonnage, and upon this principle we should therefore establish custom-houses all along that canal. I want to know what is the necessity for this custom-house?

Mr. STEVENS. It is necessary for the commerce between that section of the country and Canada. Lake Memphremagog, upon which this town is situated, has its outlet into the St. Lawrence, and thus communicates with Canada.

Mr. CHANLER. Then I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. ELIOT. I move to insert after line two hundred and twenty-six, the following:

To provide additional station-houses, life-boats, and other appliances for the better preservation of life and property from shipwreck along the coast of Massachusetts, $20,000; said sum to be paid to the treasurer of the Massachusetts Humane Society for the uses aforesaid.

Mr. Chairman, I do not feel willing to ask the action of the House in favor of this amendment without stating the grounds upon which it rests. I will say, in the first place, that the amendment has been communicated to the Committee on Appropriations, and that it meets with their concurrence.

The Humane Society of Massachusetts has had the whole care of the coasts of that State ever since the incorporation of the society, about the year 1791. They have now something like eighty life-stations at different points along the coast. The officers of the society devote themselves to the work without any compensation, and although the funds necessary for the establishment and support of their life-stations are provided by private means, Congress has, from time to time, given them a helping hand.

All along the coast of New Jersey and along the coast of Long Island life-stations have been established, and from time to time Congress has passed appropriations for those stations, at an annual expense to the Treasury of very many thousand dollars. There is no claim of that kind made here for the coast of Massachusetts.

There has not been one dollar allowed by the Government to this Humane Society for the last ten years, during which time appropriations have been necessary to pay the expenses of officers all along the coasts of Long Island and New Jersey and the expenses of keeping up those life-stations. The existence of this station saves annually to the Treasury of the United States a large amount of money. It is only from time to time that this society find that their private funds are all exhausted and are obliged to ask some aid from Congress. It is now found that the means of the association have been exhausted, and that it is necessary in order to keep up the establishments which are now maintained upon the coast that the society shall have this assistance from the Government.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to amend by adding the following:

And a like sum of $20,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, for the safety of life upon the northwestern lakes.

There is as much need for an appropriation for this purpose as for that named in the original amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. I think that this had better not be introduced here.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] has been before the committee, and whether it is approved by that committee?

Mr. ELIOT. I conferred with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations before I offered it.

Mr. SCOFIELD. The chairman of the committee is not the whole committee. I want to know whether the matter has been before the committee.

Mr. ELIOT. I really cannot say. I do not know that it has.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] will be adopted. Certainly if we are going into these benevolent operations up in Massachusetts we ought to do the same thing in the West.

Mr. ELIOT. I do not want this put upon the ground of benevolence. I say that this Humane Society saves annually to the Treasury of the United States a large amount of money. But for its exertions and outlays it would be necessary to have life-stations established all along the coast of Massachusetts, and to make annual appropriations as is now done for the coasts of Long Island and New Jersey. All this is saved because this association has taken the work into its own hands, appropriating its own money, applying its own resources, charging nothing for the services of its officers, and only coming here from time to time in order that a portion of the expense, all of which would otherwise have to be borne by the United States, shall be appropriated for by Congress.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Why is not the proposition presented on the recommendation of one of the Departments and through the report of the Committee on Appropriations, instead of being brought here in this way?

Mr. SPALDING. I desire to say that I do not object to the appropriation for this Humane Society in Massachusetts; nor to the appropriations for the coasts of New Jersey and Long Island. But I say that we have a thousand miles of lake coast; and all I ask is that the Secretary of the Treasury may be able now and then to give us a life-boat to assist in protecting life on our coast.

Mr. HILL. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether he regards it as a correct principle of legislation to recognize the claims of these benevolent societies and appropriate money for their support, rather than maintain by the direct action of the Government whatever means may be necessary?

Mr. ELIOT. If the same work can be better done at a cost of not less than twenty-five per cent. I certainly should think it advisable.

Mr. HILL. I would inquire how we are to ascertain whether in point of fact this work is done cheaper and better by this society than it would be by the Government?

Mr. ELIOT. We know perfectly well that for the last two years there has not been appropriated by the Government one dollar for this society, yet the society has been going on saving vessel after vessel loaded with passengers, saving some eighty vessels during the last quarter of a century. During the last year there have been at least two cases where service has been rendered, the effect of which was to save the lives of the crews of the vessels under very peculiar circumstances, at no cost at all to the Government.

Mr. HILL. All I desire to say is that this humane society is undoubtedly a very good thing, a very humane thing; but what I object to is the principle of appropriating money for the support of any purely voluntary association in no way connected with the Government. The society may have been doing good service for years past without compensation; but that shows no reason why it could not do the same thing hereafter. Yet it seems that the society now comes here and asks for some support from the Government; at least so I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ELIOT,] who moves it. Now I object to the principle upon which this appropriation is asked. We have no information upon this subject except what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] gives us; and of course I have the highest possible regard for his word. But we have no sufficient information upon this subject, and from the nature of the subject we necessarily never can have. I object to making this Government a merely charitable institution.

Mr. CONKLING. I would inquire if the original amendment is for $10,000 or $20,000?

Mr. SPALDING. For $20,000.

Mr. CONKLING. The amendment to the amendment may be very proper; but I have not as much information about it as I have about the original proposition. I do not see, however, why it should be offered as an amendment to the original amendment. I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] to let a vote be taken upon the original amendment and then offer his proposition by itself, to the end that each proposition may have the benefit of its own strength.

I understand the proposition coming from the acting chairman of the Committee on Commerce [Mr. ELIOT] to be no such proposition as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HILL] seems to suppose. It is not at all a proposition to appropriate money to be devoted to charitable purposes. It is a proposition to appropriate a certain sum of money for a use of paramount importance: a proper use, not at all a charitable use in the sense in which the gentleman from Indiana uses that term. It is proposed as the most economical and judicious mode of applying that money to put it in the hands of an association existing, respectable, recognized, and which has demonstrated its ability wisely to use funds for that purpose. That is all there is of it as I understand it. This is not giving money for charitable purposes at all.

Now, when the gentleman inquires as he does how it is to be known that this is a useful way to apply this money, or how we are to know anything about it, I will say to him that we will know precisely as and a little better than we ordinarily have information in such cases. Here is a society which for a number of years has been engaged in doing a certain thing. The composition of that society, its regulations and its success, assure it in the estimation of the two committees which concur in recommending this appropriation. The purpose of the appropriation and of the society is a good one, and there is no more uncertainty about the proper use of this appropriation than enters into all appropriations for purposes of this kind.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CONKLING] says this appropriation is not for charitable purposes. Yet it is proposed that this money shall be expended under the direction of this humane society. He says that the point I make is that we cannot know how this money may be expended. Now, I ask the gentleman to say by what means we shall be able to get before this House or before any subsequent Congress a report from this charitable institution showing how they may have expended this money?

The amendment is simply an appropriation of a certain sum of money to be expended under the direction of this society. Now, if that does not mean that society shall have the disposal of every dollar of that money as they may please without any responsibility to this House or any other authority in the world, I confess I do not understand it at all.

Mr. CONKLING. I understand the gentleman's point if he will let me answer it before I forget it.

Mr. HILL. Very well.

Mr. CONKLING. His proposition I submit puts together things which have nothing on earth to do with each other. The gentleman says it is the province of charity, in the sense in which he uses that word, to provide against the loss of life upon the coast, and that is his first proposition. The preservation of the lives of human beings by means of light-boats is not a gratuitous charity on the part of the Government. We know it is not, and I will not stop to answer that.

In the next place, assuming this is a proper purpose for which to appropriate money, we know from what has heretofore taken place the integrity of this society can be firmly relied upon. More than that, it presents to the Treasury Department regular accounts which are regularly audited. If the amendment is not sufficiently guarded in that respect, then let the gentleman move an amendment that the society shall present accounts and vouchers to the Treasury Department for its guidance, and that will remove the last vestige of his objection.

Mr. HILL. I have no objection to the object, none to the character of the society; but I do object there is no relation between the Government and this society by which we can compel the society to show how they have expended this money.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, who is now looking up the previous law on this subject, to amend so as to provide this benevolent society shall present annually to the Treasury Department its vouchers and accounts in the regular way.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. The gentleman has said this appropriation was indorsed by two committees of this House. When the amendment was first proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts I asked why he did not refer it to the proper committee and have it brought before us with some sort of recommendation, and he answered he had spoken to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who he thought approved it. Now, the gentleman from New York says two committees of the House have approved it. I wish to know what committees, and where is their report?

Mr. CONKLING. The gentleman is not quite accurate in what he reports me to have said; yet he is as accurate in what he reports of me as of the acting chairman of the Committee on Commerce. The chairman said he offered the amendment on behalf of that committee. There is one certainly; and he also said he had submitted it to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who appeared to approve it.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. No.

Mr. ELIOT. What I said was I had conferred with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, although I did not know it had been brought formally before that committee. I thought from what occurred that it met his approval. I ask my amendment be read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. ELIOT. That follows the language of the act of 1857.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 46; no quorum voting.

Mr. SPALDING demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SPALDING and Mr. ELIOT were appointed.

The committee again divided on the amendment; and the tellers reported—ayes sixty-three; noes not counted.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question then recurred on the amendment as amended.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope that will be voted down. We are loading this bill with things which have no business here.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For constructing fire-proof appraisers' stores, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, $50,000.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move after "stores" to insert "on the Pennsylvania Bank building lot belonging to the Government."

The Government now owns this property, which it purchased for $110,000, and it is the location the Department recommends, I understand, for these stores. I know we made an appropriation at the last session, but it was not sufficient to cover the object.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. If we do not put them there, half of this appropriation will be exhausted in buying another place.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 32; no quorum voting.

Mr. O'NEILL demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. O'NEILL and Mr. RADFORD were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 51, noes 47.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PRICE. I move to amend by inserting the following:

For a beacon light on Mattawan Point, Raritan bay, New Jersey, $5,000.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. PRICE. I move the following amendment:

For construction of bridge over the Mississippi river at Rock Island arsenal, $250,000.

On the 27th of June last we passed a law directing a certain bridge now there to be torn down as an obstruction to navigation.

Mr. SPALDING. I rise to a question of order. We voted this down this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand it is the same which was offered before.

Mr. SPALDING. It was $250,000 before, and I would like to know what the difference is in the phraseology.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. SPALDING. I ask the gentleman on his veracity if it is not the same he offered before.

Mr. PRICE. It is the same amount.

Mr. SPALDING. I insist that it should be reduced to writing, so that we may know if it is the same.

Mr. PRICE. It was not written before at all; it is now. As I was saying, at the last session a law was passed directing that a certain bridge should be torn down because it was an obstruction to navigation, and that another should be built there in such a manner as the Secretary of War should think safe for the navigation. Under that law a commission was appointed; and that commission has examined the island upon which this arsenal is built. The Government has already appropriated a good many hundred thousand dollars for it, and yet it cannot be reached without a bridge except by a ferry. That commission has reported upon the subject; the report came to the Senate on the 14th of February, and was printed on the 17th. Copies have not yet been received here, but I have one in my hand from which, I will read an extract or two:

"The recommendation of the commission respecting the kind and character of bridge to be erected are approved, and the reasons given for recommending a draw-bridge instead of a high are concurred in."

In another part of the report the commissioners say:

"After hearing the parties in interest, and after full and mature deliberation, the board suggests that the location of the railroad across the island be changed to the lower extremity of the island, as laid down in the plans of the Ordnance department; and that the company be granted a permanent right of way across the island of such width, not exceeding one hundred feet, as may be necessary for a double track."

"For its suggestion as to the kind of wagon-road that should be established, and the amount and kind of aid that should be fairly and equitably granted toward effecting these objects, the board adopts and recommends the following proposition of the Chicago, Rock Island, and Pacific Railroad Company, hereunto attached, with the additional condition that the United States shall have the right to connect with the track of the company such side-tracks as may be desired for the use of the United States, and at such points as the Ordnance department may select."

This report is made under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the law of last session. It meets the approval of the chief of Ordnance, General Dyer, who signs this recommendation; also of the Secretary of War. And now it is only a question whether you will have expended one or two million dollars on Rock Island for public purposes and leave no way of getting to it.

Mr. SPALDING. Is not this a railroad bridge?

Mr. PRICE. It is a railroad and wagon bridge. The wagon-road is for the benefit of the Government exclusively.

Mr. SPALDING. And the railroad bridge is to be changed to another part of the island.

Mr. PRICE. Under a law of Congress it is to be torn down and rebuilt.

Mr. SPALDING. How much will the bridge cost?

Mr. PRICE. That I cannot say, except so far as this: that the recommendation of the Ordnance department is that this appropriation shall be $1,000,000 (I have only asked for one quarter of the amount recommended in this report) on condition that the railroad should pay half the cost of the superstructure.

Mr. SPALDING. I think we had better make it a million.

Mr. PRICE. Well, now, if the gentleman from Ohio is sincere in saying that we ought to have $1,000,000—and a member of his standing would not give utterance to sentiments on this floor as a legislator unless he was sincere and candid in it—if he is sincere, and that does not admit of a doubt, then he certainly cannot oppose an appropriation of one fourth of that amount. This whole thing is in accordance with a law passed by ourselves.

Mr. RADFORD. I want to ask the gentleman whether this appropriation has been considered by the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. PRICE. It has not been considered by the Committee on Appropriations, and I want to tell the gentleman why. This report only came to the Senate on the 14th of February; it was not printed for three days, making it the 17th before it was in print. It only came here within the last two days. The Committee on Appropriations have been advised of this matter, and some of the members of that committee have told me that if it had come in in time this appropriation would have been in the bill. But it did not come in time, and therefore I offer the amendment. It is only a question of time. This work has to be done, or else we shall have to abandon all that we have done already on Rock Island. If gentlemen understood the question there could be but one opinion about it.

Mr. SPALDING. I would ask the gentleman who will own the bridge after the Government has paid $250,000, or perhaps $1,000,000. The railroad company?

Mr. PRICE. No, sir; that is not the fact. The railroad company are to have the privilege of crossing on the bridge, but the Government controls the island; because it owns the whole of it, including the arsenal buildings and the bridge, and it only allows the railroad company the right of way across the bridge. These are the facts of the case.

Mr. SPALDING. I want to say to the gentleman that I advocated in the Committee on Appropriations an appropriation of $500,000 for this very purpose.

Mr. PRICE. That was for the arsenal buildings.

Mr. SPALDING. I understand that, and for buying lands and everything else; but I do not think that we ought to bury ourselves up with appropriations for Rock Island at one session of Congress.

Mr. PRICE. Admitting that to be true, will the gentleman from Ohio say that, having appropriated money at the last session of Congress to be expended on this island, we should abandon the whole of it merely for the want of a bridge to get to and from the island?

Mr. SPALDING. I say that the railroad company had better go on and do something toward building the bridge, and then they can obtain help hereafter.

Mr. PRICE. I say to the gentleman, on my veracity, that the railroad company are not asking this appropriation.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee here rose informally, and the Speaker having resumed the chair,

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bill of the House No. 635, for the relief of Captain John J. Young, of the United States Navy.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had passed a bill and joint resolutions of the following titles, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

A bill (S. No. 603) to authorize the establishment of ocean mail steamship service between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 164) supplementary to the joint resolution to enable the people of the United States to participate in the advantages of the Universal Exhibition in Paris, in 1867.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union then resumed its session.

Mr. PRICE. I was answering the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] in reference to the point who owns this bridge when the committee rose. I say to him that the Government controls all this property, and the railroad company have only the right of way across the bridge.

The railroad company are not here asking for this. They want to be let alone. They have a bridge already, but it is an obstruction to the navigation of the Mississippi river, which has to be removed under a law passed at the last session of Congress. It is not the railroad company who ask this. If you consult them they will say that they are well enough off now. This is for the benefit of the government of the country, and of the commerce of the Mississippi river. That is the fact about it.

Mr. RADFORD. I rise to oppose this appropriation. In the first place, we have no report from a committee in regard to it, and then, I think, that it is too late in the session to consider an appropriation of this kind. A new Congress is to assemble when this one expires, and I think it would be well to postpone action on this matter until the next Congress. For that reason I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. This seems to be a very vague provision. It does not provide who is to construct this bridge, who is to own it when constructed, or whether it is to be constructed by the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Treasury, or the gentleman from Iowa. It simply makes an appropriation for a bridge across the Mississippi river.

Mr. PRICE. The suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTFIELD] is a good one, and I will add to my amendment the words "to be expended under the control of the Secretary of War."

Mr. SCOTFIELD. Then I will add to my remark that if we go into partnership with this railroad company the company will be sure to own us. The gentleman says we can do as we please in connection with this company. Sir, we cannot do it. Why, sir, this little road from Washington to Baltimore has controlled this Government now for a great many years. Congress has tried, all the departments of the Government have tried for a great many years to get us another outlet from this city to the North. But this company says, "No; you shall have no ingress to or egress from the capital of the nation except over our road, for which we will charge just what we please." The Government cannot compete with a railroad company, and I am in favor of steering clear of all partnership with them.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the committee now rise for the purpose of closing debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. THAYER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1173, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report that they had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that when this House again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole upon the special order all general debate be closed in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. THAYER in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 1173, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. All general debate upon this bill is, by order of the House, to be closed in five minutes.

The pending question was upon the amendment of Mr. PRICE.

Mr. PRICE. I desire to answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOTFIELD,] and I do so the more cheerfully because I know him to be one of the most candid men in this House, in my estimation.

I appreciate the strength of the objections which the gentleman has raised; that we cannot go into a partnership with a railroad company, and that railroad companies will always control us if possible. It was for the purpose of avoiding that very trouble that we passed the law of last session. The railroad company there was not only controlling that region of country, but also the interests of the Government; and on the 27th of June last we passed a law so that it should no longer control them. If there is any partnership in the matter, we went into it then, but we hold, so to speak, two thirds of the stock and can control the directorship of the concern.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Will my colleague [Mr. PRICE] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PRICE. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to say that unless the Government provides for the construction of this bridge, in accordance with the proposition of my colleague, which is to have it constructed in connection with the railroad company, the company bearing its proportion of the expense, the Government will be compelled either to build this bridge at its own expense or to keep up a ferry at its own expense. Now, it seems to me, that it is not difficult to see that it will be cheaper for the Government to build the bridge in connection with this company, exercising control over it, than to build it at its own expense, or to keep up a perpetual ferry, one of which it will be obliged to do.

An armory is now being constructed by the Government for its own use on the island at this point. It is necessary that the Government shall have some means of communication between that island and both sides of the river; and the cheapest mode of securing this communication is the construction of this bridge in connection with this railroad company.

Mr. PRICE. I have neglected to say that it is provided that the railroad company shall pay half of the expense of this bridge.

Mr. BROMWELL. It is not mentioned where this bridge is to cross the river.

Mr. PRICE. I will answer the gentleman; this bridge is to go from the Iowa shore of the river to the island, of which the railroad company is to pay half the expense. The bridge from the island to the Illinois shore is to be built by the railroad company without any expense whatever to the Government. This is a clear saving to the Government in securing access to its property upon this island.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I move to amend the amendment by adding the following:

Said bridge to be free to public travel, and the railroad to pay at least one half the cost of the superstructure.

Mr. PRICE. I have no objection to that; I accept it as a modification of my amendment.

Mr. GRINNELL. The proposition now before us presents the simple question whether the Government shall receive any advantage from this property or not. Without a bridge it is worth nothing.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. As the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] accepts my amendment I have nothing to say, except that this bridge is as much needed by the Government and the public as it is by the railroad company; and if it be built jointly, there will be a saving of at least one half to the Government.

The amendment of Mr. PRICE, as modified, was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

For repairs and preservation of custom-houses and other public buildings, $25,000.

Mr. TABER. I move to amend by adding after the clause just read, the following:

And for the erection, under the direction of the Light-House Board, of an iron spindle on Success Rock, Long Island Sound, $500, or so much thereof as shall be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs of the building used as the custom-house and post office at Middletown, Connecticut, $6,000.

For the payment of fixtures and furniture furnished to said office, $600.

Mr. KASSON. I move to amend by striking out in the clause just read the words "for the payment of fixtures and furniture furnished to said office, $600." This matter is already provided for by law.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman is altogether mistaken. A special appropriation is necessary.

Mr. KASSON. The mistake, I believe, is with my friend from Connecticut, [Mr. WARNER.] I have learned from an officer in charge of this work that the necessary amount can be paid out of another fund.

Mr. WARNER. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the amendment. I think he will find that he has been misinformed.

Mr. KASSON. Very well; I will withdraw.

The Clerk read as follows:

For United States court-house and post office at Des Moines, Iowa, $35,000.

Mr. BERGEN. I move to amend by inserting after the clause just read the following:

For a site for United States court-house and post office at Brooklyn, New York, $100,000.

Mr. Chairman, although Brooklyn is in point of population the third city in the Union, yet the Government owns no public buildings within its boundaries. The Government is now obliged to rent the buildings occupied by the United States court and post office in Brooklyn. In almost every city of any considerable size the buildings occupied for these purposes are owned by the Government. We have just passed an appropriation for a court-house and post office in a village with a population of only sixty-five hundred. Under these circumstances, I cannot see why the Government should not own buildings of this character in a city so considerable in size and population as Brooklyn. That city claims this as a matter of justice. I do not see how the propriety of the claim can be denied.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope this amendment will not be adopted. We have had no communication, no estimates, nothing whatever on which a large amount like this ought to be appropriated, especially as it will lay the foundation for other large appropriations to be made hereafter. I trust that this bill will not be further loaded down.

Mr. BERGEN. For the sake of saying a word in addition, I move to amend my amendment by striking out the last word.

Let me say to the House that it is a matter of economy for the Government to own in any locality the buildings which it needs for public purposes. And if it be a matter of economy in villages of sixty-five hundred inhabitants, it certainly must be a matter of economy in a city like Brooklyn, with a population of nearly four hundred thousand.

The Government have lately within a short period paid or agreed to pay the sum of $500,000 for the site for a post office and court-house in the city of New York. I say it is a matter of economy to make this appropriation. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I move the following amendment to the amendment:

And for a custom-house, internal revenue office, and post office at Quincy, Illinois, $50,000.

Mr. RADFORD. Is this offered as an amendment or as a substitute?

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. As an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we appropriate in this bill $6,000 for the repair of a building used as a custom-house at Middletown, Connecticut; far up the Connecticut river. Why, then, if this and other small places are to be taken care of, should not this appropriation in my amendment be made for Quincy, Illinois? It is economy for the Government to have its own buildings. We have there now no public buildings at all. It has a large population and no post office building. It is a port of entry, and yet has no custom-house. It has no building of its own where Government officers can do business. It has to rent buildings for that purpose.

I think if we can vote $85,000 for Des Moines, which is a much smaller place, we can afford to appropriate the amount I have proposed for a place three times as large. Quincy is a port of entry and Des Moines is not that I have ever heard of.

Mr. KASSON. Congress authorized the work at Des Moines as well as at Springfield at the last session.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I present the question to the House. I believe it will be economy for the Government to have its own buildings at Quincy, instead of hiring buildings for public purposes.

The amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

The question then recurred on the amendment.

Mr. BERGEN called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BERGEN and Mr. KASSON were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes sixteen; noes not counted.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. JENCKES. I submit the following amendment.

Insert:

For the removal of sunken wrecks in the channel of Providence river, off Pawtucket bar, and widening the channel at the "Crook," so-called, $25,000.

For removal of obstructions in the channel of the Pawtucket river, $17,000.

I ask the Clerk to read a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury recommending this appropriation.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 9, 1867.

SIR: The petitions of Ambrose E. Burnside and others, for an appropriation for removal of sunken vessels in Providence river, and petition of citizens of Pawtucket and North Providence for an appropriation for improvement of the navigation of Pawtucket river, submitted by you to this Department, having been referred to the Superintendent of the Coast Survey for report, I have the honor to transmit herewith in reply, copy of a letter from J. E. Hilgard, Esq., assistant in charge of the Coast Survey, inclosing report of Assistant F. P. Webber, who was detailed to inquire into the question relating to proposed improvements in the navigation of the river referred to, with accompanying map, which has my concurrence.

I am, very respectfully,

H. McCULLOCH,

Secretary of the Treasury.

HON. THADDEUS STEVENS, Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I move to add to that amendment:

For the improvement of the Alleghany river, $20,000.

Mr. Chairman, in my district the member of Congress for a great many years has been elected by pledging himself to get an appropriation for the improvement of the Alleghany river, but after the Republican party came into power in that country they concluded that was a humbug, and it was not required of me. It is barely possible I may be a candidate at some future time, and this would be a great help to me if I should be. I hope, therefore, the House will give me this small appropriation for my district. [Laughter.]

Mr. JENCKES. The gentleman's amendment has not the recommendation of the Treasury Department, as mine has.

Mr. LE BLOND. The gentleman need not have that humbug to be reflected, as he has a bigger one; he has reconstruction on the brain. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCOFIELD. Perhaps they may not run me again, as I have been here longer than usual, and this may help me. [Laughter.]

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOGAN. I move to add to the amendment:

For the removal of wrecks in the Mississippi river, $40,000.

Mr. Chairman, within the last four months vessels of the late confederate States sunk in the Mississippi river have been the means of the destruction of three of the finest boats on that river, causing a loss of some eight hundred thousand dollars. These vessels were sunk in time of war and they have remained there, constituting a permanent obstruction to navigation. It is impossible to avoid them, and the only remedy is to remove them. I think it devolves upon this Government to take the obstructions from that great river of this Republic. I do not know that $40,000 will remove them, but it will do something toward it. We have suffered in consequence of those wrecks not only the loss of property to the amount of $800,000, but the loss of fifty or sixty lives of American citizens. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. JENCKES. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his amendment. I agree with him that the removal of these wrecks, if practicable, is a proper thing to be done by the Government of the United States; but there has not been done in that case what has been done in the case which I have presented to the House, namely, a survey of the river by a proper officer of the Government, an accurate estimate made of the probable expenses of removing the obstructions, and a recommendation of the Treasury Department upon the report of that officer. When the gentleman comes before the House with these credentials I shall probably vote with him, but I hope he will not encumber this amendment by his own when he admits that he does not know that the sum asked will be sufficient to remove the obstructions of which he complains, and does not state how far it will go toward their removal.

Mr. HOGAN. One word in reply. I think my proposition is germane to that of the gentleman from Rhode Island. If our river, which has properly been characterized as an inland sea, were a sea-board it could get these estimates for removals of obstructions. But our river, although floating a commerce greater than all our foreign commerce, seems hitherto to have been ignored by nearly all the gentlemen connected with this service.

Mr. STEVENS. May I ask the gentleman if we did not appropriate a considerable sum last year for snag-boats to be used for that purpose.

Mr. HOGAN. That was the first recognition for a long time, but the amount appropriated last year will be almost exhausted in the preparation of the boats, and I now want something for the boats to work on when they are ready for work. I hope the committee will not make any objection to this small appropriation, merely to show our people that this great Government is looking somewhat to the advancement of the interest of the West.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I suggest to the gentleman to extend his proposition so as to include the tributaries of the Mississippi, then it will take in the Alleghany river.

The CHAIRMAN. No further debate is in order.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to—ayes sixty-nine; noes not counted.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. JENCKES, as amended; and being put, no quorum voted.

The Chair ordered tellers; and Messrs. HOGAN and SCOFIELD were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 70, noes 33.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Public Buildings and Grounds:

For care, support, and medical treatment of sixty transient paupers, medical and surgical patients, in some proper medical institution in the city of Washington, under a contract to be formed with such institution by the Commissioner of Public Buildings, $12,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend by adding the following:

Provided, That in the expenditure of this and the succeeding items in this section, to be disbursed by or under the supervision of said Commissioner of Public Buildings, no portion of the fund so appropriated shall be reserved to pay for his services as poet-laureate of the Administration.

[Laughter.]

I observe in the paragraph preceding this a provision for the completion of "approaches" to the "Treasury!" Then follow some four or five pages taken up with items relative to the disbursements to be made under the supervision of or by the Commissioner of Public Buildings, which open, it appears to me, some very easy and wide approaches to the Treasury. I have been familiar with Washington for some twenty-five years, and I undertake to say that, for some reason perhaps known to others but which I do not pretend to understand, our public buildings and the public squares exhibit a more dilapidated condition than I have known them ever to exhibit before. Everything seems to be more or less slipshod. Among the many things here again provided for are appropriations for laborers and electricians and watchmen to be employed, whose compensations will be from $900 to $1,200 apiece, which will be patronage exercised by the Commissioner of Public Buildings.

Now, sir, I doubt whether the Commissioner, owing to his other engagements, has time to attend to all these matters, and I want to call the attention of the House to that difficulty.

The Commissioner is a gentleman whom I have known for a great many years; first, as an assistant clerk in this House; then as Chief Clerk; then as Commissioner of Public Buildings under Pierce; next as the clerk of the Committee of Claims in a Republican Congress; then as Commissioner of Public Buildings under the last Administration; and now in the same position under the present one. Being a gentleman belonging to the class who are always in office, he has necessarily had, and must continue to have, a great deal to do for himself and his friends. Therefore it is that I express my anxiety lest he should be prevented by these other matters from properly attending to his duties as poet-laureate of this or any succeeding Administration; and in order to show what is required of him in that capacity, I ask to have read the extracts from one of his poems which I now send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Where Jackson stood now doth another stand—
The favored ruler of our favored land.
With heart as pure and patriotism as great,
A second Andrew steers the ship of state.
He stands unmoved upon her noble deck,
Nor heeds the mutineers who seek her wreck!
'Still let the old flag float' is his decree,
'No star struck from the glorious galaxy.'
Assailed, abused, railed at in every form,
He'll bring the ship in safety through the storm.
For that vast crew, the people, will defend
Their noble pilot 'till the voyage shall end;
And the old ship, her starry flag unstruck,
Shall ride at peace, entire from keel to truck."

"Our second Andrew, who all hearts had won,
Stood at the helm, and the old ship sailed on!
What were his acts? such as the world approved,
Such, as to kindness, the whole nation moved,
Had not base envy striven to rule the hour.
All now were one in Union, feeling, power!
To thwart his policy, destroy his rule,
Is the small work of many a supple tool
Of a determined clique, who rant and rave,
'Divide and ruin!'—not 'unite and save.'"

"The end approaches—that sublime event,
The people rallying to their President."

"And when in years long hence the immortal scroll
Of men beloved time's herald shall unroll,
Entwined in laurel wreaths two names shall be Together joined as champions of the free—
The name of Andrew Jackson men shall find
With that of Andrew Johnson closely twined;
And while the race of men on earth is seen,
The people's hearts shall keep their memory green."
June 1, 1866. B. B. FRENCH."

[Laughter.]

Mr. HOGAN. That is first-rate.

Mr. KELLEY. If the gentleman from Ohio will yield to me a moment, I want to say that I think he is doing injustice to the Commissioner of Public Buildings. I do not think the Commissioner is the author of that production; for, meeting him soon after I had seen it, I told him that some scoundrel had appended his name to that stuff, and he seemed very much confused, and certainly he did not claim the paternity of it. [Laughter.] I left him, therefore, under the impression that he had been vilely slandered by the person who had put his name to it.

Mr. SCHENCK. I do not wonder at the confusion of a man who takes care of all Administrations in succession and manages to stay in office under them all. Such a man must of course be somewhat confused occasionally, and undetermined at certain critical times as to whether he is or is not the author of a given production. This is dated June 1, 1866, a time when there may have been some indications of the people "rallying to their President;" but the people do not rally to the President now as much as they used to. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHENCK. I was just going to send to the Clerk's desk the poetry written by the gentleman under Mr. Lincoln's Administration. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRINNELL. I move, pro forma, to amend the amendment. I understand that there is a much better specimen of the Commissioner's poetry yet to be read.

Mr. DAVIS. I rise to a point of order; that this discussion and reading are not at all germane to the subject before the House.

Mr. SCHENCK. They are germane to my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. It is too late to raise that point.

Mr. GRINNELL. I submit that we have not yet heard the best of the poetry. I ask the Clerk to read what I now send to his desk. [Cries of "read!" "read!"]

The Clerk read as follows:

Orgies in Hell, over Secession.

"Hark! hark! to the Fiend—'ha! ha! ha! ha! ha! ha!'
And all Hell, overjoyed, returned a 'huzzah.'
'Let us drink to the plot that on earth is laid bare,'
And clink go the cups to the toast from the chair!
'Up rises old Satan—'My friends and my peers,
I give you my thanks for your voices and cheers—
Well may we rejoice in our victory, when
It will people our regions with myriads of men.'"

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a point of order. I submit that at this period in the session time is too valuable to be wasted in this way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that that is not a point of order.

Mr. RADFORD. I rise to a point of order; that this is not germane to the question before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading, as follows:

"My efforts, alas! were all fruitless and vain;
All my will and my strength could not sever the chain

That bound in one people that Union so grand,
Hailed all over the earth as a God-chosen land!
Till at last our dear children 'down South,' as they say,

In a State where we rule o'er the rulers—where play

All the passions of hell—sought by pretext and lies
To undo the great work of the God-like and wise.
We breathed fire in the soul of a demon called Rhett;

We whispered one Yancey; one Pickens beset,
Till they coaxed on the crowd to disunion and shame.

And an edict of wrath was the fruit of the flame.
How we gloried, my peers, to see the fire spread,
Till a hell on the earth was up, raging and red,
And a cordon of States from their sphere madly hurled,
Gained the love of our heart—the contempt of the world.

"We glory in ruin; war peoples our realm.
Let us force on the issue these fools to o'erwhelm,
For that North that we hate, and that West we despise,

Are sure in their wrath and their fury to rise,
And they'll crush down disunion, secession they'll kill.

We shall have Davis wanting some place here to fill;

And Stephens and Pickens and Yancey and Rhett
Will make capital hell-hounds. We must not forget
That half-nigger Toombs, with his terrible holler,

Which can beat our dog Cerberus out of his collar!
Indeed, all our friends, the secessionists, soon
Will knock at our door, and will crave, as a boon,

All the offices here. 'Twill excite all our mirth;
For they shan't rule in hell as they tried to on earth;
And when these grand knaves we torment in our wrath,

With thousands of others whom they've led the false path,
Though hateful to us, the old Union again
Will be bound in a lasting—a fraternal chain;

For Heaven has decreed that the Union shall be,
Through all time, the abode of a people that's free;
And all we shall gain by our purposes fell
Is peopling with scoundrels the purlieus of hell!"

"As Satan sat down, many rounds of applause
Attested Hell's love of the disunion cause;

And a brave little devil jumped up in a chair,
And yelled out this toast with a triumphant air—

'Here's a welcome to Davis and Stephens and Rhett,
And to thousands of others whose names we forget:
We shall have them; on earth they cannot be forgiven,

And the love of our lies is their forfeit of heaven.'
Then he waved a small flag—seven dim stars in its field,
And a sort of a thing 'twixt a tree and a shield;

'Twas a cotton concern, and in waving it came,
Somehow, loosed from the staff, and was burned in hell's flame!

"Satan rose in his place at this ominous turn,
That ended in ashes the cotton concern,
Took a gulp of hot liquor, bade good night to each friend,

And declared both the meeting and flag at an end!
"April, 1861. B. B. FRENCH."

Mr. PAINE. I move to strike out the words "under a contract to be formed with such institution by the Commissioner of Public Buildings."

I cannot see any good reason why the Commissioner of Public Buildings, whether he be a poet or not, should have the power, under this provision, to make arrangements with the medical institutions in this city for the support of transient paupers, and the disbursement of this $12,000. I prefer to intrust this power to some other person.

Mr. STEVENS. Ever since this appropriation has been made of $12,000 for this purpose the same language has been used year after year, and it would hardly do now to change it. The money has always been well appropriated and faithfully administered. In truth, the Commissioner of Public Buildings has very little to do with the matter.

Mr. SLOAN. I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] if there have been every year just sixty transient paupers to be taken care of by this city?

Mr. STEVENS. There have been three or four times that number provided for in these institutions; but the Government pays for the support of but sixty of them.

Mr. KASSON. I would say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] that it would perhaps be well to provide that this money shall be expended by the Secretary of the Interior instead of the Commissioner of Public Buildings.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not like, without some good reason, to cast a stigma upon any one. Ever since this appropriation was first commenced this has been the language used in regard to it. And although I have no very high opinion of a great many men about here, I see no reason for changing the form of this appropriation at this time.

Mr. PAINE. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] has informed the House that this money has always been well expended. Now, I have no positive information or knowledge that the money in this case or in any other case which has been placed at the disposal of this gentleman has not been well expended. But yet I venture to ask the gentleman whether he has ever examined the accounts in this case so as to know that the money has been well expended, or what information he has upon the subject.

Mr. STEVENS. The committee have always examined the accounts of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, and they have never reported against him. I have never examined the accounts myself, for I am not a very good arithmetician. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAINE. Does the gentleman mean the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. STEVENS. No, sir; I think it was the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. DAWES. I see present a member of the Committee on Accounts; I would like to inquire of him about that.

Mr. BROOMALL. Nothing of that sort has been before the Committee on Accounts that I am aware of.

Mr. STEVENS. I may have been mistaken; at all events the proper accounting officer of the Treasury has passed upon those accounts.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment has closed.

Mr. SLOAN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word for the purpose of saying that I have had occasion to examine one of the accounts presented from the Commissioner of Public Buildings for improvements upon the streets and avenues of this city.

The law provides that the Government of the United States shall pay for the improvements in front of its reservations and public grounds. The Commissioner of Public Buildings has construed the law to mean that every avenue is a reservation for a public square, and that hence the Government of the United States must pave all the avenues, make all the sewers, lay all the sidewalks, ornament them with trees, in short that the Government must take the whole care and expense of the public avenues of the city, under the law which provides that the Government shall pay the expense of improvements in front of the public squares and reservations. Now, if the Commissioner of Public Buildings should expend this appropriation of $12,000 for transient purposes under a construction as liberal as that, not only paupers but any other class whom he may see fit to favor may be brought by construction within the provisions of this appropriation.

I now withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. PAINE; and upon a division there were —ayes twenty-seven, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. I move to amend by inserting the following after the paragraph now under consideration:

To clear out and make the Passaic river, in the State of New Jersey, navigable to the city of Paterson in said State, $20,000.

The Passaic river is navigable for about half the distance between New York and Paterson. The city of Paterson is the largest city in my district, containing a population of about forty thousand; and is the largest manufacturing town but one in the State of New Jersey; and it is very important that navigation should be opened between the city of New York and the city of Paterson. Paterson Falls, where Sam Patch jumped off, are there. [Laughter.] I believe Sam Patch afterward jumped off some other falls and was killed.

I hope the gentleman will not neglect the State of New Jersey, as I believe this Congress has never made an appropriation for any river in that State. Twenty thousand dollars will be sufficient to clear out that river and make it navigable to the city of Paterson; and this will be of incalculable advantage to the community.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

For repairs of Pennsylvania avenue, and sprinkling the same, and keeping it clean and free from dirt, $10,000.

Mr. SCHENCK. I should like to be informed by some member of the Committee on Appropriations, what was the amount appropriated last year for keeping Pennsylvania avenue "clean and free from dirt?"

Mr. STEVENS. I believe that this item was the same in the bill of last year.

Mr. SCHENCK. Well, sir, if anybody wants a commentary upon the words "clean and free from dirt," let him go along Pennsylvania avenue, or any other avenue under the care of Congress, the streets being taken care of, nominally at least, by the city corporation. I think, sir, that our very talented poet-laureate must be too busy to attend to the expenditure of so much money. I therefore move to amend this item by striking out "ten" and inserting "two," so as to reduce the appropriation to $2,000. I offer this for the purpose of eliciting from the Committee on Appropriations some sort of assurance, if they can give us any, that under the administration of the present Commissioner of Public Buildings the purposes for which we appropriate this money will be carried out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For renewing the heating apparatus at the President's House, $8,000.

Mr. GRINNELL. I move to amend by striking out in the item just read the word "eight" and inserting "five," so as to reduce the appropriation to $5,000. I make the motion because I know that this amount is sufficient.

Mr. LE BLOND. I should like to learn from the gentleman who has made this motion or from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations what has been the appropriation for this purpose in former years. The gentleman from Iowa says that $5,000 is sufficient. I should like to know upon what data he speaks.

Mr. GRINNELL. I have some acquaintance with gentlemen in that business; and I give my opinion founded upon the opinion of others who ought to know and who say that $5,000 would be ample for this work. I would cheerfully vote for $8,000 if I thought it necessary.

Mr. STEVENS. The amount named in the bill is what was contained in the estimates. The committee have no reason to suppose that the expense was overestimated. I hope that the amendment will not be agreed to.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For laying a new pipe from the K street main to the Capitol, in order to supply the building at all times with a full flow of water, $5,000.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the following:

To enable the Commissioner of Public Buildings to put in thorough repair the conservatory recently injured by fire at the President's Mansion, $10,000.

This matter has been examined by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; estimates have been obtained; and we are satisfied that this amount, or very nearly this much, will be required to put the conservatory in repair. It is absolutely necessary that the work should be done. I hope there will be no objection to the amendment.

Mr. RADFORD. Will the gentleman from Maine state the precise amount of the estimate? I think it was two or three thousand dollars less than the sum named in the amendment.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. The destruction by fire, including the loss of plants, was very much more than ten thousand dollars. I am satisfied from my own examination and from the examination of others much more competent to judge that $10,000 will be necessary to put this conservatory in decent repair.

Mr. RADFORD. I want to know what was the precise amount of the estimate.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. Ten thousand dollars.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I am in favor of making this appropriation on the condition that those who are to have charge of the proposed improvement shall select some other place than the present location, or build some other kind of a building than the one which was damaged by fire. I think, sir, that the improvement which has been made by removing the old stable from the east side of the Presidential Mansion should be an admonition to those having charge of the matter to select for the new conservatory another location than that which has been occupied for that purpose heretofore.

If we put up any building at all it ought not only to be substantial but ornamental, and a credit rather than a discredit to this Government.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I think the estimate is an extravagant one. As a member of the joint Committee on the Library I have seen plans for a conservatory far more elegant than this one which were accompanied by estimates. It was in reference to a matter connected with the Government Botanical Garden. The estimates were much under those indicated here.

If we are to do this work at all I think $5,000 is enough; and as we will have to erect a new Presidential Mansion, and as the conservatory is an eye-sore where it is now, I think it would be well to leave this to the next Congress.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I oppose the amendment of the gentleman. Of course it would cost much more to build a conservatory that would do credit to the country. As has been stated by gentlemen who have been upon the floor, before many years we must have a new Presidential Mansion. This is, however, required for the present.

Mr. KELLEY, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. NIBLACK demanded tellers on Mr. RICE's amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RICE, of Maine, and Mr. KELLEY were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 59, noes 44.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation of laborer to take care of the heating apparatus of the Library of Congress, $1,000.
For compensation to three watchmen on the Dome of the Capitol, $2,700.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to strike out those paragraphs.

Mr. Chairman, I desire not to be misunderstood in regard to this. I have always been in favor of and voted for liberal appropriations for this Capitol, for its public buildings, and for all that tends to make it a credit to the nation and an ornament of our country, but it is time the issue were made whether we will go on expending under an inefficient Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds large amounts of the public money that may be used we know not how.

So far as these two items are concerned, we propose first to authorize him to employ a laborer at $1,000 a year. I do not know whether this is a new office to be created or not. It would seem we never had such a person employed before as a laborer from the manner it is introduced here. Then there are to be three watchmen for the Dome at a salary of $900 per year. These are large sums to be paid for such light services, and they are services not heretofore thought to be required. We propose to create these new employments for persons to perform light duty at high prices, and to give the appointment to a man who will confer them upon such persons who, like himself, are subservient to anybody who may for the time happen to be in power.

Mr. UPSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether he intends to be understood that a like character of poets are also to be appointed to these new positions?

Mr. SCHENCK. I have the utmost respect for the poetry of the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds, and I do not think anything can be more melodious except it were he should sing it himself. But I wish to keep the two things distinct. His time is so much taken up in writing these odes on every occasion, he does not seem to be able to attend to his duties here.

As to the objection of my bringing this matter up here, I will only answer we have no other way of reaching him except in an appropriation bill. I think we ought to reach him just in this direction. So far as trusting him to make the appointments of these new appointees at such high prices for performing such light services—and they are new appointments so far as I know, and have not heretofore been deemed necessary—I for one am unwilling to consent to it.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. Is his writing poetry a new thing?

Mr. SCHENCK. This incumbent has been singing—if not from his earliest youth—certainly ever since I have known him.

Mr. KASSON. The committee have ascertained this employment is necessary only during the months in which the heating goes on, and therefore the amount might be reduced to $600. I make that amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. Then I have accomplished something, for I have succeeded in cutting this appropriation down from $1,000 to $600; still the gentleman does not answer my question.

Mr. KASSON. I did not understand—

Mr. SCHENCK. Why should we provide for a new laborer to be added to the number already provided for?

Mr. KASSON. I did not understand the gentleman to ask that question. My answer is that this man has been employed several years on the furnaces of the Capitol; a change has been made in the heating apparatus, which results in the need of employing only a portion of the time. That fact is a new one, and it is for that reason that I moved to reduce the amount, as the same employé is not necessary during the period when the heating is not going on.

Mr. SCHENCK. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment, but I still insist upon the amendment to strike out the item.

The amendment of Mr. KASSON to reduce the sum to $600 was agreed to.

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. SCHENCK to strike out the clause as amended.

Mr. STEVENS. I want to say that since the completion of the Dome in its present shape it becomes necessary to employ these watchmen. I suppose there is no doubt about that. Watchmen are now employed as a matter of necessity, and we are now authorizing it. If it is not the pleasure of Congress to have the Dome kept open and lighted, of course this item will be stricken out.

Mr. SCHENCK. Lest my motion to strike out might not prevail, I will move to amend the paragraph by inserting after the word "laborer" the words "to be employed by the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives;" so that whoever is employed and at whatever compensation, our presiding officers shall have control of him. And I will make the same proposition in regard to the next paragraph, to insert the same words after the word "watchmen."

The question being taken on the amendment, to insert after the word "laborer" the words stated above, it was agreed to.

The question recurred on the motion to strike out the paragraph, as amended, and no quorum voted.

The Chair ordered tellers; and Messrs. SCHENCK and ROSS were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 45, noes 51.

So the paragraph was not stricken out.

Mr. STEVENS. If gentlemen do not like the Commissioner of Public Buildings let them by resolution say he shall have nothing to do with the public buildings; but at every little appropriation of this kind, of $500 or $600, for gentlemen to express their dislike to the man seems to me below the dignity of this body. What has the Speaker of the House to do with taking care of $600 employes? I do not like this reducing a man's pay to $600 a year who takes care of the dome of the Capitol, unless gentlemen intend it to be another Andersonville in which to starve soldiers.

Mr. SCHENCK. I trust there is no particular want of dignity in proposing that the presiding officers of the two Houses shall attend to the appointment of these persons who are to take charge of that which immediately concerns our comfort in the care of the building we occupy. It has not been thought beneath his dignity to assign seats to the various persons who are permitted to report our proceedings here as the reporters of the different newspapers. It has been devolved upon the Speaker to determine who shall occupy the restaurant below to sell glasses of beer and crackers to those who may be thirsty or hungry. It has not been considered beneath the dignity of the Presiding Officer even of the Senate to undertake the task of determining who shall occupy bucksters' stands in the building. If, therefore, the filling of these appointments, that are supposed to be worth $1,000 a year, is below their dignity, perhaps it may be proper to take away the appointment of all these other officers who do not rise to quite the dignity required.

My idea is, while we thus exercise a proper economy and secure the right persons, we will be enabled to employ these very faithful soldiers to whom the gentleman so feelingly refers, which we will be more certain to do if we give the appointment to our presiding officers rather than to this gentleman whose laudation in prose or verse of those who may happen to be in power seems to be his principal employment.

The question being put on the amendment of Mr. SCHENCK, to insert after the word "watchmen" the words "to be employed by the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives," there were—ayes 81, noes 40; no quorum voting.

The Chair ordered tellers; and Messrs. SCHENCK and ORTH were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 53, noes 45.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred on striking out the paragraph as amended.

Mr. SCHENCK. I withdraw that.

The Clerk read as follows:

For additional compensation of $100 a year to each of the three watchmen as above, $300.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to strike out that paragraph. It seems to be adding $100 more to each of the other salaries, increasing them from $900 to $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For enabling the Commissioner to employ a suitable electrician to take care of and operate the lighting apparatus of the dome of the Capitol, $1,200.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move the same amendment as before, to insert the words "to be employed by the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives."

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that.

Mr. SCHENCK. Very well; I withdraw it.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I move to amend by inserting at the end of the last paragraph the following:

And that no further salary shall be paid to the Commissioner of Public Buildings until the iron railings of the old House of Representatives are altered as ordered by this House at its first session.

I simply desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that early in the last session we ordered that those railings should be cut down and made lower. I have waited patiently and looked anxiously to see that change made. I have frequently noticed in passing through the old Hall gentlemen stooping down or standing on tip-toe to look at the statuary which is filling up those apartments, and I have had to do the same myself. It is a great inconvenience. The House ordered the change, and the friends of the Commissioner of Public Buildings represented from time to time that it would be made very shortly; and yet it is not done.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the committee rise, for the purpose of closing debate. We will never get through at this rate.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. DAWES] having resumed the chair, Mr. THAYER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 1173, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the House No. 222, prohibiting payments by any officer of the Government to any person not known to have been opposed to the rebellion and in favor of its suppression, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 614) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to transfer the United States iron-clad Onondago to George Quintard, of New York.

Also, a joint resolution (S. R. No. 181) concerning the right of way for the survey and construction of an inter-oceanic ship-canal through the Isthmus of Darien, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS. I now move that when the House resolves itself again into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union all debate on the pending section be terminated in five minutes.

Mr. SCHENCK. I would inquire of the Chair how much is embraced in the pending section?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands it ends on page 22.

The motion to close debate was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. THAYER in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being bill of the House No. 1173, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment offered by Mr. FARQUHAR.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I desire to oppose that amendment. If there is any fault in this matter it is not the fault of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, and he should not be held in the least responsible for it. The gentleman from Indiana (Mr. FARQUHAR) is in error in regard to the facts. There was an amendment in regard to removing this railing or fence offered at the last session by the gentleman from Ohio, (Mr. SCHENCK.) I stated that the present architect of the Capitol extension was desirous of removing that fence, that he would do so, and that no further appropriation was necessary therefor. That was my error; there was no appropriation to take down the fence.

Now, I hope the gentleman will withdraw his amendment and allow me to move one to appropriate $1,000 to remove this fence and put up a proper one in its stead.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Having offered my amendment under a misapprehension, I will withdraw it.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend by inserting the following:

For removing the unsightly iron fence or inclosure which has been put up in the old Hall of Representatives in the Capitol, $100.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I hope the gentleman will make it $1,000.

Mr. SCHENCK. For taking down that fence?

Mr. RICE, of Maine. And putting up a proper one.

Mr. SCHENCK. No; I prefer my amendment as it is.

The amendment of Mr. SCHENCK was then agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill. Mr. GRINNELL. I move to strike out the clause just read by the Clerk, as follows:

For flagging the areas around the Executive Mansion where mouldy brick pavements are now, $10,000.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to amend the clause proposed to be stricken out by striking out the word "mouldy." I do not think that word is necessary there.

Mr. MAYNARD's amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. GRINNELL, to strike out the entire clause.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee rose informally, and the Speaker resumed the Chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Colonel WILLIAM G. MOORE, his Secretary.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole (Mr. THAYER in the chair) the consideration of the miscellaneous appropriation bill.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For top-dressing for public grounds and cartage of same, $1,500.

For purchase of tools for public grounds, $500.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I find in previous portions of the bill the following appropriations:

For hauling manure for top-dressing the public grounds, $500.

For purchase and repair of tools used in the public grounds, $400.

Now, the portion just read by the Clerk seems to be a reduplication of these items.

Mr. STEVENS. They were intended to be reduplicated; they relate to a different portion of the public grounds.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It does not say so in the bill. I move to strike out the portion read by the Clerk.

The question was taken; and upon a division, there were—ayes twenty-seven; noes not counted.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill. When he had read the following:

For further improvement of the Circle on Pennsylvania avenue, $600.

Mr. BENJAMIN said: I find that we have already "swung around the circle" to the extent of $1,000 in a previous portion of the bill, as will be seen by the following clause:

For taking care of the Circle on Pennsylvania avenue, $1,000.

I therefore move to strike out the clause just read.

The question was taken; and upon a division, there were—ayes 20, noes 30; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BENJAMIN and Mr. RICE, of Maine, were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes seven; noes not counted.

So the motion to strike out was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For painting the iron fences around La Fayette square, in front of the War and Navy Departments, in front of the Executive Mansion, and the Government portion of the fence around Judiciary square, $10,000.

Mr. GRINNELL. I move to reduce the appropriation in this clause to $5,000. I understand the Committee on Appropriations consent to that.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For new crossings on Pennsylvania avenue, $10,000.

Mr. GRINNELL. I move to amend by striking out "$10,000" and inserting "$5,000."

The question was taken; and upon a division, there were—ayes 27, noes 30; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GRINNELL and Mr. FARNSWORTH were appointed.

The committee again divided; but Mr. FARNSWORTH reported that the tellers could not agree.

Other tellers were ordered; and Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. COOPER were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes forty-nine; noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. HAYES. I move to strike out the following:

For the purpose of having portraits of ex-Presidents of the United States, which have been executed under contract with the joint Committee of the Library of Congress, properly framed, $900, to be expended under direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

There is a fund already provided for that purpose.

The motion to strike out was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the register of deeds of the District of Columbia to pay for books of record furnished, and fitting necessary shelving in his office, $800.

Mr. UPSON. I move to amend by striking out the paragraph just read.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. SLOAN. I move to amend by inserting the following as a new paragraph.

That the Senate of the United States shall elect a Superintendent of Public Buildings, who shall hold his office for the term of four years and until his successor is elected, and shall perform all the duties now required to be performed by the Commissioner of Public Buildings; and the office of the Commissioner of Public Buildings is hereby abolished.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Smithsonian Institution:
For the preservation of the collections of the exploring and surveying expeditions of the Government, $4,000.

Mr. PATTERSON. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out the word "four," and inserting in lieu thereof "ten," so as to increase the appropriation to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Patent Office:
For expenses of receiving, arranging, and taking care of copyright books, charts, and other copyright matter, $1,800.

For preparing illustrations and descriptions for the report of the Commissioner of Patents, $10,000.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I desire to inquire of the chairman of the committee why these two appropriations should not be paid out of the Patent Office fund?

Mr. STEVENS. They always are.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. Will they be unless we so specify?

Mr. STEVENS. Perhaps it may be well to add a provision to that effect.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I move, then, to amend by inserting after the word "dollars" in each of these two appropriations the words "to be paid out of the Patent Office fund."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Columbian Institution for the Deaf and Dumb:
For the support of the institution, including $1,000 for books and illustrative apparatus, $25,000: Provided, That deaf mutes residing in the several States and Territories of the United States, applying for admission to the collegiate department of the institution, shall be received on the same terms and conditions as those prescribed by law for residents of the District of Columbia, at the discretion of the president.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to amend by adding at the end of the paragraph just read the words "of the institution."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveying the public lands in Dakota Territory, at rates not exceeding ten dollars per lineal mile for standard lines, seven dollars for township and six dollars for section lines, $10,000.

Mr. JULIAN. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out "ten" and inserting "fifteen," so as to increase the appropriation to $15,000.

Mr. KASSON. I move as an amendment to the amendment to insert after the word "Territory" the words "including the lands on the Red River of the North."

Mr. JULIAN. I accept that amendment as a modification of my amendment.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveying the public lands in Nebraska Territory, at rates not exceeding ten dollars per lineal mile for standard lines, six dollars for township and five dollars for section lines, $15,000.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I move to amend by striking out in the paragraph just read the word "Territory."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveying the public lands in Colorado Territory, at rates not exceeding fifteen dollars per lineal mile for standard lines, eight dollars for township and seven dollars for section lines, $15,000.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I move to amend by striking out in this paragraph the word "Territory."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the survey of the forty-second parallel of north latitude, so far as it constitutes the common boundary between the States of California and Oregon, estimated two hundred and twenty miles, at not exceeding sixty dollars per mile, $13,847.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the following:

For the survey of boundary line between the State of Oregon and the Territory of Idaho, commencing at the northern boundary of the State of Nevada and running north to its intersection at Snake river, estimated one hundred and sixty miles, at not exceeding sixty dollars per mile, $9,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Light-House Board be authorized to apply any unexpended balance which may remain after the completion of a light-house work on the Pacific coast to the construction of any other similar work upon the same coast, which may have been authorized by Congress, but for which the amount appropriated may prove insufficient.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to amend by adding at the end of the paragraph just read the following:

Provided, That no superintendent of lights whose compensation as collector of customs exceeds $3,000 per annum shall receive any compensation as disbursing agent for the Light-House Establishment, whether the sums disbursed by him be for articles to be used or services rendered within or without the limits of his superintendency or collection districts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the privilege of receiving and sending free, under proper frank, all official communications be granted to the chairman and secretaries of the Light-House Board.

Mr. KASSON. I move to amend by striking out the section just read. It is, perhaps, a little broader than it ought to be, and would, I think, in some form be more properly included in some Post Office appropriation bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the salary of the general appraiser in the city of New York shall be the same as that of the appraiser general of Boston.

Mr. MYERS. I move to amend by adding after the section just read the following:

To enable the joint Committee on the Library of Congress to purchase the bust of Pulaski, now in the old Hall of the House of Representatives, executed by the late Henry D. Saunders, $2,500.

Mr. Chairman, I intended to move this amendment on page 17, that being its proper place; and if it be adopted, as I hope it will, I trust it will find its proper position on that page.

The propriety of this appropriation can be explained in a very few words. In 1856 Henry D. Saunders, a celebrated sculptor, whose father was the intimate friend of Pulaski, and who afterward lost his life in the defense of his native Poland, executed, at the request of the joint Committee on the Library, a bust of Kosciusko, which was purchased by Congress for the Capitol. He was also asked to execute a bust of Pulaski, and to this end was given the possession of a room in this Capitol. The paintings from which he took his model were imported from Europe, and the busts themselves were executed from the very finest Carrara marble. The marble for the bust of Pulaski cost him $500. After he had executed his work he went to Europe and up to the time of his death frequently wrote for payment, but there was no appropriation for that purpose. His administrator now makes a similar request on behalf of his heirs, who really need the money. This bust stands in the old Hall of the House. I am not versed in these matters, but to my unartistic eye it seems that the sculptor has done his work in the most exquisite manner, and such seems to be the universal opinion. If for no other reason we ought not to fail in the possession of this bust, because it is that of one of the bravest defenders of this Government in its earliest days—the Polish patriot who lost his life in our cause before Savannah during our revolutionary struggle. The matter has been submitted to the joint Committee on the Library, and the petition and affidavit was referred some time since to the Committee on Appropriations, who do not deny the justice of the claim.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw his amendment for the present so that I may move one which comes before it.

Mr. MYERS. I withdraw it for that purpose.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move at the end of section five to add as follows:

And the salaries of assistant appraisers at Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, and San Francisco shall be $2,500 per annum.

The CHAIRMAN. This section is rendered necessary to remedy a defect in the law passed last year.

Mr. ROSS. Is this an increase?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. It adds $500 to their compensation. We added to all the other officers last year except to these, who were accidentally omitted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. I now renew my amendment for the payment of the bust of Pulaski.

Mr. CHANLER. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania what he supposes to be the value of this bust. It strikes me $2,500 is a very high price to pay for it.

Mr. MYERS. The Carrara marble itself cost $500. The bust was executed under the direction of Senator Pearce, of Maryland, and Job R. Tyson, of Philadelphia, members of the joint Committee on the Library in 1857, as a companion bust to that of Kosciusko. It was made double the-life size at their request, and exhibits exquisite workmanship, as the gentleman from New York who has an artistic taste will discover when he examines it. The work itself is of far greater value than the price we now propose to pay for it. It will be a most appropriate ornament for this Capitol as the bust of one of our country's most gallant defenders, worthy to be placed beside that of Kosciusko. In honoring the memory of these heroes the country does itself honor. I hope the amendment will prevail.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. NIBLACK. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to move the following amendment:

That the clerk of pardons in the Department of State be placed on the same footing in regard to compensation for extra services under the amnesty proclamation of the 29th of May, 1866, as the principal clerk of pardons in the Attorney General's office; and any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated is hereby appropriated for this purpose.

At the last session of Congress, after hearing all the evidence on the subject, and being satisfied of its propriety, we recommended there should be $2,000 for extra compensation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Clerk of the House of Representatives to select in Virginia, South Carolina, North Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, and Arkansas one or more newspapers, not exceeding in number the number of Representatives to which they would have severally been entitled by the apportionment based upon the census of 1860, in which treaties hereafter proclaimed and the laws passed at this and at each subsequent session of the Congress, and such advertisements as may be ordered by either Executive Department of the Government, according to law, or by any officer of the courts of the United States, for publication therein shall be published, the compensation for which, and other terms of publication, shall be fixed by said Clerk, at a rate not exceeding one dollar per square of eight lines of space, the accounts for which shall be adjusted by the proper accounting officers and paid in the manner now authorized by law in the like cases; and said Clerk shall, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, notify each head of the Executive Departments of the papers selected by him in accordance with the foregoing provisions; and thereupon and thereafter it shall be the duty of the several executive officers charged therewith to furnish to each of said papers an authentic copy of the publications to be made as aforesaid; and no money hereby or otherwise appropriated shall be hereafter paid for any publications or advertisements to be made as aforesaid otherwise than as herein provided.

Mr. KASSON. I rise for the purpose of moving to perfect the section. I move to strike out all after the word "sixty," in line eight, down to and including the words "published," in line thirteen, as follows:

In which treaties hereafter proclaimed and the laws passed at this and at each subsequent session of the Congress, and such advertisements as may be ordered by either executive department of the Government, according to law, or by any officer of the courts of the United States, for publication therein shall be published.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

In which such treaties and laws of the United States as may be ordered for publication in newspapers according to law shall be published, and in some one or more of which so selected, all such advertisements as may be ordered for publication in said districts by any United States court or judge thereof, or by any officer of such court or by any executive officer of the United States shall be published.

That amendment will make the section more perfect by requiring that all laws or treaties, even if heretofore passed or proclaimed respectively, shall be published as provided. The object sought to be accomplished is different to that expressed in the bill only to this extent, that if laws heretofore passed or treaties heretofore proclaimed shall be published they shall be published, in these papers, as well as those hereafter passed and proclaimed.

Mr. UPSON. What is the meaning of the word "districts?"

Mr. KASSON. Simply because it refers to the judges of courts, and they are assigned to districts. It is a mere geographical description.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. KASSON. I move to insert in line twenty before the words "executive department" the word "several."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I move to insert in the same line, after the word "department" the words "and each judge of a United States court therein."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I move to amend in line twenty-three by striking out the words "each of said" before the word "papers," and insert in lieu thereof "such selected."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I move to amend in line twenty-seven by striking out the words "as aforesaid," and inserting in lieu thereof "in said districts."

These amendments are merely designed to perfect the section and make it consistent.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NIBLACK. I move to strike out the whole section.

Mr. HILL. Before the question is taken on striking out, I move to amend the section by inserting after the word "in," in line three, as follows, "the several States, including;" and after the word "which," in line six, as follows: "those now represented in Congress are entitled and those unrepresented," and strike out the word "they" immediately following; so that it will read:

That it shall be the duty of the Clerk of the House of Representatives to select in the several States, including Virginia, South Carolina, North Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, and Arkansas, one or more newspapers, not exceeding in number the number of Representatives to which those now represented in Congress are entitled, and those unrepresented would have severally been entitled, by the apportionment based upon the census of 1860.

The object of my amendment is to make the publication of the laws uniform throughout the United States. The bill, as it now stands, authorizes the Clerk of the House of Representatives to designate in certain States the newspapers in which the laws shall be published. I can see no reason why the same authority should not be vested in the Clerk in regard to other States as well as in these. Under my amendment the Clerk will be authorized to designate in all the States the newspapers in which the laws shall be published.

Mr. KASSON. I could not hear very distinctly the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana; but I understand its object to be to embrace other States than those provided for in the bill.

Mr. HILL. It embraces all the States.

Mr. KASSON. To that the Committee on Appropriations determined to object in order to confine the question to those States which have no representation on this floor. There are Representatives here from the other States, and probably in two years from now there will be Representatives here from these States who will be able to regulate these matters in the usual mode.

I trust, sir, we shall not change the system as it regards the loyal States. There is no demand for such a change, no call for it.

Mr. GRINNELL. I would ask my colleague why he proposes by this amendment to have the laws published in nine papers in Virginia when they are only published in two papers in Iowa?

Mr. KASSON. I think the answer to that question is very plain. In the first place, this amendment does not provide that the laws shall be published in all the districts, but simply that they shall be published in such papers, not exceeding the number of districts, as the Clerk of the House may prescribe.

A second reason is that the loyal papers in the South are struggling for life to-day; they are struggling to carry Union sentiment into the South, and as we are in the habit of publishing the laws in more than two papers in other States, we ought to extend the same privilege to the papers of these States, under a selection to be made by the Clerk of the House.

Let me say further that there is no rebel State which has a paper in each district known to be loyal and adhering to the Union in the sense which was understood during the war and since the war. We provide, therefore, that the laws of the United States shall be published in papers in these States to be selected by the Clerk, not exceeding the number of representative districts.

Mr. HILL. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word, and I do it for the purpose of replying to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Kasson.] I appreciate the motives of the gentleman, and I am as anxious to encourage the publication of these advertisements in the loyal papers of the South as he can be; but while that is true, I understand the object of this provision to be to take the appointing power in this matter from where it now exists, and where it is used to crush out loyal sentiment in the northern States—in the States that have put down the rebellion—and to foster in the southern and disloyal States disloyal sentiment, and to give it to an officer of this House, who will use it in such a way as to develop the loyal sentiment in the South, if such exist.

Now, I think that that is a worthy object; but it is no more worthy than to encourage the loyal sentiment in those States where loyalty has been the predominating element, where the Administration for which we are unfortunately responsible, and which we put in power, has turned upon us and is using its influence to crush us out; and by no means can it do it more effectually than by this means which we now propose to deprive it of.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the principle is a correct one, that the Clerk of this House should distribute this patronage, then I insist upon making a clean sweep of it. Let us put this patronage for the whole country in the hands of a man who will stand by the Congress of the United States, instead of the Administration that has turned traitor to it.

Mr. CHANLER. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana opens a very fair field of inquiry on this side of the House as to what he means. The proposition is a very plain statement on the part of this Congress through the voice of its majority, that the distribution of patronage to the press of this country is not now to their liking. The amendment of the gentleman is intended to strike at those presses of the northern States which do not happen to utter the opinions peculiar to his party.

Now, sir, it is a matter of great indifference to the Democratic party of this country how the Secretary of State distributes his patronage. So far as I understand it, it cannot hurt any of the papers which represent pure Democratic sentiment at the North; but unless gentlemen intend to inaugurate a system similar to that established in Europe of regulating public opinion by inspecting the opinions of the press before they are issued to the country, they had better stop here and leave the press that freedom which it has enjoyed, at least at the North, except under the tinkling of the bell of the Secretary of State.

As a matter of revenge, the northern press, which has felt the hand of this gentleman, may be grateful for this amendment; but the effect of such a policy as this amendment inaugurates would be fatal to the very party to which the gentleman belongs, which assumes to be the special party of freedom in every department of life, in every section of the country, and among all colors. Certainly, sir, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. Stevens] cannot sustain any such amendment, and if gentlemen intend to carry on this assault upon the freedom of the press, North and South, if they intend to inaugurate this principle of suppressing the right to express opinions through the press, let us have it in some other form than this. Do not let it appear in the venal form of patronage, but advance upon the press upon some principle which will be worthy in itself, and which will not expose you to the charge of seeking to return yourselves to Congress by controlling the local press in each congressional district, through the Clerk of the House of Representatives, so as to make this body a perpetual organization.

Mr. HILL. If the gentleman will yield to me long enough, I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. CHANLER. No, sir. I will not yield. I am very glad that I have produced so much impression on the minds of members on the other side of the House.

Mr. HILL. I withdraw my amendment, as I see it creates so much opposition on the other side of the House.

Mr. KASSON. I desire but a single moment to say all that I have to say upon this question, and for that purpose I renew the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HILL.] I wish to say that the object of the Committee on Appropriations in this respect has not been a partisan object. The committee were informed that in the South papers notoriously adverse to Congress, and which are still filled with expressions of rebellious sentiments, have received this patronage under the present Administration. The object of the committee has been not to promote an increase of party patronage in the North as between loyal papers of diverse political opinions, but to insist that in the South the patronage of the Government, in all its branches, shall be used for the maintenance of loyal papers there, and not for the benefit of papers which have been through the war, and which still are, disloyal to the Union of the States and to all measures of reconstruction and reconciliation. That is the object of the recommendation of the committee, which I hope will not be loaded down with amendments but passed as it now stands.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate on this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. THAYER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 1173, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes; and had directed him to report that they had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 682) for the relief of Captain John J. Young, of the United States Navy;

An act (H. R. No. 820) for the relief of Henry S. Davis; and

An act (S. No. 467) to amend the act entitled "An act further to provide for the safety of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, to regulate the salaries of steamboat inspectors, and for other purposes," approved July 25, 1866.

IMPORTATION OF WINE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of State in relation to the importation of wines from Cadiz, Spain. The message was as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit to the House of Representatives, in answer to their resolution of the 14th instant, a report from the Secretary of State of this date.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, February 21, 1867.

The message and accompanying documents were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following communication from the Secretary of State:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON, February 22, 1867.

Sir: I have the honor to inform you that the President has this day transmitted to this Department and directed to be filed two acts of Congress which had been presented to him for his approval, and which, not having been returned by him to the House of Congress, in which they originated within the time prescribed by the committee, have become laws without his approval. The titles of those laws are as follows:

An act to regulate the duties of the Clerk of the House of Representatives in preparing for the organization of the House, and for other purposes; and

An act to declare the sense of an act entitled "An act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermasters' stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States."

Both of these acts are indorsed by the President as having been received on the 9th of February, 1867. They became laws, therefore, on the 19th of February, 1867, and will accordingly be officially promulgated as such.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Hon. SCHUYLER COLFAX, Speaker House of Representatives.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that this communication be printed and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

INCREASED PAY OF ARMY OFFICERS.

On motion of Mr. SCHENCK, by unanimous consent, the bill of the Senate No. 592, to provide for a temporary increase of the pay of officers in the Army of the United States, and for other purposes, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that when the House again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order, all debate upon the pending bill be closed in five minutes.

Mr. NIBLACK. I hope the gentleman will make it ten minutes.

Mr. STEVENS. Very well; I will change my motion so as to have debate closed in ten minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. THAYER in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 1173, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes.

The pending question was upon the motion of Mr. NIBLACK, to amend by striking out the sixth section.

Mr. NIBLACK. Mr. Chairman, we have on our statute-books, as has already appeared in this debate, an enactment regulating this matter of publishing the laws of Congress. These laws are to be published, I believe, in two newspapers in each State, to be selected by the Department of State; and for my own part I know of no reason why the same rule which is applied to other States should not apply to the States enumerated in this section. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Kasson] intimates that this publication has been made in papers which politically do not stand as they ought in the present emergency. Now, I do not know to what papers the gentleman refers, nor am I advised of the particular facts of the case; but I am satisfied of one thing: that the means at the disposal of the Secretary of State for ascertaining the political status of particular newspapers are as ample as any that may be at the command of the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

This, therefore, I take it, is nothing else than a mere contest as to the distribution of patronage, as to whether this Congress or the Department of State shall have that patronage. Now, sir, if Congress desires to have this patronage at its disposal, I insist that we ought to adopt the proposition of my colleague, [Mr. HILL,] which proposes to take this patronage away from the Secretary of State entirely. If you allow him to select the newspapers in a portion of the States, it appears to me that he should be permitted to select them in the States named in this section. Legislation upon an important question like this should not be regulated according to transient political emergencies and mere personal considerations. This is not the proper policy for a body like the Congress of the United States.

The gentleman from Iowa intimates that certain newspapers of known loyalty ought to have the preference in the distribution of this advertising. Well now, sir, I concede that, all other things being equal, the antecedents and present status of a paper upon the question of loyalty ought to have much weight in this matter; but, sir, there are other questions involved in this matter of publishing the laws; and among these is the amount of circulation of the paper. I understand that the object of publishing the laws is that the people may be informed of the provisions of these laws. I do not care how loyal a paper may be, if it has no circulation it is simply a mockery to publish the laws in that paper. This is a business transaction in which many matters ought to be considered; and I think that the Department of State is just as competent to exercise this authority as any other Department of the Government. This matter being already intrusted to that Department, I see no necessity for this sort of legislation.

The standard of "loyalty," Mr. Chairman, is a flitting standard. During the war every man and every paper that was in favor of enforcing the Constitution and laws and suppressing the rebellion was regarded as loyal. Now, however, that standard is not sufficient. To be regarded as loyal, a man or a newspaper must have advanced from that standard. It is not only necessary to be in favor of sustaining the Government according to a certain definition of what constitutes "sustaining the Government," but it is necessary to be in favor of reorganizing the States lately in rebellion and abolishing all distinction of race and color. If a paper does not come up to this standard, it is no longer regarded as loyal, whatever else it may have done, or whatever else it may advocate in regard to the present political condition of the country. Why, sir, I supposed the Secretary of State during the war was the very pink of loyalty. He insists that he has not changed his position, while gentlemen on the other side insist that he has. This may be an important question for the papers interested in getting this patronage; but I submit that it is not a question of sufficient gravity to engage the serious attention of this body. I insist, therefore, on my motion to strike out the whole section.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I move to amend the section by inserting before the word "Virginia" the words "in the State of Missouri and in;" so that the clause will read:

That it shall be the duty of the Clerk of the House of Representatives to select in the State of Missouri, and in Virginia, South Carolina, North Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, and Arkansas, one or more newspapers, &c.

All I want to say in regard to this is that this section should apply to the State of Missouri. It is true, most of the disloyal journals of that State are selected as the vehicles by which the laws of Congress are promulgated to the people. Papers are selected whose proprietors have fought in the rebel army and been captured as prisoners of war by the United States forces. I trust, therefore, that the State of Missouri shall be included in this bill as one of those to which the provisions of this section shall apply.

Mr. KASSON. I should be glad to extend this patronage to the loyal journals in the States known as loyal States. I admit there are disloyal journals in Missouri as well as in Kentucky, but these States are represented upon this floor, and I thank God if not entirely, yet are in large part, loyally represented here, which shows that the people there are already acquainted with the public laws and proceedings of the United States both in their legislative and executive departments, and that they support their loyal papers already. But in the rebel States, where loyal papers are struggling for existence, these advertisements should only be given to the papers which give a fair representation of the United States Government and advocate Union sentiments. It is an outrage to give them to rebel sheets, hostile to the Union during the war and disloyal still, to the exclusion of the organs of Unionism. The committee, as I think wisely, have desired to steer clear of the question of patronage in the loyal States, but to require the laws and proceedings of the executive and legislative departments of the Government to be published in the papers in the rebel States not dyed all over with the crimson of rebellion. The committee thought it right to go into those rebel States and to require that the advertisements of the Government shall be published only in the papers friendly to it, and which will give a correct exposition of them to the people. I hope, therefore, the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri will not prevail.

There is another reason. It is said that it is proposed to publish all the laws since 1861 in the rebel States, inasmuch as they were not published there pending the war; and it is necessary we should act as promptly and clearly on this subject as possible in order to secure the publication of the laws in the rebel States in thoroughly Union papers.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 69.

So the amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move in the twenty-seventh line to insert before the word "otherwise" these words: "nor shall any such publish the advertisements to be ordered by any Department or public officer."

The amendment was agreed to.

The question then recurred on Mr. NIBLACK's amendment: and it was disagreed to.

Mr. NIBLACK. I move in the second line, after "House of Representatives" to insert "and Secretary of the Senate." If Congress is to control this matter both Houses ought to have a hearing.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. LAFLIN. I move the following as an additional section:

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That all laws, resolutions, advertisements, and notices of every description, (excepting the weekly letter list,) emanating from the President of the United States, Post Office Department, or any other executive department, bureau, or office thereof, whether they have been heretofore authorized by law or are discretionary with said departments, or bureaus, or offices, which shall be published within the District of Columbia, shall be published in the two daily papers of the city of Washington having the largest permanent daily circulation, and in none other, under any pretense whatever, the charges for such publications not to be higher than such as are paid by individuals for advertising in said papers, said circulation to be ascertained annually in the manner provided by section six of "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending the 30th day of June, 1867, and for other purposes," approved May 18, 1866, and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this enactment are hereby repealed. And any officer of the Government who shall, under any pretense or order, pay any claims for compensation in violation of the provisions of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not exceeding $1,000, and imprisoned in the penitentiary for a period of not less than six months and not over three years.

Mr. LE BLOND. I rise to a question of order: that this is new and independent legislation, and is not in order in a general appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I move the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to George W. Ashburn the sum of $3,833 37, in full for his equal part of the proceeds of certain property seized and condemned as the property of one Frederick Stuart, in the year 1863, in the State of Tennessee.

Mr. KASSON. I make the point of order that amendment is not in order, as it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ARNELL. I move to amend by inserting in line three of section six, after the word "in" the word "Tennessee."

Mr. STEVENS. It is too late to go back to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I move to add the following at the end of the last section:

For extra services of Alexander M. Kercher, John K. Vernon, Patrick Kilfoye, Michael Rynders, John McNally, John McCarty, Peter Call, and William McKenzie, at the Executive Mansion during the administration of President Lincoln, $100 each, $800.

I would like to explain this.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is closed.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I withdraw it.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. THAYER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1173, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House, with sundry amendments thereto.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Speaker, I believe it is not the wish of the House to come here for business to-night.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I would like to have the final action on the tax bill.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the House meet for the purpose of considering for debate only, House bill No. 63, on the subject of confiscation.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I object to anything which will interfere with the order concerning the indemnity bill.

The SPEAKER. That bill must be taken up whenever the House again meets for business.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the tariff bill will not be put off.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Mr. Speaker, if a motion to adjourn is now made that will dispose of the evening session, I believe.

The SPEAKER. If that motion is carried before half past four o'clock there will then be no evening session.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Then I move to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's colleague [Mr. STEVENS] has the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. I make the motion to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking up the confiscation bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Can the regular order be set aside?

The SPEAKER. Any order can be set aside by suspending the rules.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. STEVENS, it was not agreed to—ayes 48, noes 58.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I now move that the House adjourn.

The question being put, there were—ayes 55, noes 55.

The SPEAKER. The Chair votes in the negative.

Mr. PIKE. I call for the yeas and nays.

On ordering the yeas and nays there were—ayes fifteen, not one fifth of the members present.

Mr. ANCONA. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. PIKE and ANCONA.

Mr. CONKLING. I desire to ask if the yeas and nays are ordered and the call is not completed when the hour for the recess arrives, whether the House will not take a recess at the close of the call?

The SPEAKER. If the roll-call commences and is in process at half past four o'clock it must then be completed; and if a majority votes to adjourn the House will adjourn.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes twenty-seven.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk called the first name on the roll and received an answer.

Mr. CONKLING. I rise to a privileged motion, that when the House adjourns it adjourns to meet on Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER. That is a privileged motion, but the Clerk informs the Chair that he has commenced the roll-call and received a response.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 49, nays 77, not voting 64; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Baker, Benjamin, Bergen, Boyer, Campbell, Chanler, Cobb, Cooper, DeForest, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farquhar, Finck, Glossbrenner, Abner C. Harding, Harris, Hise, Edwin N. Before the vote was announced,

Mr. NIBLACK asked unanimous consent to make an inquiry of the Chair as to what would be the order of business in the evening.

The SPEAKER. As the House refuses to adjourn, the Chair will state that the first business in order will be the consideration of the amendments made by the Committee of the Whole to the miscellaneous appropriation bill, which has been reported to the House. The next business in order will be the indemnity bill, on which one hour of debate is to be had, and then the vote is to be taken without further debate or dilatory motion. Then comes the morning hour for private bills from the Committee for the District of Columbia. After that comes the consideration of the tax bill in the Committee of the Whole.

The hour of half past four o'clock having arrived during the roll-call, the House took a recess till half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution (S. R. No. 90) to provide for the ascertainment and apportionment of the proper quota of the direct tax of 1861 to the State of West Virginia, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the consideration of House bill No. 1173, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, which has been reported, with sundry amendments, from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STEVENS. I call the previous question on the bill and amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I ask for a separate vote upon all amendments which increase appropriations or which make new appropriations. The Clerk read the amendments.

All the amendments made in the Committee of the Whole were concurred in except the following, upon which separate votes were demanded:

The first amendment on which a separate vote was demanded by Mr. SCOFIELD was to insert on page nine after line one hundred and ninety-five the following:

For a light-house at Trowbridge Point, in Thunder Bay, Michigan, $10,000.

For a light-house at Mendota, on Lake Superior, Michigan, $14,000.

For a light-house at or near Braddock's Point, Georgia, in place of Caliboque light-vessel, $15,000.

For a light-house to mark Combahee Bark, Georgia, in place of Combahee light-house, $15,000.

For a light-house to mark Tybee Knoll, Georgia, in place of light-vessel, $15,000.

For a range of lights on Morris Island as guides in crossing Charleston bar, South Carolina, $15,000.

For rebuilding light-house on Deep Water shoals, on James river, Virginia, $16,281 73.

For rebuilding light-house, tower, and keeper's dwelling at St. Simons, Georgia, $45,000.

For rebuilding Sapelo light-house and beacons, Georgia, $15,000.

For building three light-houses and buoy steam-tenders, $100,000.

The question being put on concurring in the above amendment of the Committee of the Whole, there were—ayes 21, noes 25; no quorum voting.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER, having counted the House and reported no quorum present, ruled that a call of the House was in order.

Mr. ALLISON. Will it be in order to pass over these amendments on which a separate vote is demanded and act on the others?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] demands a division.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I will not call for a division on anything except appropriations, which—

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I thought the Chair appealed to me.

Mr. FINCK. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was disagreed to—ayes 23, noes 34.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. If the call for a division is withdrawn, will it then be in order to proceed to other business?

The SPEAKER. It would be by unanimous consent.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I undertook to state a moment ago that I would be glad to withdraw the call if any other business than the appropriation bill could be taken up. I cannot consent to pass these large appropriations with less than a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. A call of the House is in order.

The motion of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, that there be a call of the House, was agreed to.

The roll was accordingly called, and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Alley, Anderson, Delos B. Ashley, Barker, Bidwell, Blaine, Blow, Boyer, Brandegee, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Culver, Darling, Davis, Delano, Deming, Dennison, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Farnsworth, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Hart, Hawkins, Higby, Hogan, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rogers, Ross, Schenck, Stilwell, Strouse, Nathaniel G. Taylor, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trowbridge, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Windom, Winfield, Woodbridge, and Wright.

The SPEAKER. More than a quorum has answered to their names.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. TROWBRIDGE is confined to his room this evening in consequence of indisposition. I ask that he be excused from attendance this evening.

No objection was made.

Mr. FERRY. My colleague, Mr. DRIGGS, is still confined to his bed by illness.

Mr. EGGLESTON. My colleague, Mr. DELANO, is detained at his room by indisposition. I ask that he be excused from attendance this evening.

No objection was made.

Mr. HILL. I ask that my colleague, Mr. DUMONT, be excused from attendance this evening on account of ill health.

No objection was made.

The House resumed the consideration of the amendments of the Committee of the Whole to the miscellaneous appropriation bill.

The pending question was upon the amendment in relation to light-houses, upon which no quorum had voted before the call of the House.

The question was again taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment upon which a separate vote had been demanded by Mr. SPALDING, was to insert the following clause:

For construction of a bridge over the Mississippi river at Rock Island arsenal, $25,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War; said bridge to be free to public travel, and the railroad company to pay at least one half the cost of superstructure.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 25, noes 71.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. PRICE called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PRICE and Mr. SPALDING were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes twenty, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment upon which a separate vote had been demanded by Mr. STEVENS was to insert the following:

For the removal of sunken wrecks in the channel of Providence river, off Pawtucket bar, and widening the channel at the "Crooks" so called, $25,000.

For removal of obstructions in the channel of the Pawtucket river, $17,000.

For the removal of wrecks in the Mississippi river, $40,000.

The question was taken; and upon a division, there were—ayes 26, noes 66; no quorum voting.

Mr. JENCKES called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. JENCKES and Mr. BUNDY were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes twenty-seven, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment, upon which a separate vote had been demanded by Mr. STEVENS, was to insert the following at the close of line two hundred and fifty-six of the bill:

Provided That in the expenditure of this and the succeeding items in this section, to be disbursed by or under the supervision of said Commissioner of Public Buildings, no portion of the funds so appropriated shall be reserved to pay for his services as poet-laureate of the Administration.

The question was taken; and the amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment, upon which a separate vote had been demanded by Mr. SCOFIELD, was to insert the following:

To enable the Commissioner of Public Buildings to put in thorough repair the conservatory recently injured by fire at the President's Mansion, $10,000.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 55, noes 42.

So the amendment was adopted.

The next amendment, upon which a separate vote had been demanded by Mr. STEVENS, was to add the words "to be employed by the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives" to each of the following classes:

For compensation of laborer to take care of the heating apparatus of the Library of Congress, $600.

For compensation to three watchmen on the Dome of the Capitol, $2,700.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope that all this nonsense will be struck out of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order; the House is now acting under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. STEVENS. I mean by that that I have asked for a separate vote on this amendment and hope it will be voted down.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment, upon which a separate vote had been demanded by Mr. STEVENS, was to insert the following:

For removing the unsightly iron fence or inclosure which has been put up in the old Hall of Representatives in the Capitol, $100.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment, upon which a separate vote had been demanded by Mr. SCOFIELD, was to insert the following:

To enable the joint Committee on the Library of Congress to purchase the bust of Pulaski, now in the old Hall of the House of Representatives, executed by the late Henry D. Saunders, $2,500.

The question was taken upon agreeing to the amendment; and upon a division, there were—ayes 46, noes 46; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SCOFIELD and Mr. COOPER were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 51, noes 48.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The last amendment, on which a separate vote was demanded by Mr. STEVENS, was at the end of line three hundred and ninety to add the following:

That the Senate of the United States shall elect a Superintendent of Public Buildings, who shall hold his office for the term of four years and until his successor is elected, and shall perform all the duties now required to be performed by the Commissioner of Public Buildings; and the office of Commissioner of Public Buildings is hereby abolished.

On agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 70, noes 34.

Mr. GLOSSBRENNER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 76, nays 49, not voting 65; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullem, Dawes, Delano, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Eggleston, Farquhar, Ferry, Grinnell, Abner C. Harding, Henderson, Hill, Holmes, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Washburne, Windom, Winfield, Woodbridge, and Wright—65.

So the amendment was adopted.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 590) for the relief of William Mann and Jacob Senneff; and

An act (H. R. No. 1188) for the relief of James Tetlow.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill (H. R. No. 746) for the organization of land districts in the Territories of Arizona, Idaho, Utah, and Montana, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 811) for the relief of certain drafted men.

INDEMNITY BILL.

The SPEAKER. The House now agreeably to order resumes, under the operation of the previous question, the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 859) to declare valid and conclusive certain proclamations of the President, and acts done in pursuance thereof, or of his orders, in the suppression of the late rebellion against the United States. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is entitled to an hour to close the debate.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Before yielding to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. HISE,] I desire to suggest by the authority of the committee, two or three slight amendments, to which I think there will be no objection.

In line eighteen, after the word "aforesaid" insert the words "or in aid thereof."

In line thirty-two, after the word "pursuance" insert the words "or in aid."

In line thirty-five, after the words "United States" insert the words "or who acted in aid thereof."

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, these amendments will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am now ready to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. HISE.] How much time does he desire?

Mr. HISE. I desire to inquire how much time is to be allowed for discussion.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have already stated that I propose to allow three quarters of an hour to gentlemen on the other side. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that any arrangement which he may have made with his friends will be satisfactory to me. If he has made any arrangement I am ready to yield in accordance with it.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman from Kentucky desire?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. As I do not get any statement with reference to any arrangement among gentlemen on the other side, I will for the present yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky; and if at the end of that time no objection shall be made from that side I will yield further.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I believe it has been understood, so far as I know, that the gentleman from Kentucky should have half an hour.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Very well, I agree to that.

Mr. HISE. Mr. Speaker, I should not desire to speak at all if I did not have the attention of the House, or of such part as remain in their seats. Besides, I do not desire to occupy the time of the House at all in the discussion of this measure provided there be other gentlemen on this side who wish the whole of the time. I will yield at any time to any gentleman on this side who wishes to occupy any portion of the time.

Mr. McKEE. I should like to have ten minutes.

Mr. HISE. Mr. Speaker, I will state what I understand to be the substance of this bill without taking the time to read it to the House. I understand this bill in substance to provide indemnity for all the violations of law, all the crimes committed, all the murders, imprisonments, burnings, rapes, and plunderings unlawfully committed during the progress of the war, or from the year 1861 to 1865, under the authority of any order of the President of the United States, any proclamation or any act of his, or by his authority, whether done by individuals or through the instrumentality of military tribunals, or courts or commissions constituted for the purpose of trying offenders. Now, sir, if the Congress of the United States possesses the constitutional power to pass a bill of this description then I have to acknowledge that all the principles and views I have entertained and which have been instilled into my mind by the teachings and education, small as it may be, which I have had in our system of jurisprudence, I mean the American system of jurisprudence, will be shocked and unsettled.

I look upon this bill as one of a series of measures that have been passed by Congress heretofore, passed during the last session of Congress, and which have been passed or reported during this Congress, the design of which, taking them as a whole, is in my opinion calculated, if not designed, to subvert constitutional government in this country altogether; calculated, if not designed, to establish a Government in which Congress shall be sovereign and supreme, without restraint or control by the Constitution of the United States. In other words, it is a bill which, in connection with others, if they are all passed and consummated and stand the test of the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States, will result in the entire subversion of free and constitutional government in this country.

I observed they shocked all the notions and views I have imbibed as the result of my education in the science of jurisprudence. I had reference to American jurisprudence especially, because all our laws are the proceeds and results of the constitutions of government of the States and of the United States; and the doctrine obtains without controversy and is acknowledged by all lawyers who regard their character and reputation, that these constitutions, Federal and State, are the supreme law, the fundamental law, and there is no authority existing in any of the functionaries of government, whether executive, legislative, or judicial, to assume to usurp the exercise of any power in contravention of these constitutions of government. And the necessity of this principle in countries which have Governments created and formed and regulated by constitutions, the necessity of the observance of that principle is shown by the fact that liberty, civil and religious liberty, cannot long exist without.

Not long since a bill was passed by which the power of the executive department of the Government under the Constitution of the United States was partially overthrown; its due power and function partially invaded by depriving the President of his rightful authority in respect to appointments and removals in the Executive Departments. For if the power of the head of the executive government, under our constitutional system over the subject of appointments and removals of subordinate and inferior administrative officers, be hampered and limited improperly by the legislative branch of the Government, the powers of the Government to that extent are crippled. It is clearly in violation of the Constitution of the United States, and contrary to the true design of the Government created by that Constitution.

Not long since another measure was passed by this House called the Army appropriation bill. By the second section of that bill the power and authority of the head of the executive government of the United States over one arm at least of his department under the Constitution of the United States was taken away and destroyed. The second section of that bill, if offered as an amendment, would have been ruled out of order in being tacked upon an appropriation bill, with which it had no reasonable connection. Nevertheless it was reported in the Army appropriation bill, stripping the Executive, as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, of all power to issue the necessary orders for the government and action of the military forces of the United States, except through the General of the Army, who, regardless of the will of the President and his paramount authority over him, is to be permanently stationed in Washington.

It is provided by the bill that the President should be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor in office if he should issue an order to any general or subordinate officer holding command of any portion of the Army of the United States. It is provided, moreover, that any officer who would carry instructions or orders from the President to the commander of any portion of the Army should be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor, if not of a felony, and should be liable to indictment and trial and punishment by fine and imprisonment. These provisions in substance deprive the President of his rightful and constitutional authority as Commander-in-Chief of the Army of the United States; because the General of the Army might, and no doubt would, demur and refuse to execute the orders of the President at his discretion, and thus the inferior would be made the superior in regard to the control of the Army. And no doubt the gentleman who introduced this bill, and the majority of the House who supported it, were advised that the General of the Army and the President of the United States would differ in opinion as to the policy to be pursued with respect to the control and the use to be made of the Army of the United States; so that they intended by this bill to deprive the President of his constitutional power as Commander-in-Chief.

That bill also provides that the General of the Army shall remain in Washington and act, in substance, as Commander-in-Chief, and forbids the President to send him to any other station or upon any service that would require his absence from this city.

Now, sir, when you have crippled the President's power of appointment, and crippled also, nay, taken away, his powers as Commander-in-Chief of the Army of the United States, have you not substantially destroyed the executive department of the Government as constituted, and thus paralyzed this barrier to congressional usurpations?

And when these things are done their effect is not limited to a divestation of the constitutional functions and powers of the present incumbent of the presidential office; nor do the advocates of these destructive measures excuse themselves on the ground merely that they are politically opposed to the existing President. By their support of these measures they stand committed to doctrines of public policy by which the executive department, its independence and its constitutional character and powers are destroyed, regardless of who may at any time hereafter fill the presidential office.

Now, the Executive was made independent of the legislative department of the Government for most important reasons and purposes; as can be readily seen by any gentleman who will consult the Madison Papers and read the discussions with regard to the objects and motives that the wise framers of the Constitution had in view in separating the powers of Government, and making the different departments of it measurably independent of each other.

Turn to the judicial department, and we find the same relative independence secured to it by the Constitution, and for the same reasons. But we find here the same design on the part of this Congress to destroy that independence and to make themselves supreme, above both the executive and the judiciary departments, and above the Constitution itself.

This same Judiciary Committee have reported a bill by which it is provided that whenever the constitutionality of a law of Congress is brought in question in any case pending before the Supreme Court, or any other court of the United States, such law of Congress shall not be declared to be unconstitutional except by the agreement in that opinion of every judge upon the bench of that court.

By that provision the efficiency and power of the judicial department for all beneficial ends and purposes is destroyed. A court, although composed of more than one judge—composed say of nine judges, as is the Supreme Court of the United States, must nevertheless be regarded and act as a unit, and the opinions of the majority must of necessity be the judgment of the court. A high court of errors and appeals, like our Supreme Court, is properly and wisely composed of nine men or more, in order that the wisdom and learning and experience of several minds may be brought to bear upon the great questions that come before them for decision. But although composed of many members, the court to be efficient must be a unit, and whenever a majority of them pronounce a judgment it must be regarded as the judgment of the court.

It is revolutionary to provide by a law of Congress that the Supreme Court of the United States shall be controlled in its judgment by a minority. The apparent design upon the face of such a law is to give the minority control of and rule over the majority of the court, provided the majority of the court have indicated their opinion in opposition to the policy and measures inaugurated by the legislative branch of the Government. If the majority of the court are opposed upon constitutional grounds to innovations and usurpations on the part of the legislative branch of the Government they are to be controlled by the veto of any one member of the court upon the judgment of the majority.

Thus it will always be in the power of a designing and corrupt Congress, of a Congress that entertain deliberate purpose and plan to overthrow constitutional government and deprive the States of their reserved rights and the people of their civil and religious liberty, to control the judiciary by conspiring with one, two, or three corrupt men upon the bench, who will veto the decisions and opinions of the majority of the court, and give the powers of pronouncing final judgments to the minority of judges.

Now, observe that by the second section of this Army appropriation bill you make it a grave offense for the President to transmit an order through a subordinate officer of the Army to any general commanding any portion of the Army; you make it a penal offense, punishable by fine and imprisonment, for any person to carry or communicate any such order.

Now, suppose a case of that kind was to come up and a prosecution should be instituted against a subordinate officer for carrying an order from the President, as the constitutional Commander-in-Chief of the Army, to a general in the field without communicating it through the General-in-Chief of the Army located here in Washington; suppose a man should be indicted for that; upon the trial of the indictment the question would come up as to the constitutionality of that second section of the Army appropriation bill. That it is grossly and manifestly a violation of the Constitution of the United States no sane man who is a lawyer doubts for a moment. He cannot doubt it, because it deprives the President of his power as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and lodges it substantially in a subordinate General of the Army. When the question comes up for trial, it will be asked where is the law that makes it penal for the President to transmit an order to a general of the Army in the field?

This second section of the Army appropriation bill will be referred to, and the court looking at the section will pronounce it without hesitation to be a nullity, not authorized by the Constitution of the United States, and that the man indicted was merely the messenger through whom the President, as he had the constitutional power to do, transmitted an order to a general of the Army in the field commanding him to perform this, that, or the other military operation. The majority of the court decide that law to be unconstitutional, which is the judgment of the court; but this bill will put it in the power of one judge to condemn that man to prison and inflict a heavy pecuniary penalty upon him against the judgment of the other eight judges, provided there be one judge upon the bench who is a menial, plastic instrument in the hands of a usurping majority in Congress to overthrow constitutional government.

Sir, it is manifest that this Congress are inaugurating and carrying out and passing by a party majority a system of measures to overthrow and subvert our Constitution and form of government. And they do it for what? They do it for the purpose of justifying themselves in instituting a military despotism over ten States of the Union and disfranchising eight or ten million people for the purpose in fact, as it will turn out in the end, of depriving every man of the liberty of speech who differs with them and does not subscribe to their measures and doctrines and go with them for the establishment of a despotic government to be controlled by the radical majority of Congress.

This determined purpose of the majority of Congress to perpetuate their own power was openly confessed by a gentleman from Tennessee and a gentleman from New York in their speeches here. They confessed that their design and purpose was to hold these people of the South under military dominion and rule, not alone until they were obedient to law, but until their souls were enslaved, until the government of those States were put into the hands of the radical Republicans, until not only the officers of the State governments, but the Representatives in Congress, were of the party whose blood and treasure were expended to subdue them. Now, sir, in regard to enslaving the minds of those people that cannot be done. You have dispersed their armies, effectually suppressed the insurrection, and all armed and organized resistance to the authority of the Government of the United States, and the Constitution and laws thereof has been quelled and removed. And because you have hatched up a great variety of false statements in regard to the inefficiency of the judicial tribunals of that portion of the country to suppress the commission of crimes, because occasional offenses are committed there as they are everywhere, you make that a pretext for instituting this military authority over them, which is to be continued, upheld, and maintained until all those States fall into the hands of negroes and Radicals as voters, as officers of the State governments, and as their representatives in both the State and national Legislatures. That is the design and purpose as professed by many gentlemen on the other side of the House.

Now, in order to accomplish that object and purpose, and to keep those States in that unconstitutional condition, it will be necessary for you to get rid of the power and independence of the other two departments of the Government. And how do you propose to do that? The power of the executive department of the Government is to be crippled by taking away from the President the command of the armies of the United States and substantially vesting the control of the Army in the General-in-Chief, whom I suppose you understand to be with you in political opinions.

And the judicial department of the Government is to be crippled by taking away from the Supreme Court of the United States the power which they have always possessed and exercised. You propose to give to a minority of one judge on the supreme bench the power to decide between A and B against the opinion of the majority. And how do you propose to do that? By providing that not less than the whole number of the judges of that court shall have the right to pronounce any act of Congress unconstitutional. Suppose the validity of an act of Congress is involved in the trial of a person charged with crime; and the result of that question of validity is to determine the rights of that person for good or evil, for punishment or discharge, for life or death. The decision of the question must result one way or the other in reference to the party on trial. Suppose he has been indicted for murder under a law of Congress which is clearly unconstitutional. The court below decides that the law is constitutional and that the party should be condemned as guilty. The case is brought up before the Supreme Court of the United States, and there according to the provisions of the bill referred to, one judge may hold that the law is constitutional, and the man is hanged; although eight of the nine judges on the Supreme bench hold that the law is unconstitutional. All that may result provided the question of the validity of an act of Congress shall be involved in the trial of the case.

And these States are to be disfranchised. What an extraordinary thing is it to disfranchise States. A thing unknown to our Constitution, a thing actually prohibited by our theory of government. When a State has been admitted into the Union, and has become a party to the Federal compact between the States, that compact is irrevocable and cannot be broken but by violence. And it was because it could not rightfully be broken by the States which passed ordinances of secession you made war upon them. Otherwise, if they had the right to break the compact by secession, then you had no right to make war upon them for attempting so to do. It was because they attempted to do that which they could not lawfully do, and there arose in consequence an insurrection in those States against the Government of the United States, that the war was justifiable, if at all. On no other ground can the war waged by the Federal authority against those States be justified.

That war has been conducted to a successful issue. The principle has been maintained that when a State has once been admitted into the Federal Union it can never rightfully get out of the Union. It is true that by force of armies in the field for a time the execution of the laws of Congress and the enforcement of the Constitution of the United States may be prevented. For a time they may prevent the collection of the Federal taxes; and the governments of the States may be placed under the control of men who are opposed to the enforcement of the laws of the United States within their borders. But when that opposition is put down, when that resistance is overcome, then the doctrine of post limine applies and obtains. The Constitution and laws of the United States then flow over them again, flow of themselves over them. As the resistance diminishes and recedes the Constitution and laws flow up to the resistance, and flow on as it recedes, until when it is finally overcome and disappears the Constitution and laws overspread the whole country again, including all the States. And it is the whole Constitution and all the laws which flow over all the country again; requiring them to pay their taxes, obey the revenue and other laws, and send their Representatives to this House, and their Senators to the other branch of Congress. The whole of the Constitution and all the laws are again in force; not only that portion imposing obligations and duties, but that portion also creating and conferring rights upon these States.

The rebellion may be likened to the case of a dam obstructing the flow of water. For a time the flow is obstructed; but remove the dam and the waters again flow over the country as before. And thus when the obstruction to the enforcement of the Constitution and laws of the United States was removed those laws and that Constitution naturally flow over all those States again. They were obligatory, but not executed while the obstruction continued. But when the obstruction was removed they were not only obligatory, but they were enforced. Those laws have been and are now executed, and have not been resisted since the confederates' armies surrendered and were dispersed.

Mr. LOAN. I would be glad to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HISE] a single question.

Mr. HISE. I cannot be interrupted, for I have but little time allowed me in which to speak. I do not know, sir, who commits the breach of courtesy, if there be one, when a gentleman is stopped in the midst of his argument by another with an interrogation. It is put in a polite manner, I admit, and it may appear to be uncourteous to refuse to answer; but that game has been practiced upon me in such a manner heretofore as to deprive me of a great portion of my time. Besides, the questions generally amount to nothing, or are such as the speaker is proceeding to answer when interrupted.

Now, sir, all questions coming before the Supreme Court arise upon some case regularly presented. There must be parties litigant. There may be cases between two States. Such cases may involve questions of jurisdiction or of boundary. Such a case may very well arise out of the action of Congress and of the people, as in the case of West Virginia in forming a new State out of the territory of old Virginia, and its admission in the Union. That case will yet come before the Supreme Court at some future period. Cases in which States are the parties litigant necessarily come before that court in the first instances. In reference to such controversies the jurisdiction of that court is primary, not appellate.

Now, sir, it is proposed that in reference to grave questions of this nature coming before that court, involving the constitutionality of laws of Congress, the opinion of a majority of the court that the law in question is in conflict with the Constitution shall be of no avail if one member of the court dissents from that conclusion. Thus a minority of the court are to be allowed to decide questions affecting the rights and interests of the States of this Union. This would be the effect of the assault which the Judiciary Committee are proposing to inflict upon the independence and rightful jurisdiction of the judicial power of the Government.

Again, sir, in pursuance of the same species of legislation we have the bill now before us which proposes at one blow to strike down the whole authority and jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States, and all the State and territorial courts in regard to all the crimes, trespasses, robberies, and murders committed within the jurisdiction of the several States during the last five or six years. Congress proposes to deny to all the courts of the country the jurisdiction over these various crimes. What authority have we to pass such an act? Why, sir, the Supreme Court of the United States, much less Congress, which has no judicial power, has no right to assume jurisdiction over cases falling exclusively within the jurisdiction of the State courts. The jurisdiction and authority of the Supreme Court is specially and particularly defined in the Constitution of the United States. All other jurisdiction of every sort and description pertains of course to the local tribunals of the States. Yet, sir, where murder, robbery, arson, rape, or any other depredation such as characterized the conduct of a large portion of the Army of the United States in the southern States has been committed, as such crimes have been in hundreds and thousands of instances, this Congress assumes authority to blot out by a mere stroke of the pen all the jurisdiction rightfully belonging to the State courts to redress the injuries and wrongs which have been committed. Every act which has been done under any order or proclamation or other authority from the President of the United States; everything, however unlawful and criminal, which has been done by any court-martial or military commission during the whole period of time specified in the bill; every petty larceny, theft, highway robbery, arson, or murder committed by the soldiers of the Army of the United States, in any of the States, is to be blotted out. All these crimes are to be effaced and the jurisdiction of the State and Federal courts to grant redress or to impose punishment is to be taken away by a stroke of the pen upon a scrap of paper which this Congress passes through the customary legislative forms and calls a "law."

Now, sir, can such a thing be done? And if it can, ought it to be done? The army of a civilized nation does not do these things. An army whose officers were honorable men and gentlemen, having the training and feelings and principles of gentlemen, and that esprit du corps which characterizes the French, or even the British service, an army so officered would never have committed crimes like these. Nay, sir, when we look into our own Articles of War and the rules and regulations of the naval and military forces, we find in them no authority for plundering citizens, for arresting and murdering non-combatants, for committing any of the various depredations and crimes which attended and characterized the march of portions of the Army of the United States. And yet, sir, those depredations and crimes so committed are to be blotted out by the bill now before us.

Sir, a proposition like this, however it may appear to other gentlemen, would seem to me ridiculous, were it not for the greatness and solemnity of the interests involved. But it is in accord with other measures now pending before this Congress. We have now on our files a resolution proposing to declare that the President of the United States has no authority under the Constitution to issue a pardon for an offense before the offender has been indicted, tried, and convicted. Thus, by statutory declaration, it is proposed to contravene and overturn a constitutional provision by which the pardoning power is lodged exclusively in the hands of the President of the United States. That is a power which cannot be lawfully exercised by the Congress of the United States. It has under its control no particle of the pardoning power; it cannot pardon anybody. The power of the legislative department of this Government is exhausted when it passes laws defining misdemeanors and crimes and prescribing the punishments for violations of the laws which it enacts.

The Constitution has provided that the prerogative of mercy, the power of blotting out the penalty for offenses, shall be exercised by the President of the United States alone. That pardoning power of the President is plenary, full, without limitation or restriction; and as I have said, Congress does not possess, even to the smallest extent, this attribute of pardoning offenders. Yet it is gravely proposed by a resolution of this House to restrict the pardoning power confided to the hands of the President by the Constitution of the United States, and to say that that power shall not be exercised with reference to offenders until they shall first have been tried and convicted.

But this power which Congress, in contravention of the Constitution, proposes to deny to the President, it claims for itself; it claims the power to pardon criminals who have neither been tried nor indicted. That is the proposition of the bill before us, that all offenders and criminals who committed trespasses upon property, liberty, and life during the progress of the war, if they did it under pretense of authority from any officer of the United States, shall be pardoned. Why, sir, from what part of the Constitution does this Congress derive a right to exercise the pardoning power in this way?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky has now spoken forty-five minutes. His time has been extended fifteen minutes, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDRIDGE] informed the Chair during the progress of the gentleman's speech that such an arrangement had been made.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky be extended.

Several MEMBERS objected.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. McKEE.]

Mr. McKEE. Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to make any argument on this bill. Of course I could not do that in the time allotted to me. It is similar in some respects to a bill passed by this House and by the other branch of Congress at the last session, called the indemnity bill, in the formation of which I had some part, and if I may use the term, I regard it only as an appendix to that bill to supply some of its omissions and to cure some of its defects. It is an important measure, one necessary to the men who imperiled their lives in the defense of the Government, one eminently proper, one demanded, and one demanded in no part of this land more than in my own State. Now, sir, I have heard talk upon this floor such as I have heard elsewhere. I have heard the Federal Army denounced, and I have seen the men who served under the flag of their country hunted down and persecuted by the civil authorities of the State in which I reside. For these men this bill proposes the needed relief.

It is remarkable to me, it is a matter of astonishment at this day when loyalty has triumphed over treason, when rebellion has been crushed, and when the defenders of the nation's honor should be honored by all, that upon the floor of the nation's Congress a member of this body should rise in his seat and denounce the Army of the Union as thieves, robbers, and murderers, and guilty of all manner of outlawry. I understood my colleague [Mr. HISE] to say, and I did not misunderstand him, that the majority of the men in the Federal Army were guilty of all manner of violations of the law, and I understood his declaration to go even a little further, that in an Army commanded by gentlemen these things never would have occurred. I know this sentiment is common in all that land where treason has prevailed. I know it is the common theory of the men who inaugurated and sustained this rebellion that the loyal people who went forth to fight under the nation's banner were men without honor and without principle. And in these disloyal districts they are endeavoring to carry this idea into practice by fastening a stigma of dishonor upon the men who sustained the nation's flag in the day of its sore peril.

But, sir, I scorn this declaration of my colleague. It is a slander against the brave men who served in the Federal Army. A foul slander which the nation's Congress will repel; and the day will yet come when men guilty of this slander will reach their proper level. For what is this bill but to sustain the fair fame of the soldiers who in hundreds of bloody battlefields prevailed over the mean, devilish attempt to overthrow the free Government of the United States. What, sir, is this but a bill to save the soldiers of our noble armies against the malignant persecutions and prosecutions which threaten them every day and every hour. It is to protect these men, these loyal men, who are being driven by hundreds and thousands from the States they would gladly call their own.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's five minutes have expired.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. McKEE. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy, and I will make but one single additional remark. Sir, this thing of persecuting Union soldiers has been going on throughout the South and in my own State ever since the war ended and the rebels returned to their homes. The active war rebels and the stay-at-home sneaking ones are now united in this business. Hundreds and thousands of actions have been brought in the civil courts against these loyal men. Some men have hundreds of actions pending against them. No longer than last week, in the town of Danville, in the center of my State, a gallant officer of the Federal Army, famed during the war for distinguished and meritorious services, who, indeed is credited with the honor of having won the battle of Mill Springs, the gallant General Speed S. Fry, has been warned if he will not leave his home immediately death awaits him. If this bill be not passed what will be the result? Why, sir, that these brave men who did glorious battle for the Republic will be compelled to leave their homes. In Kentucky to-day the telegraph informs us two hundred men have been sent to Danville by that noble old hero, General Thomas, to protect the loyal people there against those men who would override all law and all justice and all right. We need this military protection which my colleague so denounces, and we will need it until this rebel tyranny is crushed out in order that loyal men may live in peace at their own firesides. And when this is done we need a law to vindicate the defenders of the Republic for their acts against traitors, and to prevent rebel courts, rebel juries, and men bewailing the "lost cause," by an organized plan through their Legislatures and courts, driving these brave men from a land which, if not now, must be open and free to all.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I have prepared some remarks on this subject, but as there is great anxiety on the part of our friends to get to the internal revenue bill I will waive their delivery, and only ask that they be printed as part of the debates.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I make a similar request.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly. [Their speeches will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I know the House is anxious to proceed to other business, and I do not propose to detain it either by an answer to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HISE,] or by an explanation of the pending measure. The bill itself is a sufficient answer to the remarks addressed against it, and those urged against other measures of course are not pertinent to this discussion. I now ask that the vote be taken.

Mr. COOPER. I ask whether, in the opinion of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, this bill precludes any supervisory authority on the part of the courts over any punishment inflicted heretofore by any military commission?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I answered last night that this bill deprived the civil courts of the country of all jurisdiction relative to past action under the orders of the proclamations of the President of the United States. The second clause of the bill will answer completely the gentleman's question. It is not the purpose of the committee in reporting this bill to leave to the civil courts jurisdiction over these past acts.

Mr. COOPER. The point I desired the gentleman's opinion upon is where the accused—

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman give me a case?

Mr. COOPER. Take one similar to the Milligan case.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If the gentleman will read the bill he will see it is intended to provide against just such action as we had in the Milligan case.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. A single question. Does the gentleman think Congress has the power to prevent a State court from taking jurisdiction of any of these cases? The language of the bill is "or of any State court."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The gentleman may be assured if I did not believe Congress had the power to pass this bill I would not have reported it.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. That is a very sensible answer, I suppose. [Laughter.]

The bill was ordered to be engrossed; and being engrossed, it was read the third time.

Mr. FINCK. I demand the yeas and nays on the passage.

Mr. COBB stated that Mr. McINDOE was absent on important business, but if present would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana, said that Mr. NIBLACK and Mr. HILL had paired; the former would have voted "no," and the latter "ay."

Mr. ALLISON said that Mr. WENTWORTH had been called home by sickness in his family; he would have voted in the affirmative.

The result having been announced as above recorded,

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE W. ASHBURN.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, obtained the floor, but yielded to

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, who asked unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the consideration of the bill for the relief of George W. Ashburn, and put it on its passage.

Resolved, That our Senators in Congress and our Representatives be requested by all proper and legitimate means to have such a survey made of both the Iowa and Illinois sides of said river on the Des Moines rapids, before the location of such canal, as to demonstrate clearly on which side of said river a canal can be constructed to the best advantage, taking into consideration the length of the canal, ease and expense of construction, advantages as well as obstructions to the free navigation of the river; that they also endeavor to obtain the location of said canal on this side of the river, if the same can be done at the same expense and will be of equal advantage to navigation as if constructed on the Iowa side of the river.

Resolved, That the Secretary of State forward to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress a copy of the foregoing resolution.

F. CORWIN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
WILLIAM BROSS,
Speaker of the Senate.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The call of States and Territories for bills and joint resolutions on leave, having been concluded, the next business in order during the morning hour is the call, in an inverted order, of States and Territories for House resolutions, commencing with the State of Wisconsin, where the call rested at the expiration of the morning hour of last Monday.

REDEMPTION OF BONDS HELD IN EUROPE.

Mr. BROMWELL. I offer the following resolution, upon which I call the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be, and is hereby, instructed to inquire into and report to this House the expediency of providing bylaw for the issuing of bonds of the United States to an amount not exceeding $500,000,000, bearing interest at the rate of five per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, and redeemable twenty years from date of issue; the principal and interest payable at such places in Europe as the Secretary of War may determine, and in the coin of the country where payable; said bonds when issued to be disposed of only in exchange for six per cent. interest-bearing bonds of the United States held in Europe.

EIGHT-HOUR SYSTEM OF LABOR.

Mr. CULLOM. I send to the Clerk's desk a resolution to be read, and I ask the attention of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. WILSON, of Iowa,] to it as it is being read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee of this House be instructed to report a bill as early as practicable providing that eight hours shall be a legal day's work for all Government employes within the jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] that that resolution is unnecessary, inasmuch as the Judiciary Committee have instructed me to report a bill of that character, and the House has given me leave to report the bill at any time. I have been holding back the report because it could not be considered by the House in the present stage of its business. As soon as the business of the House is in such condition that the report can be made and considered it will be reported.

Mr. CULLOM. I have had this resolution on my desk for some time, desiring to offer it, and have been waiting on the Judiciary Committee to report. As they had not done so, I proposed to offer it now. But after the statement made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] I will withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say to the gentlemen from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] that during the last week of the session, although reports of committees authorized to report at any time, or motions to reconsider are highly privileged, it is very difficult to find time when those matters can be considered.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. So I understand; I learned that by the experience I acquired in regard to the indemnity bill.

ALLEGED CORRUPTION OF MEMBERS.

Mr. HILL. I submit the following preamble and resolutions, upon which I call the previous question:

Whereas the integrity of members of this House in the discharge of their official duties is of the utmost importance to the public; and whereas charges affecting that integrity ought not to be preferred upon this floor except upon the gravest reason; and whereas the following preamble and resolution were introduced by Hon. JOHN WENTWORTH, a member of this House, on the 16th instant, namely:

"Whereas the President of the United States has been impeached by a member of this House of high crimes and misdemeanors, and the Committee on the Judiciary have been instructed to examine into the facts upon which said impeachment was based, with power to send for persons and papers, and report them to this House in order, if thought warrantable, that the President may be arraigned for trial thereon by the Senate; and whereas while the Committee on the Judiciary are examining witnesses with relation to said high crimes and misdemeanors of which the President has been impeached, with a view of making a report to this House for its disinterested action, it has for some time been rumored and has at last been asserted in public newspapers that certain members of this House, who are bound to act impartially upon the report of said committee when presented, are now holding, and have been for some time holding, private meetings with a view to a corrupt bargain, whereby, in violation of their oaths, they have pledged and are pledging themselves in advance to act adversely to said report if unfavorable to the President, and also to act adversely to certain other measures pending before this House to which they have heretofore been favorable, provided the President himself will do certain things to which he has heretofore declared himself hostile, and refrain from doing certain things to which he has heretofore declared himself favorable: Therefore,

Resolved, That a select committee of three be instructed to inquire whether any such meetings have been held for any such corrupt purposes, what members of this House have attended the same, what persons besides members of Congress have attended them, what persons have carried communications from those members to the President, and from the President to them, and what has been the nature of such communications; and also that said committee report at the earliest practicable day the result of their inquiries, and that they also report such resolutions for the action of the House as they may deem necessary for the preservation of its honor and independence; and that said select committee have power to send for persons and papers and examine witnesses under oath." Therefore,

Resolved, That the select committee of three appointed under said resolution be instructed to report immediately after the reading of the Journal tomorrow any evidence that may be in possession of said committee, or any member thereof, relating to the corrupt bargain referred to in the preamble to said resolution.

Resolved, further, That Hon. JOHN WENTWORTH be requested at the same time to furnish to this House the newspaper assertions and a statement of the rumors in relation to said corrupt bargain referred to in the preamble to said resolution.

Mr. STEVENS. This is a most extraordinary resolution. I move that it be laid on the table.

The motion was not agreed to; there being—ayes 34, noes 63.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the preamble and resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. HILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the preamble and resolutions were adopted, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUFFRAGE IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. NIBLACK. I submit the following resolution, on which I demand the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee for the District of Columbia be, and is hereby, instructed to report a bill conferring the elective franchise within the said District on all foreign-born male persons over the age of twenty-one years who are entitled to naturalization under existing laws, and who have resided one year within the District and have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States.

Mr. STEVENS. Is this resolution one of inquiry or instruction?

The SPEAKER. It is a resolution of instruction.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that it be laid on the table.

Mr. NIBLACK. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

On ordering the yeas and nays, there were—ayes nineteen, noes not counted.

Mr. FINCK. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. NIBLACK and STEVENS were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes twenty-six, noes not counted.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 47, nays 86, not voting 57; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Arnell, Baldwin, Banks, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Broomall, Cook, Dawes, Dodge, Farnsworth, Garfield, Grinnell, Hawkins, Henderson, Holmes, Hooper, John H. So the resolution was not laid on the table.

The question recurred on seconding the previous question.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. Speaker, if the previous question be not seconded, will it be in order to move to refer the resolution without instructions?

The SPEAKER. It will be.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I hope the previous question will not be seconded.

The previous question was not seconded, there being—ayes 30, noes 77.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to amend the resolution by striking out the words "to report" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "to inquire into the expediency of reporting."

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I rise to debate the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Debate arising, the resolution goes over under the rule.

CLAIMS OF LOYAL TENNESSEANS.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I offer the following resolution, on which I demand the previous question:

Whereas the Government of the United States cannot, without a violation of the national Constitution, appropriate to public use the property of its citizens without just compensation; and whereas many loyal citizens of Tennessee have been greatly damaged and in some cases impoverished by the military seizures of their property and its use and consumption by the United States forces, and are now greatly suffering by reason of the failure of the Government to compensate them: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee of Claims be required to report to this House at an early day a bill establishing a commission to investigate, adjudicate, and settle the claims of the loyal people of Tennessee against the Government of the United States growing out of the operations of the national Army and Navy during the late rebellion; said commission to adjudicate and settle said claims upon principles of equity and justice.

The House divided; and there were—ayes twenty-three, noes not counted.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee, called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee, and Mr. ROLLINS were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 53, noes 65.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. ROLLINS rose to debate the resolution, and it went over under the rules.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I ask leave to offer another resolution under this call.

Mr. UPSON. I object.

The House divided; and there were—ayes thirty, noes not counted.

Mr. COOPER called for tellers.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. COOPER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

Mr. CAMPBELL submitted the following preamble and resolutions, and demanded the previous question on their adoption:

Whereas the announcement and continued promulgation of the Monroe doctrine by the Government of the United States of America have been a powerful support to the republican Government in Mexico: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That humanity, civilization, and Christianity enjoin upon the Government and people of the United States the duty of persistently insisting upon the observance by the belligerent Powers in Mexico of all those wise principles of the international laws of war which have been accepted and observed by all civilized and Christian nations for the mitigation and amelioration of the hardships and horrors of the state of war.

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States of America cannot look with any toleration upon the violation of all the rights of person and property appertaining to neutral, non-combatting foreigners in Mexico, and especially citizens of the United States sojourning in that country.

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby requested to communicate copies of this preamble and these resolutions to the several chiefs of the belligerent Powers waging war in Mexico.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

JOHN H. OSLER.

Mr. BINGHAM. Under this call I introduce a bill for the relief of Lieutenant John H. Osler, and ask it be now put on its passage.

The bill was read a first and second time. The bill directs the payment to John H. Osler, late first lieutenant of the twenty-sixth regiment Ohio volunteer infantry, of pay as first lieutenant of infantry from 9th of December, 1864, to 27th March, 1865, together with three months' extra pay, and pay of first lieutenant from the 1st of July to the 8th of October, 1865.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. That bill ought not to pass without some investigation.

Mr. BINGHAM. This officer is entitled to every dollar of it under the law.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Why, then, does he not get it?

Mr. BINGHAM. Having been wounded on the field he was unable to take care of his own property, and his trunk and papers were carried off; so he cannot make return of ordnance stores, &c. I hold the certificate of the adjutant general of Ohio in my hand; there is no doubt of the matter. I demand the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 54, noes 45.

Resolved, That this House cordially concurs in the views of the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to the necessity of a contraction of the currency, with a view to as early a resumption of specie payment as the business interests of the country will permit; and we hereby pledge cooperative action to this end as speedily as practicable.

Objection was made.

INTERNAL REVENUE FRAUDS.

Mr. DARLING, from the select Committee on Internal Revenue Frauds, authorized to report at any time, submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. DARLING. Mr. Speaker, I rise with no little embarrassment to address myself to a subject which has employed so much of the time and research of the best minds of all countries—the subject of raising revenue by taxation; the tax upon distilled spirits being always regarded as one source from which the largest possible amount of revenue should be derived, as if by the common consent of mankind it has everywhere and in all times been treated as a luxury, or one of those non-essentials, which attaching itself so closely to the passions and appetites of men that no amount of impost could destroy it, has consequently been made the stalking horse to bear the chiefest of national burdens. I do not now call to mind a single people who do not make it the leading subject of taxation. And in this connection it will not be inappropriate or uninteresting to the House or country to examine the statistics connected with its history, not only in our own country, but also that of other countries, and to note the various modes and methods by which it has been treated, to the end that thereby we may gain knowledge to guide us in our legislation on this subject. It should, however, be borne in mind that in a Government like ours the people are averse to those appliances which are the ready resort of despotic or less liberal Governments than our own, and that in selecting a system for ourselves we should not lose sight of our organic constitutions and the principles of free government on which they are founded, not that we lack the power possessed in more centralized forms of government, for with us the supreme will is law, but that our modes and forms of execution have hitherto been of so mild a type, so in consonance with popular convictions, that obedience to law was the willing tribute of the citizen rather than the forced compliance of the subject.

But our necessities, the inexorable demands of our Treasury, a legacy of the great rebellion, has brought us to other times. We have now to deal with mighty problems in finance and taxation, and with the practicalities incident to the towering demands of a great indebtedness. The nation must have money and it should get it with as little distress to the people as possible. It should come from those sources least likely to affect the comfort and happiness of the people, who are called upon and must respond to the requirements of the national Treasury.

In executing this demand the Government encounters the craft of the wary, the ingenuity of the avaricious, and the duplicity and unfaithfulness of its ministers. Wearily it plods on, no way discouraged at the difficulties that surround its path, confident of its ability to enforce its demands, and resting on the knowledge of the boundless resources of the nation to collect all its revenue and maintain unimpaired its plighted faith.

The early laws of the United States combined the capacity system and the measurement of the product, and though the returns are said to be far below the real amounts, we find there were reported for the year 1791-92, from foreign materials, 290 distilleries, with a capacity of 204,942½ gallons; from domestic materials, 2,289 distilleries, with a capacity of 174,249½ gallons; and 50 to which no capacity is given, but the aggregate capacity amounts to 385,834 gallons.

From these were returned, as distilled from foreign materials, 4,207,572 gallons; from domestic materials, 963,992 gallons; giving a total of 5,171,564 gallons.

In 1795-96 there were distilled in cities, towns, and villages from foreign materials, 2,211,134½ gallons; from domestic materials, 85,214½ gallons; in the country, 1,009,797½ gallons; giving an aggregate of 3,306,146½ gallons. The tax collected upon this was $424,189, being at the average rate of a fraction over twelve and a half cents per gallon.

There was then, as now, a drawback allowed for exportation, which for that year was $82,820; to which add for leakage $4,641, and for abatement in the county $1,249, for prompt payment $114, and there was left of available tax, $418,183.

The distilleries of four hundred gallons capacity and upward in cities and villages reported as producing in tax from foreign and domestic materials for the year ending—

June 30, 1797.....	$205,163 64
June 30, 1798.....	143,592 08
Dec. 31, 1799.....	157,580 95
Dec. 31, 1801.....	178,659 21

The country distillers having capacity under four hundred gallons reported for same period from domestic materials in tax as follows:

Year ending June 30, 1797.....	$296,960 11
Year ending June 30, 1798.....	371,508 46
Year ending Dec. 31, 1799.....	349,071 55
Year ending Dec. 31, 1801.....	257,070 03

In 1800 the gallons produced were—

From foreign materials.....	1,290,466
From domestic materials.....	51,625

Upon which the tax was $142,779. Added to this was the license tax, which was rated according to capacity, and produced $372,561; this giving the net tax from this source at $415,340.

In 1801 the system of taxing capacity had been so affected by improvements in the mode of distilling as to cause complaints of the inequality of so much of the system as applied to the capacity. It is reported of Doctor Jeffrey, who was appointed by the English treasury department to investigate this matter, that he saw an improved still of about fifty-three gallons capacity charged and discharged twenty-one times within an hour, and in consequence of further improvements the same still was charged and run off four hundred and eighty-three times within twenty-four hours.

In 1810 the census marshals returned 14,191 distilleries within the United States, and a total product of 25,704,892 gallons.

From 1803 to 1812 the average annual import into the United States was 7,512,415 gallons.

After deducting the export of domestic spirits it was computed that in 1810 there remained 31,929,142 gallons, this giving to each inhabitant about four and a half gallons.

The greatest amount of tax received into the Treasury previous to September 30, 1812, was in the year 1801, when it amounted to $989,553, being forty-four per cent. of the whole internal tax.

In 1814 the whole internal revenue was $3,262,197, of which distilled spirits paid $1,681,086, or fifty-one per cent.

In 1815 the whole internal revenue was $6,242,503, of which spirits paid $3,049,806.

The census of 1840 shows for that year.....	41,402,627 Gallons.
The census of 1850 shows for that year.....	48,634,455
The census of 1860 shows for that year.....	50,412,531

It is estimated that the present annual consumption is 100,000,000 gallons. Let us compare this great consumption with European nations.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The consumption of spirits in Great Britain is estimated at but fifty-one million gallons. Their revenue for the year 1865 from all sources was $354,000,000, of which distilled spirits paid $53,200,335, and licenses connected with its sale paid $7,155,365. Add to this the receipt from customs, $22,390,900, and we have a total of $115,734,805, or thirty-three per cent. of their entire revenue. So admirable and perfect is their system that this revenue is counted upon with entire certainty. It consists in a rigid inspection of the distillery at every stage of manipulation from raw material to the resulting spirit, and is supervised by men of scientific attainments, who hold office during good behavior and who receive a salary from Government. At death a pension inures to the family of the faithful officer.

RUSSIA.

This Government holds the monopoly of production, taxing it in varied forms in different Provinces, and farming out its production in others, but in all cases exercising proprietary control. For the year 1864 they received from this source 127,000,000 roubles or $95,880,000, or thirty-seven per cent. of the entire internal tax. It is said that illicit distillation does not abound there; and we may credit this in view of the great share of burden it bears.

FRANCE.

The duty here is equal to about sixty-six and a half cents per proof-gallon. The revenues from it have steadily increased since 1859, in which year it yielded about $54,000,000, until 1864, when it yielded $80,000,000.

AUSTRIA.

The tax is estimated for the year 1862 at 13,858,388 florins; 1863 at 15,764,690 florins; 1864 at 14,283,754 florins. The rate is six kreutzers per cent. of a Vienna eimer, and twenty per cent. war tax; under which load distillation is said to be on the decrease.

PRUSSIA.

What is known as the capacity system is here applied, and has been for many years with good results. It is a tax upon the capacity of the mash-tub, based on the assumption of a certain product from given materials. The consumption is variously estimated from thirty million to fifty million gallons.

SWEDEN.

The average consumption here is much greater than in the other countries of Europe owing to the rigor of the climate. I have imperfect details, and therefore give an estimate for 1829. It was computed that the product for that year was thirty million gallons, yielding a tax of $9,434,396. This, with a population of three million, gives a liberal allowance to each.

GERMAN ZOLLVEREIN.

The present tariff dates July 1, 1865—the tax being reduced to six thalers. Although there are thirteen thousand two hundred and eight distilleries, their capacity is generally small and the products used chiefly in the arts or exported.

GRAND DUCHY OF HESSE-DARMSTADT.

The tax is about six cents per gallon, and is little used as a beverage.

GRAND DUCHY OF NASSAU.

The tax is here but eight cents, and yields but little.

GRAND DUCHY OF BADEN.

Here the revenue is but little larger, being for the year 1864 about thirty-two thousand dollars. The tax is easily collected, as the use of spirituous liquors as a beverage is discreditable.

WÜRTTEMBERG, BAVARIA, AND FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAIN.

The small general remark applies to these as to the Grand Duchy of Baden.

BELGIUM.

The revenue for spirits is more considerable. Although the tax is about twenty-five and eight tenths cents per gallon, the receipts for 1863 were 11,657,435 francs.

Let us see for a moment how whisky escapes taxation. To produce it in the eastern States from grain, allowing a yield of three and a half gallons to the bushel, it is estimated to cost about thirty-five cents. Also, that the cost of producing it from molasses yielding sixty per cent. is about eighty-five cents per proof-gallon, being fifty cents more than the cost from grain. Notwithstanding this great difference, most of the spirits now produced in the eastern cities is made from molasses. We can readily understand this when it is known that the apparatus required for molasses distillation is very simple and very economical, occupying but little space and easily concealed—precisely the kind that villainy would employ; for by disposing of the spirits as fast as produced (and such proves to be their course, as revenue officers seldom find any quantity to seize,) there is but a worthless machinery left, of little use to any one, and if sold by the marshal is bought in by some third party for the benefit of the owner, who generally removes it to some other place to try again his career of evasion. A law requiring the destruction of these miserable pretenses for distilleries could not but be salutary. I shall have occasion to recur to this again in describing what I saw on a visit of inspection to what were duly licensed distilleries under the law.

The common methods resorted to by distillers to evade the tax upon their production are all based on the subservience of the inspector in charge of the establishment. This man, although appointed by the Government and clothed with all authority adequate to protect the interests of the revenue, is made dependent for his compensation upon the pittance of five dollars per day, to be paid by the distiller for every day the distillery is in operation! This in effect makes him but the hireling of his employer, who will give him work whenever and only when such employment will return a profit. If whisky could be sold freely in open market at a fair profit over tax and cost of production, there would be no need for the distiller to tamper with his inspector. If it cannot be sold, and the distiller desires to run his establishment, he must make such terms with his inspector as will allow a portion of his product to escape tax. Failing to make such arrangement, both the employer and employé must remain idle. But neither can afford this. The owner or distiller cannot afford the loss of interest upon his capital invested, and the inspector cannot afford to wait long without receipt of his five dollars per day. The result is soon arrived at. A mutual understanding springs up, resulting in loss to the revenue.

The modes usually resorted to for getting whisky into market in fraud of the tax are by putting brands and gauge-marks upon barrels in apparent compliance with law. They then pass freely provided they can be safely removed. Some more timid than others do not rely upon their adroitness in removing, but go through the formality of entering a portion of their whisky in bond, and then remove it under permit. The branding and gauging of illicit whisky is usually performed by the distiller in the absence of the inspector, the tools and implements being conveniently left within reach of his employer. Care is usually exercised by them to use the numbers and marks upon barrels that are placed in bond. To illustrate: a distiller has five packages of whisky, the number five is a mere illustration as any number can be used according to the extent of the business, properly inspected, gauged, branded, and entered in his warehouse. These are numbered serially from one to five, and stand upon the books of the collector and assessor properly indexed, charged to the distiller, and cannot be moved without payment of tax, except to another warehouse, or when withdrawn for redistillation or export. The distiller, however, is not anxious as yet to disturb these five packages. He goes on getting other five packages; marks, brands, and numbers them precisely like those in bond; then gets a permit to remove certain five packages from his warehouse to some other warehouse. This is done by giving bond that on delivery of these five packages within thirty, sixty, or ninety days, or six months, at the warehouse indicated the bond shall be canceled. He then commences, but not on the real five packages. The lot precisely like that is started in one direction, another lot is soon made and started in another direction, and we have the astonishing fact that the same whisky is professedly sent for San Francisco by the Isthmus route, the Cape route, and, what is strangest of all, the overland route, the same permit being used in each case to carry the lot, but of course going only so far on any route as is necessary to find a rectifier who will buy. Finally one lot reaches the proposed destination, and the bond is canceled.

It is apparent from this illustration that the very forms of the law are resorted to as a protection to defraud, for the permit which covers a shipment to California is perfectly good, no matter by what route the shipper sees fit to send his goods. If seizure should be made while in transit the permit is flauntingly produced and there ends the proceeding.

Among the distillers of small capacity the more usual means of evasion are brought to bear in the distillery itself. The whisky is turned off from the indicating cup and passed into the receptacle for low wines, from whence it is abstracted, or, by shutting the cock for high wines and overflowing the cup, thus discharging it into a special receptacle, or by pumping it out of the cistern either through apertures in the ceiling or by siphons. These frauds would be apparent on examining the distiller's register of materials used if this was reliable, but here the fraud begins. He enters there so much and only so much of ingredients as will produce the amount of whisky he expects to report to the collector. He thus keeps up a fair appearance to all who casually drop in, and no one not in constant attendance can question these entries. And this was precisely what was expected of the inspector in charge. It was supposed his constant presence would be an effectual check, and that the entire product would be in his keeping until the tax was paid.

The distiller's book is thus made to cloak the inspector, and whether in complicity or in ignorance it is all the same. It is a cloak, and some of them wear it with astonishing stoicism in the face of the most appalling array of facts.

Persons of wealth, social position, and character, largely engaged in the rectification of distilled spirits, are shown to be large buyers of illicit whisky, this assertion being sustained by the fact that they purchase at prices greatly below the amount of Government tax and from unknown and obscure persons, who act as brokers, the distillers themselves seldom appearing in the market. The law is defective, inasmuch as it does not require them to keep a record of the brands upon the barrels which they buy, but are only required to keep a record of the person from whom they buy. If they were required to keep a record upon their books of the name of all distillers and inspectors whose names appear upon the barrels, and of the fact whether branded tax paid or not, the spirits could always be traced to the fountain head, and immediate detection and punishment of the guilty parties would follow.

Capitalists formerly engaged in distilling find under the present system a much more favorable opportunity for the employment of their capital with less danger of exposure if guilty of fraud, by rectifying spirits than by distilling, as their reputation and means are in less jeopardy, it consequently is not an uncommon thing for them to start small distilleries under names of irresponsible parties who give insufficient or bogus bonds, and then through means and appliances within the reach of all men of means and position corruptly inclined, procure the appointment of inspectors for these distilleries and supply rectifying establishments with the illicit product, sharing the profits with the less fortunate but no less guilty confederate. In fact, a case plainly illustrating this operation has come to my knowledge, although no evidence of fraud or intended fraud has appeared. One of the principal rectifiers in my city, and who it is known buys whisky at less than tax, is bondsman for the collector of one of the districts. An inspector of a distillery has been appointed by this collector at the request of this rectifier, and the distillery in which he is placed is now running and has not up to this time been molested, notwithstanding the fact which must be apparent to every one that no distiller can honestly pursue his avocation when the product is selling in open market far below the tax imposed upon it; and this fact naturally suggests the inquiries in the minds of every one whether or no the officer in charge can be performing his duty honestly when he permits the continuance of a distillery under such circumstances.

I visited one grain distillery and examined the whole practical operations under the present system. With an accurate capacity of about one thousand gallons per diem of twenty-four hours, the proprietors claimed they were making only five hundred gallons per day, and a casual examination of the book which they are required to keep disclosed the fact that they were paying tax on an average of three hundred and fifty gallons only. I found a sufficient number of fermenting tubs to allow a continuous distillation night and day if desired. The receptacle for low wines was an open hog'shead, with the spirits exposed to view and accessible to any one. The cup in which the spirit is tested by the hydrometer in its passage from the worm to the receiving cistern was also uncovered, and it was within the province of any one by simply turning a cock to run proof-spirit off and into the hog'shead prepared for the reception of low wines. A visit to the cistern-room, which was separated from the open portion of a room by a board partition, and where the inspector was apparently engaged in the discharge of his duties, revealed the fact that the entire contents of the cisterns could be drawn out while the room was under lock and key by means of pipes inserted in the opening at the top of the cisterns through a hole in the floor directly above, which holes were skillfully concealed by plugs.

It was apparent that the inspector must be cognizant of these facts. It will readily be seen that by running the distillery at night during the absence of the inspector the abstracted spirits could be constantly replaced in the cisterns. In another visit to a molasses distillery which I found in full operation, the cistern-room consisted of a small apartment boarded off from one corner of the room where the stills were located, and the "bonded warehouse" was another small apartment boarded off from an opposite corner, with boards nailed in such a manner as to be easily removed from the inside of the still-room. The door under the inspector's lock opened into a yard. The cistern consisted of a large barrel with one head out from which the spirits were being dipped out with buckets and emptied into barrels under the eye of the inspector. The existing arrangement of bonded warehouses in all small distilleries is a complete farce and a gross violation of what I regard as the spirit and intent of the law.

Now, the idea presents itself that something is wrong, and I hesitate not to assert that the system and its ministers are most terribly in fault. Guilty connivance must exist, or frauds of such wholesale character could not be perpetrated. A radical change is demanded, especially in the present system of removal on permits. No such carte blanche should be put into the hands of any distiller. This should be confided to some officer, detailed to witness the removal from the distillery, and by whom the permit should be forwarded for cancellation by the collector designated. Over five million gallons are now supposed to be floating about on these permits, and withdrawal bonds, and not accounted for to the Department. If the Government even realizes a titling of the $10,000,000 tax due thereon it will be more fortunate than its past success warrants it to hope for. Of course this loss of tax involves the fidelity of collectors, not less than of keepers of bonded warehouses; a system as applied to distilleries which has proved worse than a failure. It would almost seem that our present mode of taxing and dealing with distilled spirits had been suggested by designing persons with reference to profit through its thousand and one deficiencies.

As to the penal enactments of the present law, it has come to my knowledge that the mode of enforcing penalties has in numerous instances left the impression on the mind of the tax-payer that the money paid by him in compromise was really hush-money for the pocket of the officer dealing with him. A case will illustrate. Inspector A calls upon B, a whisky manufacturer or cigar dealer, and finding what he charges to be fraud, kindly tells B the whole matter may be settled for $1,000. B objects, but is told that his place will be seized and his business stopped unless a settlement is made. To prevent this he hands over to the officer the money demanded and is told to go about his business. But the case does not close here. Officer A must keep his record clear, and so he goes to the collector and states that B has been guilty of fraud, offers $750 in compromise, and to pay the tax due of $250; thus covering the entire $1,000. Mr. Collector at once advises the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of the case, and advises that the $750 be accepted. This done, an order is soon received distributing to officer A one half as moiety to the informer and the other half goes quietly into the Treasury.

Cases almost without number have been transacted by the same officers, netting them within twenty months the snug sum of $25,000.

Now I do not believe that one man in ten thus compromised with supposes the money so paid by him ever reached the Treasury. I am justified in this opinion by the many instances wherein parties have complained of having paid hush-money, and which on investigation proved to have been disposed of as stated.

A case is related in which a man even signed a confession of judgment, and the name of a leading proctor of New York was affixed to his cognovit of the attorney for the injured party, and yet he solemnly affirms that the business was so conducted that he was led to believe and did believe, until shown the copy of a pretended judgment in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that he was fleeced by parties who in turn fleeced the Treasury.

That this system is working badly, the system of moieties, is beyond controversy. Upon the question whether any moieties should be allowed, I propose no suggestion, assuming that the practice of nations has settled the correctness of the theory. But, upon the mode of administering this subject, I propose checks and guards for both citizen and officer. I say the Commissioner of Internal Revenue should not be vested with sole control. The proposition to vest the adjudication and compromise of every crime except that of murder in one man for the State of Ohio, or one man for the State of New York would be laughed to scorn. Yet the Commissioner is such man for the entire Republic. I also say no case either civil or criminal should be compromised.

And herein I remark that a few vigorous prosecutions and inflictions of criminal remedies would go far to break up the frauds now rampant in all branches of the revenue. It is easy to conceive of a willingness in culprits who have swindled at the rate of thousands per day for a few months to disgorge some insignificant fraction of their colossal thieving if thereby the prison will not close upon them.

As incident to this subject I remark that it is by no means certain that collectors, who by the internal revenue law are specially and solely charged with the duty of prosecuting (in the name of the Government) for violations, have not used this very authority to protect offenders. I charge that in repeated instances wherein a great wrong had been committed, the collector after giving the matter the form of an examination has decided to take no legal steps—whether corruptly or honestly I care not which—thus shielding crime; because his refusal to prosecute is an effectual protection.

I say, therefore, that no such power should be vested anywhere. It is wrong in every aspect we may consider it; but especially wrong in view of the injustice and wrong that may be committed by it, and this through a mere folding of his arms and a complacent statement of the collector, "I see no evidence to convict."

I say let the doors of our courts be open to all; let the complainant have direct access to the proper prosecuting officer, (the district attorney,) and let that officer be authorized to proceed on behalf of the Government on the relation of such complainant. A check of this nature would have at least one salutary effect: it would open the doors of our courts to all.

A common excuse offered by collectors is their responsibility for costs in case of failure to convict. This is a grave defect of the law, for which there should be some saving provision. It is hard, indeed, to compel a man having no personal interest in a prosecution to take the character of prosecutor, more especially as he must rely for witnesses upon informants personally unknown to him; especially hard for him to find on the day of trial that his witnesses have been quietly tampered with and spirited away by his antagonist. Yet the law affords no protection, except an application to the Department for reimbursement, a step usually attended with tedious delays and involving time and annoyance, for which no recompense can be made.

Why, I ask, would not the system now in force in the department of customs be more advantageous? Or why, as I have just now suggested, should not the complaining party or informer be privileged to go direct to the district attorney? Why the circumlocutory process of carrying his discoveries to the collector, who is but a mere marshal, charged with the collection of taxes, and who should have nothing else to do? I must confess myself at a loss to divine what reason influenced the existing enactment in this respect.

Having reached the conclusion that the present system is a failure, I have been led to consider whether it might not be so modified as to meet the desired result, but in this have failed. Its defects seem so radical as to defy any hopes of improvement by any mere trimming or pruning its details. Some other system should be adopted, and that speedily, if we would stop the demoralization which attaches to this branch of the service, and which of necessity must spread through our entire revenue system; for it is idle to expect that men will administer corruptly one subject of taxation and bring purity to all others. There is a poison to unclean gains which, once tasted, gives appetite insatiable for more.

Among the plans suggested, and which have received not a little of my consideration, are the

which may be applied in one or both of two ways, and the

CAPACITY SYSTEM.

The capacity system varies from the metrical in that it is nothing more or less than a measurement of the entire fermenting capacity of a distillery, and the tax is upon the estimate of what it ought to produce, leaving the responsibility for leakage, breakage, stoppage, and loss of time at the risk of the owner. The only difficulty suggested in this connection is that the grain mash of equal capacity will produce less than the molasses mash. This could measurably be provided for by assessing the distiller every ten or fifteen days upon his sworn statement of the materials he proposed to use. If molasses, he would need no watching. If grain, an occasional visit by the assessor would keep all in check; and such visits should be frequently made in order that he should know of any change in the structure of the distillery by which its capacity could be increased. It is apparent, therefore, that by either the metrical or the capacity system, the only inspection necessary is the assessor or collector, to whom any evasion would be instantly apparent.

THE METRICAL SYSTEM

May be applied by placing a meter at the end of the worm, suitably adjusted to prevent tampering with its index, and so constructed as to indicate the total product; and I have reason to believe that an excellent one has been devised, with adjustment for separating high and low wines and all by automatic action, giving upon the index the unerring data for computing tax. This may also be applied in another form, and one claimed by its advocates to be a compromise between the meter at the end of the worm and the system of measuring the fermenting capacity. It is contended that the beer apart from grains can only be worked to advantage at a certain standard as indicated by the saccharometer. Assuming this standard as the one near which or at which all distillers would seek to work, (for their interest would prompt them to do so,) and it is a very simple process to estimate the amount of tax to levy upon each gallon of the beer, to produce the equivalent of two dollars per proof-gallon of spirit. A little variation either way would only affect the tax, and would operate the same for all distilleries, so that none could gain or lose an advantage to the prejudice of others.

Let me state, in conclusion, that no system will of itself prevent fraud. So long as dishonest avarice is to be contended with, the officers of the law, be they ever so vigilant and their means of prevention ever so perfect, will find wicked men ready to hazard liberty and property in the effort to evade law. Keeping this in view, we act most wisely when we so shape the system as to reduce the chances and means of fraud, or when we create barriers which will so increase the cost of such expense as will measurably defeat the object of evasions. This, we believe, would be accomplished by a vigorous and faithful application of either the metrical or the capacity system. One great advantage of these consists in dispensing with all inspectors of spirits, inspectors on distilleries; also with branding, bonding, and exporting in bond, and bring the distiller in more direct contact with the collector and assessor.

I am not so sanguine as to suppose a perfect system can be devised, or that frauds can be wholly prevented under any system; for so long as any article is taxed its value in market is thereby enhanced, and this very advance in price furnishes an object for the avaricious, and it has proved that however small the tax upon an article there have been found those who would evade. So that although a large tax offers a larger inducement than a small tax, it does not follow that men are more honest under one than the other. Our plain duty, therefore, after ascertaining the amount needed is to impose it, and then try by stringent legislation to thwart the evasions. In taxing spirits, let us not involve the absurdity of treating it as contraband, as a luxury which we do by high imports, and at the same time favor it as if it were a necessity, which we do by the present odious bonding system. Let Government set down its foot firmly and deal with it as if it really were what it is claimed to be, a luxury; such a luxury as should bear largely the national burden. Delay but adds to the difficulty. The unclean money filched as it were from the Treasury by the villainy of distillers, amounting up as it does to millions of dollars, affords a corruption fund of so portentous dimensions that it may ultimately affect the power to legislate upon it.

I cannot close without expressing my conviction that we have much to hope for from the proposed law regulating the tenures of offices. In times past the possession of an office has too often been considered in the light of a legalized opportunity, a sort of recognized right to plunder if done adroitly, thus abusing both Government and people, and filling private purses at the expense of the general Treasury. Too many have acted vigorously upon the doctrine of making hay while the sun shines, and herein is the principal source of all revenue frauds, for of the aggregate number committed, those not with the guilty knowledge of some official, sink to insignificance when compared with those which could not possibly be committed without such complicity.

I now offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House ten thousand copies of the report of the select Committee on Internal Revenue Frauds with the testimony, and ten thousand copies without the testimony.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing, under the law.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity, as a member of the select committee, to examine the testimony, and I should like to have the privilege, if I shall conclude to do it, to present a minority report after examining the report of the majority.

No objection being made, leave was granted.

THOMAS VERSUS ARNELL.

Mr. MAYNARD, by unanimous consent, submitted testimony in the case of Thomas vs. Arnell, which was referred to the Committee of Elections.

RECORDING OF VOTES.

Mr. MOULTON. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday night a good many members were absent when the vote was taken on the indemnity bill. I now ask unanimous consent that they now have an opportunity to record their votes.

Mr. PRICE. I do not object if it does not change the result.

Several MEMBERS. It cannot change it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that the same privilege be granted to members who were absent on the final vote on the reconstruction bill.

No objection being made, the following members recorded their votes on the questions named:

On concurrence in the amendment of the Senate to the reconstruction bill as amended by the House: yea, Mr. DIXON and Mr. GARFIELD.

On the final passage of the indemnity bill: yea, Messrs. ANDERSON, DELOS R. ASHLEY, BRANDEGEE, SYDNEY CLARKE, DAVIS, DIXON, FARNSWORTH, GARFIELD, HILL, INGERSOLL, WILLIAM LAWRENCE, McINDOE, MOULTON, PLANTS, STEVENS, and WINDOM. Nay, Messrs. BERGEN, NIBLACK, STROUSE, THORNTON, and WRIGHT.

MINING STATISTICS.

Mr. LAFLIN, from the Committee on Printing, reported back the following resolution, which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the same number of copies of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury of February 13, 1867, with the report of the commissioner for the collection of mining statistics east of the Rocky mountains, be ordered to be printed as that of the report of J. Ross Browne on the mineral resources, &c., and that the same be bound together for the use of the House.

SURVEY OF THE UPPER MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. LAFLIN, from the same committee, reported back the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House five thousand extra copies of the report of Major General G. K. Warren, of the survey of the Upper Mississippi river and its tributaries.

Mr. LAFLIN moved to reconsider the votes just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to make a brief statement in relation to the business of the House. It appears that there are three appropriation bills yet unacted upon by the House. We have a long internal revenue bill not yet quite completed, but which I suppose will unquestionably be finished to-day. We also have the tariff bill based upon the bill passed by the House at the last session of Congress, which was laid over by the Senate and not returned to the House till February. That bill was reported by the Committee of Ways and Means on the 18th of February, but we have now reached a period so near the close of the session that if it shall be acted upon in Committee of the Whole it is utterly impossible that it can be sent to the Senate in time to receive the action of that body. In order, therefore, to facilitate the action of the House, I propose that the committee shall be discharged from the further consideration of the tariff bill, and that we concur in the Senate amendments as proposed to be amended by the Committee of Ways and Means in the bill already before the House. This will be done for the purpose of confining the committee of conference within as narrow limits as possible to give them the least amount of power that can be given under the circumstances of the case. Gentlemen will see that if they yield to this proposition, that when it is subsequently reported back by the committee of conference if it shall not be satisfactory they can then vote against it.

I do not propose, Mr. Speaker, now or at any other time to inflict upon the House a long speech, although gentlemen all know that I have a very considerable one in me. [Laughter.] My object is to facilitate and promote action upon this bill. If I had time I think I could demonstrate to every fair-minded man that it is reasonable now at this time to have an unreasonable tariff, [laughter;] but I do not propose to consume any time upon this subject. And as I do not propose to debate the question I do not feel at liberty to yield for discussion to any other gentleman.

Mr. PIKE. I rise to make a suggestion to the gentleman.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I rise to a point of order. I desire to know whether these yieldings of the floor come in under the unanimous consent granted to the gentleman from Vermont to speak.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows of no other rule but the hour rule so far as debate is concerned. The gentleman from Vermont is entitled to the floor for one hour.

Mr. PIKE. It would be more satisfactory to me, and I think to the House, that the bill as it passed the House at the last session should be taken as a basis as the action of the House, and sent to the committee of conference as the House action, and then the Senate bill can be taken as the Senate action, and the committee of conference can take these bills as a basis for the agreement to be made up by them in regard to this proposition. If that be the arrangement, I for one have no objection to the gentleman's proposal. It will be recollected that this bill was fully discussed in the House in all its items, that votes were taken upon those items, and that we had a full expression of the judgment of the House on the subject.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not desire to discuss the matter; but I think I have examined this question as thoroughly, perhaps, as the gentleman from Maine, and I am quite satisfied that the bill as proposed to be amended by the Committee of Ways and Means is a more perfect bill than that which we sent from the House to the Senate. Since the bill was before the House it has received the action of the Finance Committee of the Senate and of the Committee of Ways and Means of this House, and it would be very singular indeed if those committees had not somewhat improved it.

Mr. GARFIELD. It has been suggested by several members on the floor this morning that the proposition of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means as now offered, would be more acceptable if it could be so arranged that double the usual number of conferees might be appointed from this House. I do not know that that can be done; but I desire to ask the Chair whether it cannot be so arranged.

Mr. MORRILL. I should have no objection to that, if the House desire it.

Mr. GARFIELD. We can thus have a wider range of interests represented on the committee of conference; and I wish to know if what I suggest can be done under the rules?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that never within his recollection has a committee of conference been appointed in either branch of Congress consisting of more than three members. It might be very pleasant to both the Chair and members of the House to have more interests and more sections of the country represented on the committee; but the question is, whether the Senate would agree to the increase that has been suggested. The usual rule is that a conference committee consists of only three members of each House.

Mr. MORRILL. It will be in the power of the House to reject the action of the committee if they choose. The committee will report whatever bill they please, and then the House will pass upon it.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee whether there will be any opportunity allowed for debate upon the report of the conference committee after it is submitted to the House, or whether it is his intention merely to allow members to record their votes upon it, yea or nay?

Mr. MORRILL. I propose precisely what the resolution that I have sent to the Clerk's desk, and which I now ask to have read for information, indicates; and I propose that as the only chance of action upon this bill at this session.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 713, and that the House concur with the Senate amendments, as amended by the Committee of Ways and Means, and as subsequently modified by them, on books and marble, and that the House ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed bill of the House No. 1039, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1868, with amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. F. THOMAS. I ask the gentleman from Vermont to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. MORRILL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. F. THOMAS. Before we yield the vantage-ground which many of us possess in resisting a two-third vote of the House, it would be well for us to understand exactly what is to ensue from that vote. I speak now after consultation with others, for I would not have the immodesty to take the position I do without having done so.

In the first place, it is proper, before we yield this immense power asked for by the Committee of Ways and Means, that the House should take a retrospective view of what has already occurred. Three times during the present Congress a majority of this House have voted to fix a certain duty upon bituminous coal.

Mr. MORRILL. I beg leave to say to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. F. THOMAS] that I cannot yield to him for a discussion of the whole subject. I am willing he should make a suggestion, as I supposed he desired to do so, in regard to the proposition I submit; but I dislike to yield for any lengthy discussion.

Mr. F. THOMAS. I merely desire to state some facts. As I was saying, three times have the House signified its pleasure upon the subject of a tariff on coal, and the Senate have sent a proposition to the House corresponding to our action in that respect.

Mr. DAWES. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] asked and obtained unanimous consent in order to make a statement in reference to the condition of business before the House. Now, I ask if it is in order for him to yield that privilege to the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. F. THOMAS?]

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he can. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] asked unanimous consent to make a statement in regard to the business before the House, and the gentleman can yield, during the hour to which he is entitled—

Mr. DAWES. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will allow the Chair to finish upon the point of order the gentleman has raised; unless the gentleman does not desire it.

Mr. DAWES. I do not object to the construction of the Chair if it means this: that the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] can obtain unanimous consent to make a statement himself, and then allow all other members of the House to make statements.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will permit, the Chair will now repeat the statement he made, and conclude it as he would have done had he not been interrupted. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] asked and obtained unanimous consent to make a statement in regard to the business before the House. He stated the business to be the tariff bill, the tax bill, and various appropriation bills not yet acted upon. And in order that the business may be completed he suggested the adoption of a resolution suspending the rules so as to concur in certain amendments and non-concur in certain other amendments of the Senate to the tariff bill, and to ask the appointment of a committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon. The gentleman is entitled under the rules to one hour. And while debate is progressing during that hour, either by the gentleman from Vermont or any other gentleman to whom he may yield for the purpose of explanation of the pending subject, the Chair cannot interrupt the debate.

Mr. DAWES. The House granted a personal privilege to the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.]

The SPEAKER. It did; and the gentleman can yield to others during the hour to which he is entitled for the purpose of explanation in regard to that subject, but no other.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I would inquire if, under that provision, the tariff bill is before the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] asked unanimous consent to make a statement in regard to the business before the House and the manner of expediting action upon it. Among the subjects of legislation now pending the gentleman named the tariff bill which was passed by the House at the last session, considered by the Senate at this session, and reported back by them to this House with amendments; which amendments were referred by the House to the Committee of Ways and Means, and reported back by them to this House with a recommendation to adopt amendments to the amendments to the Senate, and now in Committee of the Whole awaiting the action of this House. Anything relating to that is in order.

Mr. F. THOMAS. I will be as brief as possible. The votes of this House to which I have referred have had no influence apparently upon the determination of the Committee of Ways and Means of this House, for they have reported against the expressed judgment of this House. And the votes of the Senate are a reversal of the determination of the Committee on Finance of that body. Now can we submit those great interests to the final adjudication of a committee of conference, to be composed of members of the Committee of Ways and Means of this House and the Committee on Finance of the Senate without taking some precaution to control their action? Now, if the gentleman from Vermont will accept certain instructions to that committee of conference which I will ask the Clerk to read, I will withdraw all opposition to his proposition. I will conclude with the remark that I do not think the country will suffer much if we wait until the next Congress before we take action upon the tariff.

Mr. MORRILL. I will hear the proposition of the gentleman read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the committee on the part of the House shall not consent to change any impost authorized by the bill of the House, and agreed to in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. I cannot consent to that in so broad a form. If the gentleman will make it what he means, that the committee on the part of the House shall not consent to any lower rate of duty than the specified rate upon coal, I will consent to it.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I shall object to that.

Mr. MORRILL. I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOTFIELD.]

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I desire to offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the resolution of the gentleman from Vermont:

Provided, That the duty on coal shall not be less than $1 50 per ton.

Mr. F. THOMAS. I will agree to that so far as I am concerned.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. That corresponds with the provision in the House bill and also in the Senate bill. Both Houses have agreed to that rate of duty.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say to the gentleman that I am a little surprised at the rate proposed. The present rate of duty on coal is $1 25. At the last session, after a struggle during which both sides of the House entered fully into the discussion of this subject, the rate of duty was by a very close vote fixed in the House bill at $1 50. I had supposed that the gentleman from Pennsylvania would not propose a higher rate than one dollar. That was conceded to be a basis of compromise at the last session, when quite a number of gentlemen would have assented to it; and certainly I am surprised that the gentleman proposes more than $1 25. At the same time I am quite willing that there shall be a vote of the House upon $1 50, $1 25, or any other sum.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to modify my resolution; and when it shall have been read as modified, I shall ask the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The previous question does not apply to motions to suspend the rules. They are undebatable and unamendable.

Mr. MORRILL. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

Mr. DAWES. I wish to ask the gentleman from Vermont whether he expects the House by general consent to take this bill out of the Committee of the Whole and refer it to a committee of conference if he first permit special interests to bind and fetter the committee of conference in advance? If the House cannot trust the bill with the committee without trammel, can he expect all the general interests of the country to lie by and see special interests fetter and bind that committee in advance to a particular course in reference to particular interest? Much as I desire this bill to become a law, I cannot consent to any such proceeding. I suggest to the gentleman from Vermont that, if he expects the House by general consent or by a two-thirds vote to take this bill out of the Committee of the Whole he must ask the House to trust it to a committee of conference without trammel as to particular interests.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely desire to say to the House that I have modified my resolution in such a way that I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTFIELD] and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. F. THOMAS] will not insist on my accepting their propositions for amendment. As modified the resolution simply provides that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments, and ask a committee of conference thereon.

Mr. LE BLOND. I ask the gentleman from Vermont to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. MORRILL. I will yield for an inquiry.

Mr. LE BLOND. Mr. Speaker, it would seem by what we see here every moment that this committee of conference is to be trammelled, and certain interests are to be cared for in advance of the reference of the bill to the committee.

Mr. MORRILL. If the gentleman will listen to the resolution in its modified form he will find that it contains no such proposition.

Mr. LE BLOND. I will hear the resolution read.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Vermont offers the resolution now the debate must cease.

Mr. CONKLING. Let it be read for information.

The SPEAKER. It will be read for information if there is no objection.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules be suspended, so that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 718; and that the House non-concur with the Senate amendments, and that the House ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes thereon.

Mr. PIKE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. I wish to ask of the Chair, for the information of the House, a question on parliamentary law, and that is in reference to the power of these conferees. The Senate have sent us a substitute for the House tariff bill. Now, can the conferees go beyond the action of the two Houses?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state, in response to the question of the gentleman from Maine, that when the Senate sent back the House bill it was not as usual with amendments to the different parts of the bill to which they disagreed, but with one amendment, striking out the House bill and substituting another in its place. The Constitution declares the House shall originate all bills raising revenue, but that the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills. This is a most extensive amendment, but it brings up the question in the House. The conferees will have the whole subject before them if this be referred to them.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I rise to a question of order. The House bill made the duty on coal $1 50, and the Senate substitute makes it $1 50. If the motion of the gentleman from Vermont prevails, would the conferees have the right to make the duty on coal less or more?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would respond that, as the Senate have stricken out the entire bill from the enacting clause and inserted another one, the whole subject in all its details would be referred to the committee of conference as if before the House in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. If the Senate had returned amendments to sections one and two and five and so on, and the disagreeing votes had been referred to the committee of conference, then all the other portions of the bill would have been regarded as adopted.

Mr. F. THOMAS. I ask that my proposition be again read.

Mr. MORRILL. Not now.

Mr. LE BLOND. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether it is of much consequence to me whether coal is provided for or not in advance; whether the particular interest of Pennsylvania or Maryland is subserved or not. I am here, sir, for a very different purpose than building up the coal interest in Pennsylvania or the coal interest in Maryland, or for the purpose of bringing Nova Scotia coal into the New England States at a low rate. I am here, sir, for the people, and the whole people, on this question of the tariff.

Now, I understand this proposition to be simply this: the bill as sent to the Senate was, all after the enacting clause, stricken out and returned to this House. They sent us to all intents and purposes a new bill, which is now pending before us for our consideration.

Mr. DELANO. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Vermont yielded to my colleague for a question, and not to debate this whole subject. There are many here who wish to debate this bill who are now cut out.

Mr. MORRILL. I only yielded for an inquiry.

Mr. LE BLOND. I am simply stating the effect of the pending motion. I hope gentlemen will not cut me off here. I wish the country to understand what will be the effect of this proposition. A new bill has come here from the Senate, and the motion is the House shall disagree to it and turn over the whole subject into the hands of a committee of conference. Now, when it has been referred to the committee of conference under the rules of this House and parliamentary law, that committee may agree to, accept, and report an entirely new bill, divesting us of all power to consider separately any single change in the bill as it originally went from the House. When the conference report comes into the House the only question will be, Will the House concur in the report? There will be no other question. The previous question will be seconded and the main question ordered, and we will have to either adopt or reject the report as a whole. We cannot amend it or go into any consideration of the details of the bill in any shape or form. For one, I am opposed to any such reference. There is no necessity for it. I submit to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means we can get along with our present tariff, and that there is no necessity to muzzle the Representatives of the people in this way, to turn ourselves over body and soul to this conference committee for their disposition.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say to the gentleman from Ohio that the proposition now before the House is simply that which is always made in regard to disagreeing votes upon bills between the two Houses. It gives the committee as much power and no more than any committee of conference has in relation to questions referred to them.

Mr. LE BLOND. I wish to ask whether we have ever considered this bill at all.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire simply to say further in relation to this matter that unless action can be secured upon this bill in this manner, I shall be constrained to ask the House to sit in continuous session until we can dispose of the bill in Committee of the Whole. It has heretofore had long and patient consideration and action in the House, and I think we should hardly have any new light upon it if we were to spend a fortnight on the bill.

Mr. BOYER. I would inquire of the Chair whether, if this bill is referred to the committee of conference and afterward reported back to the House, there will be any opportunity to amend any of its sections?

The SPEAKER. There will not; the report must be voted upon as a whole.

Mr. BOYER. Then I shall vote against the motion and leave the responsibility of the failure, if the bill should fail, to those who have left this important measure until so late a day in the session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair doubts whether that is a point of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. It is a pretty good speech though. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Vermont allow the resolution of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. F. THOMAS] to be reported?

Mr. MORRILL. I must object.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I wish to ask the Chair what the rule is in regard to the appointment of the committee of conference in case this motion prevails. The Chair appoints the committee of conference, but will the Chair feel bound by parliamentary law to appoint a committee representing the views of the Committee of Ways and Means who have reported these amendments, or will he appoint a committee representing the sense of the House upon the bill as it passed at the last session?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot answer that question; it would not be proper that he should. If a committee of conference is ordered he will appoint it in this case as he appoints them in all cases, in accordance with usage.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I understand there is no parliamentary rule.

The SPEAKER. There is a parliamentary rule in regard to the appointment of committees of conference, but the Chair cannot answer in advance what he will do.

Mr. MORRILL. I decline to yield any further, and move the following resolution:

Resolved, That the rules be suspended, so that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 718, and that the House non-concur with the Senate amendment, and ask a committee of conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes thereon.

Mr. BROMWELL and Mr. BENJAMIN demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I wish to inquire whether there are any non-concurring votes.

The SPEAKER. There are such evidently so stated in the resolution.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. It does not state the facts.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there will be a great many if the House non-concurs.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 85, nays 86, not voting 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Bosman, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Brandergee, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. So the rules were not suspended.

RESOLUTIONS OF INDIANA.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House concurrent resolutions of the State Legislature of Indiana, instructing their Senators and requesting their Representatives in Congress to use their influence to procure the passage of a bill equalizing bounties; which were laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the forty-sixth and last section of the tax bill and the amendments thereto be closed in ten minutes after the committee shall resume the consideration of the same.

The motion was agreed to.

TAX BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BOUTWELL in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the tax bill as the special order.

The section under consideration was the last section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 46. And be it further enacted, That sections sixty and one hundred and fourteen of the act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and sections twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-eight, thirty-nine, forty, forty-one, forty-two, forty-three, forty-four, forty-five, and sixty-one of the act amendatory thereof, approved July 13, 1866, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The CHAIRMAN stated the pending question to be on the motion of Mr. WILLIAMS, to amend the first line of this section by inserting after the word "sixty" the word "ninety-seven."

Mr. WILLIAMS. The question, I believe, is on an amendment moved by me when the committee was last in session, to include in this section the ninety-seventh section of the act of 1864, so as to repeal that section also. It is in itself but an extension to all contracts of the principle overruled on full debate in regard to the tax on gas, and affirmed by the same committee in relation to railroad companies, which is that wherever a value is affected by the legislation of Congress that circumstance gives to Congress an absolute dominion over all contracts that are affected by it. In this form, or nearly so, I have heard the proposition stated in this House.

I must be allowed to say that disguise it as we may it is a monstrous one. I never have heard it successfully defended. I do not think there is any lawyer here who will undertake its championship. Nor do I regard the decision of the committee upon the question so far as it related to railroad companies as indicating any opinion either way, although it may have seemed to overrule the previous decision of the committee in regard to gas companies. I suppose it was a mere question as to the relative power of these two species of corporations, a question between the potency of gas on the one hand, and that of steam on the other, where, of course, the latter element prevailed, as it generally does.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not look to particular interests in offering this amendment, as I did not in my votes upon those two questions. I look only to the principle. I affirm that this ninety-seventh section of the act of 1864 is a blot upon our statute-book which ought to be wiped out at once. I believe it to be entirely indefensible.

But if the doctrine be a sound one, that wherever a value is affected by the action of the Legislature, Congress may then interpose in this way to readjust the relations that have been disturbed, where is it to lead us? Most of the legislation here has that effect. Whenever you impose a duty or take one off, you touch every contract connected with the article so burdened or relieved. So it is also whenever you contract or inflate the currency, which is the measure of all values. But every man contracts in view of such contingencies, and no man has a right to expect the Government to interpose for his relief. If it is proper to super-add the tax to price agreed on and charge it over to the consumer, then it would be equally proper, where a duty has been taken off and the value of the article diminished, to reduce the price at the expense of the vender for the benefit of the other party. It is said to be a bad rule that will not work both ways. If it is a good one in the case before us, it is equally good in the opposite direction.

Now, sir, I hope this proposition will not be voted down without consideration. Upon the debate in regard to the gas amendment, at an early stage of this bill, and when the House was fresh and disposed to listen, I thought the argument of the gentlemen who advocated the retention of that feature of the old law was run into the ground. The result was a vote more decisive than any other I recollect to have been ever cast against a recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means. We all know, from our experience in the progress of this and other bills, that it is sufficient to rally members here in great majorities to say to them, "Follow the committee." In that case, however, they did not; they did not respond to the appeal, and I trust they will not in this case.

This is all I have to say upon this question. I affirm again that as a general principle the section objected to cannot be defended. I do not think any respectable court in the United States would say that it is in the power of Congress to change the terms of existing contracts or to oblige a man to do what he has not contracted to do, and at their own will to shift the burden imposed by the contract upon one party upon the shoulders of the other.

Mr. CONKLING. I hope the Committee of the Whole will have no hesitation in rejecting the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAMS] to pursue symmetries and theories at the expense of consequences, which the gentleman cannot have contemplated or he would not have presented such a proposition.

Section ninety-seven of the act of July 30, 1864, was put where it is mainly out of regard to the interests of Pennsylvania. There were in that State owners and lessors of coal lands who had stipulated under lease for long terms to their lessees. The rent which they received was a mere pittance, and the proposition to impose a tax upon products and leave it for the lessors to pay was grossly inequitable; therefore, mainly in the interest of these very parties, a provision was introduced which put upon those to whom the profit accrued the burden of the tax.

I differ in fact, although I will not now take time to state my difference, with the proposition of law which the gentleman states. But the practical suggestion which the Committee of the Whole need to bear in mind is that the time has arrived when this object has almost ceased to be practical in the cases which the gentleman wishes to reach, and when the effect of this repeal would be detrimental vastly beyond anything which he seems to suppose.

Let me remind the committee of the case of the manufacture of tobacco, of matches, and many other cases which have been interwoven into the bill now proposed and into the two preceding bills upon this subject. Strike out at one dash the permission given to the producers to charge over to the consumers the tax you impose, and where would you leave those producers? You would annihilate completely the manufacture of matches; and in the case of the manufacture of tobacco in many of its forms the same result would follow. And unless the gentleman tells me that contracts made prior to July, 1864, have so far transpired that they would not be seriously affected by his proposition, I contend it would be unjust to offer it; and if they have, then this proposition is vox et præterea nihil; sound and nothing else. But if there be any contracts left for his proposition to act upon, as there are in truth, then this repeal would be grossly unjust.

Now, the only way to cure this difficulty of symmetry, (and I frankly admit that there is such a difficulty, though not objectionable to the extent which the gentleman has stated,) the only way to cure it is to revise the entire tax bill, and try to apportion these various taxes so that you can with propriety and safety say that the producer, the person who derives the profit in a large class of cases, and not the consumer, shall pay the tax. I hope the committee will try no such experiment as would be tried if the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAMS] should prevail.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If a thing is wrong, is unconstitutional, is it to be met by the argument ab inconvenienti?

Mr. CONKLING. I do not admit at all that it is unconstitutional. On the contrary, if the gentleman will make to me an argument to show that this section is unconstitutional, I will make to him an argument to show that a dozen other sections of the tax bill are unconstitutional upon precisely the same principle.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very likely.

Mr. CONKLING. At the proper time I wish to offer as a substitute for this section a very brief section, which will accomplish the very object sought to be accomplished by this section, but which, however, I think it fails to accomplish; and if the time suffices I will state briefly the difficulty with this section. It enumerates certain sections which the Committee of Ways and Means recommend should be repealed. Since that recommendation was made great changes have been made in this bill; and hence if we repeal those sections now by numbers we may leave other complicating sections standing upon the statute-book by omitting sections which we ought to enumerate. I therefore propose an amendment to strike out section forty-six and insert in lieu thereof the following:

And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed; and sections sixty and one hundred and fourteen of an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, are also hereby repealed.

I will state that sections sixty and one hundred and fourteen the committee and the House propose to repeal to carry out the free list.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CONKLING] to strike out will be in order when the question shall have been taken on the amendment proposing to perfect the text. The pending question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] to insert in line eleven of the forty-sixth section after "sixty-one" the words "and ninety-seven."

Mr. CONKLING. Would it be in order for the Chairman to state to the committee that the section proposed to be repealed by the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is that section which enables producers to add to the price of the article the amount of the tax.

The CHAIRMAN. It would not be in order.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Would it be in order to state there is no such section in the law as section ninety-seven? The act contains only seventy-one sections.

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is in order.

The amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS was not agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I now offer the following amendment, which I have already indicated:

Strike out section forty-six and insert in lieu thereof the following:

And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed; and sections sixty and one hundred and fourteen of an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, are also hereby repealed.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the effect of that?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. MORRILL. I offer an amendment, which, as it proposes to perfect the text, takes precedence of the amendment of the gentleman from New York. I move to amend by inserting after "sixty-six," in the last line of section forty-six, the words "together with all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith;" so that the section will read thus:

And be it further enacted, That sections sixty and one hundred and fourteen of the act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and sections twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-eight, thirty-nine, forty, forty-one, forty-two, forty-three, forty-four, forty-five, and sixty-one of the act amendatory thereof, approved July 13, 1866, together with all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The amendment of Mr. MORRILL was agreed to.

Mr. WARD, of Kentucky. I move to amend the pending section by inserting after "sixty-six," in the last line, the words "and so much of sections seventy-four and one hundred and sixty-four as relate to turnpike roads."

The amendment of Mr. WARD, of Kentucky, was agreed to—ayes eighty-seven, noes not counted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.]

Mr. CONKLING. In view of the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, I modify my amendment, so as to read as follows:

Strike out section forty-six, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed; and so much of sections seventy-four and one hundred and sixty-four as relate to turnpike roads, and sections sixty and one hundred and fourteen of an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, are also hereby repealed.

On the amendment of Mr. CONKLING, there were—ayes 40, noes 28; no quorum voting.

Mr. MORRILL called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MORRILL and CONKLING were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes sixty-three, noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The Committee of the whole rose informally; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message in writing from the President of the United States, was delivered to the House through Mr. W. G. MOORE, his Private Secretary.

TAX BILL—AGAIN.

The House again, in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BOWWELL in the chair,) resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1161) to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to amend by adding the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That whenever fraud has been, or may be alleged by the Government officials to have been, perpetrated by the distillers or rectifiers of distilled spirits, and the person charged denies the same and tenders to the assessor bonds with sufficient sureties, to be approved by said assessor, in double the amount of the alleged fraud, to appear at the district court of the United States for the proper district and answer the charge of fraud, either on indictment or in a civil suit, which the Government is hereby authorized to institute, and if the same be found against him to pay the full amount of said verdict and costs and abide by the sentence of the court, then no further proceedings shall be had by the assessor or collector, but the case shall be returned to said court, to be proceeded in to final judgment as in other cases. Until such decision the defendant shall be permitted the free use of his property.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. I move to add the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That any inspectors of distilleries appointed under the provisions of this act shall be required to give bond with security, approved by the Secretary of the Treasury or assessor of the district, in a sum of not less than $1,000, conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duties of such inspector.

Mr. SLOAN. I move the following substitute for that amendment:

That the office of inspector of distillery is hereby abolished.

The committee divided on the amendment to the amendment; and there were—ayes twenty-six; noes not counted.

Mr. SLOAN called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SLOAN and Mr. ALLISON were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 48, noes 51.

So the amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. SLOAN. I move the following amendment to the amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That all inspectors of spirits and distilleries, and all other inspectors of internal revenue, shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. That is already in the bill.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 65.

So the amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. DARLING. I move to strike out $1,000 and insert $5,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER's amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON made some verbal amendments; which were agreed to.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, moved the following as an additional section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That so much of any existing act of Congress as authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to retire from circulation any part of the United States notes in circulation, or now in the Treasury, shall be, and is hereby, repealed, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay out in pursuance of law all such United States notes as may be or may come into the Treasury, retaining in the Treasury only such amounts as the public interests may require.

Mr. MORRILL. I rise to a point of order, that the amendment is not germane to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FARQUHAR moved the following as an additional section:

SEC. —. That nothing in this act or the acts of which it is amendatory shall be construed as preventing distillers from making what is known and understood by manufacturers as "Bourbon" whisky.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 49.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I ask by unanimous consent a vote be allowed on this amendment in the House.

Mr. MORRILL. I object.

Mr. HILL moved the following as an additional section:

SEC. 47. And be it further enacted, That section nineteen of the act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved July 13, 1866, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the word "six" wherever it occurs in said section, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "eighteen."

The House divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 64.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. RANDALL, of Kentucky, moved the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, &c., That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to exempt distillers of brandy from apples, peaches, or grapes exclusively, from such of the provisions of this act relating to the manufacture of spirits as in his judgment may seem expedient, except as to the payment of the tax.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 71.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. DEFREES moved to insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. —. Be it further enacted, That from and after this date there shall be no tax levied or collected on draft harness and horse collars.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The committee here informally rose.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 811) for the relief of certain drafted men;

And act (H. R. No. 1188) for the relief of James Tetlow; and

An act (H. R. No. 590) for the relief of William Mann and Jacob Senneff.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had passed joint resolutions and a bill of the House of the following titles, namely:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 275) to extend the time for the use of certain vessels for quarantine purposes at the port of New York;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 252) to permit Captain John A. Webster, of the steamer Mahoning, to receive from the Government of Great Britain a gold chronometer; and

An act (H. R. No. 900) to fix the compensation of the officers of the revenue-cutter service, and for other purposes.

TAX BILL—AGAIN.

The committee then resumed its session.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That no action or prosecution for the recovery of any claim of the United States arising from alleged violations or frauds upon the revenue laws shall be compromised or discontinued without the assent of the district attorney of the United States for the district in which such proceeding is pending, or of the Attorney General of the United States; and such assent shall in all cases assign the reasons for such compromise or discontinuance, and shall be indorsed upon the papers in the case and shall be preserved in the files of the court.

Mr. SLOAN. I move to amend by striking out all after the word "discontinued."

Mr. HALE. I move to amend the part stricken out by inserting after the words "Attorney General of the United States" the words "and with the approval of the court in which the action is pending."

The amendment of Mr. HALE was agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. SLOAN, and it was disagreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. SHELLABARGER, as amended, and it was agreed to.

Mr. DARLING. I move to add the following as a new section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That an informer on furnishing satisfactory security to the court for the appearance of himself or his witnesses, and also for the costs and expenses of the proceedings, shall have the right to prosecute in the name of the United States, notwithstanding any refusal or neglect of any collector so to do, and upon furnishing the security as aforesaid the same proceedings shall be had as if the collector had authorized them, but without responsibility to him, and the proceedings shall be thenceforward under the control of the district attorney.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HIGBY. I move the following as an additional section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That section three of the act of March 3, 1865, amendatory of the act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, be amended by adding at its close as follows: Provided, also, That the Secretary of the Treasury may allow, by special instructions, the salary of any assessor, assistant assessor, or other officer of internal revenue, to be paid by the collector of the district, and the amount so paid to be deducted from the full amount of money otherwise required to be paid daily by such collector into the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. LYNCH. I move to add the following as a new section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act canned and preserved shell-fish shall be exempt from internal tax.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. ROSS. I move to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That all incomes exceeding $20,000 shall hereafter be taxed at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, anything in this act or the acts to which this is amendatory to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. MORRILL. I raise the question of order, that this amendment has been once offered and voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. This particular amendment has not been before the committee.

The amendment was disagreed to—ayes 39, noes 69.

Mr. HILL. I offer the following amendment as a new section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That whenever any claimant shall file, or who has already filed, a claim for the refunding of any tax or duty which has been erroneously or illegally assessed and collected, it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to notify by mail said claimants, or his duly appointed attorney, the disposition made of said claim, whether allowed, suspended, or rejected, with the cause of such suspension or rejection.

The amendment was disagreed to—ayes 25, noes 71.

Mr. MILLER. I move to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for any person interested in any instrument of writing to place thereon and cancel the necessary revenue stamps.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. DARLING. I offer the following as an additional section:

Be it further enacted, That any person who shall sell any empty cigar box or boxes, which have been stamped, without first removing such stamp, or shall refill any such cigar-boxes without first removing such stamp shall, on conviction of each offense, be liable to a penalty of $100, or to imprisonment not exceeding sixty days, or both, in the discretion of the court, with the costs of trial; and it shall not be lawful for any inspector or revenue officer to destroy any empty cigar box upon which a cigar stamp shall be found.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to amend the bill by adding as a new section, the following:

And be it further enacted, That a reduction of twenty per cent. shall be, and is hereby, made upon the salaries and compensation allowed by existing laws to collectors of internal revenue, assessors and assistant assessors.

Upon that amendment I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused; and the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. NIBLACK. I desire to ask what disposition has been made of the amendment offered a few minutes ago, allowing any person interested in a paper to place a stamp upon it and to cancel the stamp?

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment was rejected.

Mr. NIBLACK. I think the House did not understand that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. NIBLACK. I move to reconsider the vote upon that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not now in order in committee.

Mr. DARLING. I move to add the following as a new section:

Be it further enacted, That the dealers of any lotteries shall give bonds in the sum of $2,000 that the person paying such tax shall not sell any ticket or supplementary ticket of any lottery which has not been duly stamped according to law, and that he shall pay the tax imposed by law upon the gross receipts of his sales.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RADFORD. I offer the following as a new section:

Be it further enacted, That all articles placed on the free list shall be taxed one per cent. from and after June 1, 1868.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. TRIMBLE. I offer the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the tax on distilled spirits shall hereafter be one dollar per gallon; and all laws in conflict with this section are hereby repealed.

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to a point of order. We have already voted upon that proposition and have voted it down.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The precise question here presented has not been before the committee.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I rise to a point of order. The committee have already voted that the tax on whisky shall be two dollars per gallon; and therefore this amendment cannot now be offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. LE BLOND. I suggest that we reserve this question for a vote in the House. [Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 44, noes 79.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTWELL reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of Union, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1161, to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments thereto.

Mr. LE BLOND. I rise to a question of order. In Committee of the Whole a proposition was pending reducing the rate of tax on whisky to one dollar, a vote was taken upon it, but no quorum voted, the Chairman so announcing. Pending that vote a motion was made and carried that the committee rise and report the bill with the amendments of the Committee of the Whole thereto. Now, I would inquire if that does not bring the question into the House so as to enable us take a vote upon it in the House, the proposition in regard to the tax on whisky being pending and undetermined when the committee arose?

The SPEAKER. If the member from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] makes the point of order that less than a quorum reported the bill to the House, then the question would have to be submitted to the House. The Chair, however, cannot take cognizance of what was done in Committee of the Whole beyond what is reported to him by the Chairman.

Mr. LE BLOND. A division by tellers was called for in Committee of the Whole on the proposition to reduce the tax on whisky; but the Chairman did not appear to recognize the call.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I only desire to say that I did not hear any demand for tellers on the last vote.

Mr. MORRILL. Before I call for the previous question I will state that I understand my colleague on the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. HOOPER] agreed in Committee of the Whole that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] should have an opportunity in the House to offer an amendment in relation to the tax on tobacco and cigars. I now yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend the bill as reported by the Committee of Ways and Means by inserting what I send to the Clerk's desk in lieu of the following portion of the bill:

Also, strike out all from the words "cigarettes or small cigars," in the first paragraph relating to cigars, down to and including the words "twenty per cent. ad valorem on the market value thereof," in the last paragraph relating to cigars, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

On cigarettes, cigars, and cheroots of all descriptions, made of tobacco or any substitute thereof, the market value of which, including the tax, is not over eight dollars per thousand, a tax of two dollars per thousand; when exceeding eight dollars per thousand in market value, including the tax, a tax of eight dollars per thousand.

Insert the following in lieu of the part proposed to be stricken out:

Strike out from the third paragraph of the law relating to cheroots, cigarettes, and cigars, these words: "on all cheroots, cigarettes, and cigars, the market value of which is over twelve dollars per thousand, a tax of four dollars per thousand, and, in addition thereto, twenty per cent. ad valorem on the market value thereof," and insert the following: "on all cheroots, cigarettes, and cigars, the market value of which is over twelve dollars per thousand, a tax of four dollars per thousand and, in addition thereto, twenty per cent. ad valorem on the excess over twelve dollars of the market value thereof."

Mr. SCHENCK. I merely desire to say that the amendment which I now propose, if adopted, will make the law what the House proposed at the last session it should be.

Mr. DEMING. I do not understand that there was any agreement in Committee of the Whole that this amendment should be offered in the House.

The SPEAKER. It was an agreement between the Committee of Ways and Means and the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK.]

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is such an agreement as that binding upon the House?

The SPEAKER. It is not; but the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] can yield to allow the amendment to be offered.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say to members that an opportunity will be offered for any gentleman to call a separate vote upon any amendment which he desires to reserve for a separate vote. After these amendments have been indicated I will ask that the other amendments be voted upon in gross.

Mr. ROSS. Will the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] allow a separate vote to be taken upon the question of increasing the tax upon all incomes over $20,000? There are many of us who desire to record our votes on that question.

Mr. MORRILL. That is not in the bill in the shape of an amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. I desire to state that when I offered my amendment in Committee of the Whole there was a division, and the vote stood—ayes 26, noes 39; no quorum voting. A further vote which might have resulted in showing that there was no quorum present, was not insisted upon on the distinct understanding that I should be allowed to offer my amendment in the House and have a vote upon it. We certainly would not have allowed the question to go against this amendment without such an understanding.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to state my recollection of this matter; but before doing so I will ask the Chair if this amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] is adopted, will it not take the place of the five-dollar tax as proposed by me?

Mr. SCHENCK. It will.

Mr. MYERS. When my amendment was offered in Committee of the Whole, a vote was taken by division, and tellers were called for.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inform the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] that it is not material what the vote was in Committee of the Whole, because the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] can yield to any gentleman to offer an amendment, if he sees fit to do so, without regard to any understanding which was had in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MYERS. As the gentleman from Ohio has been permitted to make a statement, I trust I may be allowed to do the same. When the vote was taken upon my amendment no quorum voted, and the House took a recess. When the House again assembled I stated distinctly that if members would withdraw their objections to my amendment and allow a vote to be taken upon it in the House I would not press the question. That request was refused, the vote was taken, and my amendment was adopted.

The gentleman forced us into that, and the amendment prevailed. I want to say that is my recollection of it.

Mr. MORRILL demanded the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] that the amendment of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union is to strike out, and the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio is to perfect, the section. If the gentleman's amendment be adopted then the question will recur on striking out the paragraph as amended.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, in rising to close the debate under the rules I shall not trespass upon the time of the House longer than to explain some of the amendments on which I shall ask for a separate vote.

The first amendment is on page 8 in reference to licenses; on that subject the Committee of the Whole have reduced the amount proposed in the original bill from $500 to $100. I trust it will be the will of the House to restore it to what it was originally when reported from the Committee of Ways and Means. That course will be taken if it is the purpose to use all legitimate means to collect the whisky tax.

The next one on which I shall ask for a separate vote is the seventeenth on page 8. The wit of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] is always very good, but I submit to the House that we had better not enact practical jokes. This seems to be a practical joke, to except hominy and sauerkraut, and I hope the amendment will be non-concurred in.

The next amendment is number twenty-five, on page 9, in relation to cigars. Now, Mr. Speaker, the evidence in the possession of the office of the internal revenue at Washington, the evidence of every expert throughout the country and of assessors and collectors is in favor of one uniform rate of tax on cigars, and that unless we have that uniform rate we shall forego more than one half, if not two thirds, of the revenue from this source. I do submit after we have tried the experiment and found that discriminating rates and ad valorem rates are a total failure we should adhere to the principle of a single rate. The testimony, as I have said, of all the experts is that discriminating and ad valorem rates are a total failure. I do not know of a single one I have ever met having a different opinion on this subject.

The next is the fifty-fifth amendment on page 14. In the clause in reference to waterpipe the words "metal excepted" are inserted. It will be found that makes nonsense of the proposition and ought to be excluded.

The fifty-eighth amendment on page 14 is the next, and is in relation to leather. I understand the Committee of the Whole have stricken out the provision by which leather was exempted and inserted in lieu of it "boots and shoes." If the member who made the amendment is really in favor of lessening the cost of boots and shoes he would I think better accomplish his purpose by exempting leather, for two thirds of the cost of boots and shoes consists in the cost of the raw material. Sixty-five or seventy per cent. is included in leather. On boots and shoes a tax of two per cent. now exists, while there is a tax of five per cent. on leather; so that to relieve leather from the tax would lessen the cost of shoes and boots more than to remove it directly from shoes and boots. Beside that, we accomplish a wider and better purpose by exempting leather in order to escape the duplication of taxes. Leather goes into consumption in various forms, in carriages, harness, in belting for machinery, and so on; and it is an inevitable subject of the duplication of taxes everywhere. If we exempt it in the simple form in the raw material then we escape the objection of duplication of tax.

And there is still another reason, The manufacture of leather, the currying and dressing of leather, is a business that pervades the whole country. Perhaps it is the most equally distributed of any business in the United States; whereas the boot and shoe business is confined more to a locality, and to a locality that will regard it as a greater favor to have leather exempted than to have the tax taken off of boots and shoes. We have had heretofore an export trade in boots and shoes, but after we levied a tax on leather without drawback the whole export trade has been cut off root and branch.

The next amendment is the sixty-first on page 14. I start with the fact that we have exempted the manufacture of flax and hemp from any tax. The manufacture of jute is of a lower class than flax and hemp, and if we exempt flax and hemp this inferior article for bagging for grain and other articles should also be exempted. I trust the House will concur in restoring the provision as it stood, and exempt the manufacture of jute.

The next amendment on which I wish to ask a separate vote is the seventy-eighth, on page 15, in relation to cotton. I confess my surprise at this amendment. I cannot believe it was understood in any part of the House. The amount of revenue derived from this article last year was between eighteen and nineteen million dollars. I have no question that another season it will be a very much larger sum. We consume in this country about one fourth part of the usual average crop. Three fourths of it is carried abroad. If this provision is to prevail, all I can say is that we should strike out every other article which we have exempted, for we have gone as far as it is prudent in the amount of our exemptions, and the question arises whether we shall exempt all the articles which we have already included in the bill or this one single article. It is the only article upon which we derive any considerable amount of revenue from the entire southern rebel States. Take, for instance, Mississippi. I believe we get from the tax on income from that State only sixty dollars; and yet our own growers of wool for every dollar's worth which they sell over and above $1,000 have to pay a tax of five per cent.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I would be glad if the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means would state to the House how much revenue we will derive from the southern States in case the tax is removed from cotton.

Mr. MORRILL. The tax which we derive from those States from all sources including stamp tax and every other, but excluding the tax on cotton, is between four and five million dollars. I think the House fully understands this question—that it is not an oppressive tax. I have no question but what with the provision that we have adopted in relation to drawbacks the southern States themselves, when they shall be restored, will be in favor of the continuance of this tax if they can have a drawback on manufactured goods and yarns when exported. Why, sir, at the present moment there is more enterprise and vigor in starting cotton establishments in the South than in relation to any other industrial employment in the whole country.

And let me state another fact, that this tax, instead of diminishing the amount of our exports, will inevitably increase them. If gentlemen will look at the amount of cotton manufactured by England and sent abroad in the shape of cotton yarn, they will find that it amounts to many hundred million pounds. Now, if this tax shall continue, instead of our sending abroad the present large amount of cotton in its raw unmanufactured state, we shall in a very brief time send a very large portion of it abroad in the shape of cotton yarn and coarse heavy fabrics, and thereby double the amount of the value of our exports of cotton.

Mr. BLAINE. Do they not get a drawback on the whole?

Mr. MORRILL. No, sir; only the amount exported.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him whether, according to the present construction of the internal revenue department, cotton is taxed as manufactured within the district where it is grown?

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly.

Mr. BLAINE. Is not the tax dependent upon its removal?

Mr. MORRILL. Not at all. I understand all cotton that is manufactured anywhere in this country must pay a tax; but if the manufactured article goes out of the country unmixed with anything else it is allowed the same amount per pound as drawback as was paid on the raw cotton, which will be a loss to the party of about fifteen per cent., the Government deriving the entire amount of duty upon the cotton in its raw unmanufactured state, and paying back only that amount after the loss to which the article is subjected in the process of manufacture.

Mr. BLAINE. That is not my point; but it is whether or not the cotton-mill that is located near the plantation, and to which the cotton has to be removed, pays any tax upon the raw cotton?

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly.

Mr. BLAINE. The law, I understand, is construed differently.

Mr. MORRILL. If the gentleman will read it he can construe it himself.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not construe it that way, but I ask whether the practice is not to construe it thus?

Mr. MORRILL. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. CONKLING. Such a construction would be right in the teeth of the law.

Mr. ROLLINS. I desire to ask the gentleman whether, if the tax is taken off cotton, the whole amount of revenue collected in the southern States will pay the expense of collecting it? I understand it will not; that all the ten States together will not pay as much by a million dollars as the little State of Rhode Island. And while I am up I ask the gentleman's permission to submit the following table, taken from the Commissioner's report, verifying the fact I have stated:

Statement of internal revenue taxes collected in the rebel States for 1866, as per Commissioner's report.

States.	Total Tax.	Cotton Tax.	Other sources.
Alabama.....	$4,101,340 81	$3,733,620 25	$367,720 56
Arkansas.....	256,137 12	203,073 84	53,063 28
Florida.....	98,215 22	97,488 24	726 98
Georgia.....	4,284,918 28	3,554,544 88	730,373 90
Louisiana.....	6,055,219 75	4,300,150 17	1,755,069 57
Mississippi.....	781,261 03	756,629 27	24,631 76
North Carolina.....	413,015 46	211,658 57	201,356 89
South Carolina.....	986,253 35	731,939 67	254,313 68
Texas.....	1,571,540 85	1,395,524 17	176,016 68
Virginia.....	1,151,847 19	168,288 29	983,578 90
Total.....	19,693,749 05	15,152,896 85	4,540,852 20

So that by the operation of the amendment of the gentleman from Maine the tax of the ten rebel States is reduced to $4,546,852 20, or more than $1,200,000, less than the small State of Rhode Island. This amount distributed through the ten States would hardly pay the expenses of collection, and it would be as well to except those States from the operation of the internal revenue laws. If this amendment is to stand it might be appropriately entitled "An act to increase taxation in the loyal for the benefit of the rebel States."

Mr. MORRILL. All I have to say further upon this subject is that I conceive it better that the bill should fail than that this tax should be stricken out.

The next amendment upon which I ask a separate vote is No. 80, on page 16, in relation to exempting the products of hand-loom. While I sympathize with the manufacturers of two-ply and three-ply carpets, I doubt the propriety of putting in this amendment, especially in its present form. I do not feel authorized to state how far this would go or how much it would exempt; but I certainly think it would exempt very much more than what appears upon the simple face of the amendment. I regret that the old hand-loom and hand-spinning-wheel have gone out of date; that we have no longer the pursuit of the art of what used to be called home manufacture in every house, and that the hand-loom referred to in this amendment are now employed in large establishments where it is found necessary or practicable to use them. For aught I know, the same description of goods may be made by steam-power. I hardly conceive it proper, therefore, for us to make a provision that articles shall be subject to a tax if made in one way, and shall be exempt from it if made in another way.

The amendment on page 8 in relation to taxing gas companies I wish also reserved, and these I believe are all.

Mr. DELANO. I desire a separate vote on the one hundred and twenty-seventh amendment, which provides that where whisky is taken upon giving bonds to the assessor it shall be restored, and the question shall be referred to the courts. It is a new section. The same principle was attempted to be introduced into the bill last winter applying to everything, and it was defeated. It certainly ought not to be applied to this article, for the only way that we can attempt to collect this tax is by the most stringent laws we can enact.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope the gentleman from Vermont will allow me one minute.

Mr. MORRILL. I would be glad to do so; but I am besieged on all sides.

Mr. STEVENS. It is in relation to the tax on cigars. The present law cuts up all our cigar interest. It is just a New England cigar-box. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHENCK. I understand the gentleman from Vermont to declare himself in favor of a dead-level tax on cigars, as we term it. I ask him whether he proposes to abandon his own bill, which provides for a classification? It is the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] which proposes a dead-level tax. What I propose is to let the law, which has never been fairly tried, remain as it is, and merely apply a twenty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. I do propose to stand by the bill which we have reported from the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. SCHENCK. Then what does the gentleman mean by an argument in favor of a dead-level tax, which is not his bill?

Mr. MORRILL. What I meant was that I was in favor of a dead-level tax but as a compromise with the gentleman from Ohio and others. I was willing that the cigars of the cheapest kind should come in at a very low rate. And in response to the gentleman from Pennsylvania I will say that the information before the Committee of Ways and Means is that frauds are more extensively practiced in the gentleman's district than in any other in the Union.

Mr. STEVENS. All I can say is that in my district the dead-level tax cuts up the whole trade. We lose over a million dollars in my own county by this infamous tax.

Mr. BIDWELL. I ask a separate vote on the amendment in relation to brandy made from grapes, on page 10.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I ask for a separate vote on all the amendments after No. 122, including all the new sections that came in this morning.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask a separate vote on the amendment on page 15, line sixty-seven, striking out the words "locomotives and marine" before the word "engines."

The rest of the amendments in which separate votes were not demanded were agreed to.

The House then proceeded to vote upon the amendments of the Committee of the Whole, upon which separate votes had been asked.

The first amendment was to strike out the following, in lines forty-five and forty-six of the bill:

In paragraph sixteen, strike out "$100" and insert in lieu thereof "$500."

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 33, nays 67.

Before the result was announced, Mr. WARD, of Kentucky, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 67, nays 78, not voting; 45; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Bergen, Boyer, Bromwell, Buckland, Campbell, Cooper, Dawson, Defrees, Eldridge, Farquhar, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Hale, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hawkins, Hise, Hogan, Hooper, Edwin N. Hubbard, Humphrey, Hunter, Ingersoll, Kerr, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Leftwich, Loan, Marshall, Maynard, McCullough, McKee, Miller, Moorhead, Newell, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Orth, Paine, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Ritter, Rousseau, Shanklin, Spalding, Stevens, Stillwell, Stokes, Strouse, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Trowbridge, Andrew H. Ward, Henry D. Washburn, Williams, and Wright—67.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Bidwell, Blaine, Boutwell, Brandegee, Broomall, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Eggleston, Eliot, Ferry, Garfield, Grinnell, Griswold, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Jenckes, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, William Lawrence, Longyear, Marvin, McRuer, Mercer, Morrill, Morris, Moulton, Myers, O'Neill, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Thayer, John L. Thomas, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, William B. Washburn, Wentworth, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—78.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Barker, Benjamin, Bingham, Blow, Bundy, Chanler, Sidney Clarke, Culver, Delano, Denison, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Farnsworth, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Hill, Asahel W. Hubbard, Hubard, Jones, Kuykendall, Lathin, Latham, Lynch, Marston, McClurg, McIndoe, Phelps, Plants, Radford, John H. Rice, Rogers, Ross, Stigraeves, Sloan, Starr, Francis Thomas, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Welker, Whaley, and Winfield—45.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment was to amend lines forty-eight and forty-nine of the bill, so as to read as follows:

Provided, That no special tax shall be required of any person for the manufacture of hominy, brooms, cider, bread, butter, sausages, sauerkraut, wine, and cheese.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines fifty-four, fifty-five, and fifty-six, as follows:

Strike out in the paragraph relating to gas the words "and until the 30th day of April, 1867."

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 55, noes 41.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. MORRILL called for tellers.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I call for the yeas and nays on agreeing to this amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I would ask the Speaker to state to the House the effect of this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would prefer that the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means should state the subject of it, as he is probably more familiar with the subject.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I object. Debate is not in order. I prefer to have the Speaker explain it.

Mr. HALE. I rise to a question of order. I ask if it would be in order for the Chair to state to the House that those who vote "ay" on this amendment will vote for allowing gas companies to continue to charge their tax over to the consumer, while those who vote "no" will vote for preventing them from doing so?

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman has stated it exactly opposite to what it really is. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state, if gentlemen desire it, especially as tellers and the yeas and nays have both been called, what the effect of this amendment will be, as I understand it. Under the provisions of a previous tax bill gas companies were allowed the privilege of adding the tax paid to the Government in their bills against consumers of the gas, up to the 30th day of April, 1867. This bill, as reported from the Committee of Ways and Means, proposed to strike out that limitation of time, so that hereafter the companies should be allowed to charge that tax over to the consumers without any limit. The Committee of the Whole recommend that that paragraph be stricken out, the effect of which would be to restore the limitation as existing in the present law. So that an "ay" vote would require the companies to pay the tax themselves, while a "no" vote would allow them to charge it over to their customers.

Mr. SCHENCK. In brief, "ay" is for the people, and "no" for the gas companies.

The question was upon ordering the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 99, nays 52, not voting 39; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ancona, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Bromwell, Buckland, Bundy, Campbell, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cooper, Dawson, Defrees, Deming, Donnelly, Eggleston, Eldridge, Ferry, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grinnell, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Hawkins, Henderson, Hill, Hise, Hogan, Holmes, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Humphrey, Hunter, Julian, Kerr, Ketcham, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Leftwich, Marshall, Maynard, McKee, McRuer, Miller, Morris, Moulton, Newell, Niblack, Nicholson, Neill, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Phelps, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Rollins, Ross, Rousseau, Sawyer, Schenck, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Stevens, Stillwell, Stokes, Strouse, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Andrew H. Ward, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, and James F. Wilson—99.

NAYS—Messrs. Ames, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Barker, Bergen, Broomall, Chanler, Conkling, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Delano, Dixon, Dodge, Eliot, Garfield, Griswold, Hale, Higby, Demas Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Kasson, Kelley, Kelson, Ketcham, Loan, Longyear, Marvin, McCullough, Mercer, Moorhead, Morrill, Myers, O'Neill, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Scofield, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Starr, Thayer, Hamilton Ward, William B. Washburn, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—52.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Arnell, Benjamin, Blaine, Blow, Sidney Clarke, Culver, Denison, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Harris, Hart, Hayes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Jones, Kuykendall, Latham, Le Blond, Lynch, Marston, McClurg, McIndoe, Paine, Plants, Radford, William H. Randall, Rogers, Sloan, Taber, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Winfield, and Wright—39.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolutions and a bill of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 275) to extend the time for the use of certain vessels for quarantine purposes at the port of New York;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 252) to permit Captain John A. Webster, jr., of the steamer Mahoning, to receive from the Government of Great Britain a gold chronometer; and

An act (H. R. No. 900) to fix the compensation of the officers of the revenue-cutter service, and for other purposes.

DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 904) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered "one," and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

Insert in line fourteen after "dollars," Provided, That no money shall be paid to the present minister-resident at Portugal out of any fund whatever, and this provision shall continue in force until repealed by Congress.

That the Senate recede from their amendment numbered "two."

THADDEUS STEVENS,
N. P. BANKS,

Managers on the part of the House.

CHARLES SUMNER,
GEORGE G. FOGG,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TAX BILL—AGAIN.

The SPEAKER. The next amendment, on which a separate vote has been demanded, is that in regard to cigars. The amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following, beginning after the word "thereof," in line ninety-three, page 9, of the printed bill:

"The market value of which, including the tax, is not over eight dollars per thousand, a tax of two dollars per thousand; when exceeding eight dollars per thousand, in market value, including the tax, a tax of eight dollars per thousand;" and insert in lieu thereof the words "five dollars per thousand;" so that the paragraph will read:

On cigarettes, cigars, and cheroots of all descriptions, made of tobacco or any substitute therefor, five dollars per thousand.

The SPEAKER. This is the amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MYERS.] In the House the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] has moved an amendment, which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the entire paragraph and insert the following:

Strike out from the third paragraph of the law relating to cheroots, cigarettes, and cigars, these words: "On all cheroots, cigarettes, and cigars, the market value of which is over twelve dollars per thousand, a tax of four dollars per thousand, and, in addition thereto, twenty per cent. ad valorem on the market value thereof;" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

On all cheroots, cigarettes, and cigars, the market value of which is over twelve dollars per thousand, a tax of four dollars per thousand, and, in addition thereto, twenty per cent. ad valorem on the excess over twelve dollars of the market value thereof.

The SPEAKER. The first question is upon the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to propound an inquiry to the Chair: if both these amendments should be voted down, would not the bill stand as reported by the Committee of Ways and Means?

The SPEAKER. If both amendments should be rejected, the printed bill would remain in this respect as reported by the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. STEVENS. And if the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole should be adopted, it will still be competent for the House to adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK?]

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. STEVENS. Otherwise the New England bill stands. [Laughter.]

On agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union there were—yeas 72, nays 28.

Mr. ALLISON called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. SCHENCK.

Mr. SCHENCK called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 66, nays 87, not voting 37; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ancona, Anderson, Arnell, Baker, Barker, Boyer, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cooper, Cullom, Dawson, Delano, Eldridge, Finck, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grinnell, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Harris, Hawkins, Hill, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Kerr, Koontz, Kuykendall, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Leftwich, Marshall, Maynard, McClurg, McKee, Miller, Moorhead, Niblack, Paine, Price, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Sawyer, Schenck, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Stevens, Stokes, Strouse, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Andrew H. Ward, Henry D. Washburn, Whaley, and Winfield—66.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Bergen, Bidwell, Boutwell, Brandegee, Broomall, Buckland, Campbell, Conkling, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Defrees, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Griswold, Hale, Higby, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, Humphrey, Hunter, Jenckes, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelson, Ketcham, Ladin, Loan, Longyear, Marvin, McCullough, McRuer, Mercer, Morrill, Morris, Myers, Newell, Nicholson, Neill, O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Rollins, Scofield, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Starr, Taber, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Wright—87.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Benjamin, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Broomwell, Chanler, Culver, Denison, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Farnsworth, Ferry, Hart, Hayes, Henderson, Hise, Hogan, Asahel W. Hubbard, Hulburd, Jones, Latham, Lynch, Marston, McIndoe, Moulton, Phelps, Plants, John H. Rice, Rogers, Rousseau, Sloan, Stillwell, Robert T. Van Horn, and Elihu B. Washburne—37.

So the amendment of Mr. SCHENCK was not agreed to.

The next amendment was the following:

Page 14, at the end of line thirty-one insert "metal excepted;" so it will read:
Drain, gas, and water pipe made of wood, iron, cement, or any other material, metal excepted.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The next amendment was the following:

Strike out the following on page 14:
"Leather of all descriptions, and goat, calf, kid, sheep, horse, hog, and dog skins, tanned or partially tanned, curried, finished, or in the rough;" and in lieu thereof insert the following:
Boots and shoes, shoe-strings, shoe-bindings, and gloves of leather or skin.

The House divided; and there were—yeas 30, nays 78.

Mr. HUMPHREY demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

The next amendment was the following:

Page 14, line forty-four, strike out the following:
Manufactures of jute.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The next amendment was the following:

On page 15 insert the following:
That from and after the 1st day of September, 1867, no tax shall be levied or collected on cotton grown within the United States.

Mr. DAWSON demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 63, nays 94, not voting 33; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Anderson, Arnell, Barker, Bergen, Baine, Boyer, Buckland, Campbell, Chanler, Cooper, Dawson, Dodge, Eggleston, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hawkins, Hise, Hogan, Chester D. NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Bidwell, Boutwell, Broomall, Bundy, Reader W. NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, Benjamin, Bingham, Blow, Brandegee, Broomwell, Culver, Davis, Denison, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Farnsworth, Hart, Hayes, Henderson, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Hulburd, Jones, Kasson, Latham, Marston, McIndoe, Moulton, Plants, Rogers, Sloan, Stillwell, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Francis Thomas, Robert T. Van Horn, and Elihu B. Washburne—33.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

During the vote,

Mr. SHELLABARGER stated that his colleague, Mr. PLANTS, was absent on account of business.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to reconsider the several votes which have been taken.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask for a separate vote in reference to the whisky license.

Mr. CONKLING. I move then to reconsider the vote on tobacco and cigars; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion by Mr. STEVENS, by unanimous consent, the amendments of the Senate to the Indian appropriation bill were taken from the Speaker's table, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

Mr. SPALDING submitted the following privileged report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House No. 912, making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1868, having met after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from their third amendment.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the first amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows, striking out all of said amendment and inserting in lieu thereof the following as a new section, to come in at the end of the bill:

And be it further enacted, That no part of the moneys appropriated by this or any other act shall be applied to the pay or subsistence of any cadet from any State declared to be in rebellion against the Government of the United States, appointed after the 1st day of January, 1867, until said State shall have been restored to its original relations.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL moved that the morning session be extended till the tax bill was disposed of.

The motion was disagreed to.

The hour of half past four o'clock p. m. having arrived, the House, in pursuance to previous order, took a recess till half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

TAX BILL.

The SPEAKER stated that the House was still acting under the operation of the previous question on the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to the tax bill, upon which separate votes had been asked.

The next amendment, upon which a separate vote was demanded, was to insert after line seventy-six, on page 16, the following:

Fabrics when the product of hand-looms when not used in penitentiaries or other penal establishments.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the twenty-second section of the bill, as follows:

Sec. 22. And be it further enacted, That the owner, agent, or superintendent of any distillery established as hereinbefore provided, shall erect, in a room or building to be provided and used for that purpose and for no other, two or more receiving cisterns, each to be at least of sufficient capacity to hold the spirits distilled during the day of twenty-four hours, into one of which shall be conveyed each day the spirits manufactured in said distillery during that day; and such cisterns shall be so constructed as to leave an open space of at least three feet between the tops thereof and the floor or roof above, and of not less than eighteen inches between the bottoms thereof and the floor below, and shall be separated in such a manner as will enable the inspector to pass around the same, and shall be connected with the outlet of the stills, boilers, or other vessels used for distilling, by suitable pipes or other apparatus so constructed as always to be exposed to the view of the inspector; such cisterns and the rooms in which they are contained shall be in charge of and under the lock and seal of the inspector; and on the third day after the spirits are conveyed into such cisterns the same shall be drawn off into casks or other packages under the supervision of the inspector, and shall be immediately inspected, gauged, and proved, and the casks or packages marked as herein provided shall be removed directly to the bonded warehouse before mentioned: Provided, That the spirits may be drawn off from said cisterns at any time previous to the third day, if so desired by the owner, agent, or superintendent of such distillery; and all locks and seals required by law shall be provided by the Secretary of the Treasury at the expense of the owner of the distillery or warehouse, and the keys shall always be in the custody of the inspector or assistant inspector, or the officer having charge of the distillery or warehouse.

Mr. McKEE demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. McKEE and GARFIELD were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 36, noes 60.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out in line one hundred and ten the words "on brandy made of grapes, fifty cents per gallon."

The question was put; and there were—ayes 32, noes 40; no quorum voting.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 91, nays 37, not voting 62; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, James M. So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKEE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on pages 45 and 46 was non-concurred in. It was to strike out the following words:

In paragraph sixteen [of section seventy-nine] strike out $100, and insert in lieu thereof $500.

By striking out the paragraph the tax on distillers will be left at $100, as it is now.

Mr. UPSON. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. MORRILL. Did the gentleman vote with the majority?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman voted with the minority, and therefore he cannot make the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BIDWELL. I voted with the majority, and I make the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. KOONTZ. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 62, nays 65, not voting 63; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, James M. So the House refused to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The question recurred on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. PRICE demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 72, nays 65, not voting 53; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Baker, Bergen, Bidwell, Bingham, Boyer, Bromwell, Buckland, Campbell, Reader W. So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question recurred upon the amendment.

of the Committee of the Whole to strike from the bill the following:

In paragraph sixteen [of section seventy-nine] strike out "$100" and insert in lieu thereof "$500."

Mr. GARFIELD. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 73, nays 63, not voting 54; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Baker, Barker, Bergen, Bidwell, Boyer, Bromwell, Buckland, Campbell, Reader W. Rice, Rogers, Rousseau, Schenck, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Strouse, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Winfield, and Wright—54.

The next amendment was in the clause, in the free list, relating to steam-engines and boilers, to strike out the words "locomotives and marine;" so that the clause will read "steam-engines, including boilers."

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 32, noes 28; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MORRILL and Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 43, noes 61.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment was to add the following section:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That whenever fraud has been or may be alleged by the Government officials to have been perpetrated by the distillers or rectifiers of distilled spirits, and the person charged denies the same and tenders to the assessor bonds with sufficient sureties, to be approved by said assessor, in double the amount of the alleged fraud, to appear at the district court of the United States for the proper district and answer the charge of fraud, either on indictment or in civil suit, which the Government is hereby authorized to institute, and if the same be found against him, to pay the full amount of said verdict and costs, and abide the sentence of the court, then no further proceedings shall be had by the assessor or collector, but the case shall be returned to said court to be proceeded in to final judgment, as in other cases. Until such decision the defendant shall be permitted the free use of his property.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes thirteen, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I called for a separate vote on all amendments adding sections to the bill. I now withdraw that call.

The remaining amendments of the Committee of the Whole were then agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. MORRILL. I call the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed: and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TROOPS IN UTAH.

Mr. BIDWELL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Territories be instructed to inquire into the necessity of having a larger military force stationed in Utah Territory, in order to protect the people against Indian hostilities and other outrages; to preserve order when the civil authority shall fail or prove inadequate to any condition or emergency demanding such aid; and generally to secure the execution of the laws of the United States in said Territory; also what additional number of troops and what legislation, if any, are required to accomplish the objects above named, and meet the wants and condition, present as well as prospective, of said Territory.

Mr. BIDWELL. I have here a communication upon this subject from General W. B. Hazen, of the United States Army, who made a tour of inspection in that Territory last year. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NEW ORLEANS CUSTOM-HOUSE.

Mr. ELIOT. I am instructed by the select committee to investigate matters in connection with the New Orleans custom-house to make a report and ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject. I move that the report be laid on the table and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOYER. As a member of that committee I desire to say that there is one point in which I do not entirely agree with the majority of the committee. I therefore ask the privilege of making a minority report, or, what will answer my purpose as well, three minutes' time to state what I object to in the report.

Mr. ELIOT. I desire to say that it appears in the report, precisely in accordance with what I supposed to be the wish of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BOYER,] that he dissents from one of the conclusions to which the majority of the committee have arrived.

Mr. BOYER. I dissent from the fifth point in the report of the minority in relation to there not having been proper care observed in the selection of persons appointed to positions in the custom-house.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope time will not be consumed in the discussion of this matter.

Mr. ELIOT. I shall want to make a statement if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOYER] makes one.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to make a minority report?

Mr. BOYER. I do; but only upon that one point.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to reserve the right to present a minority report. Is there any objection?

There was no objection.

MOUNT VERNON MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I ask leave to withdraw from the files of the House the memorial and accompanying papers of the Mount Vernon Manufacturing Company.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to give notice that to-morrow morning, immediately after the morning hour, I shall move to take up the tariff bill, and shall endeavor to have the House continue its consideration until the question is disposed of. I shall expect the friends of the measure to be here to support it.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 578) entitled "An act to extend the provisions of an act entitled 'An act for the final adjustment of private land claims in the States of Florida, Alabama, and Missouri, and for other purposes;" in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to proceed to the consideration of the special order, the regular appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DONNELLY in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1184) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868.

On motion of Mr. STEVENS, by unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with, and the bill was read by clauses for amendment.

The Clerk read the following:

For construction of permanent platforms for modern cannon of large caliber in existing fortifications of important harbors, $100,000.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I move to amend by striking out the clause just read.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not know what reason there can be for offering this amendment. When these fortifications are finished—and it is supposed that the appropriations here proposed will finish them—they must have these platforms.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I have made this motion because I wish to economise somewhere. Here is an item proposing to appropriate $100,000 "for construction of permanent platforms for modern cannon of large caliber." We have no war on hand now; we are not likely to have any; and whenever we want anything in that line we can make it in a very short time. Before there will be any occasion to use these works we shall have perhaps some further improvement in cannon, or the whole works will have gone to decay, not to be rebuilt. This appropriation is quite a large amount. The aggregate amount of the appropriations in the bill is very large; and I suppose, sir, though I am not advised on that point, that the bill contains a large portion of the appropriations which were defeated the other day.

Mr. STEVENS. Appropriations to the amount of about three quarters of a million have been omitted in preparing this bill. I will say to my colleague that, after the bill was defeated the other day, we sent for the General in command and asked him to make a statement of the lowest sums with which he could carry on the works already in progress without permanent injury to the public service. He made out a statement of these appropriations as the smallest that would be justified in view of the necessities of the public service.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I am satisfied that there is very little necessity for this appropriation of $100,000; and it is a pretty large sum. I suppose, however, that if we adopt the theory lately adopted by some of our friends here—that we can abolish all taxes by paying for everything in greenbacks—it does not make much difference how much we appropriate.

Mr. ROSS. I move to refer the bill to the Committee on Retrenchment.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order.

On the amendment of Mr. SCOFIELD there were—ayes 41, noes 40; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN, under the rule, ordered tellers, and appointed Messrs. SCOFIELD and KASSON.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 51, noes 49.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For survey of northern and northwestern lakes, $155,000.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I move to strike out "fifty-five," which will leave the appropriation at $100,000.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to say on that motion I am not disposed to make captious opposition to the pending proposition, especially after the reforms that have been introduced into it; but I am satisfied $155,000 is more than ought to be expended for these surveys this year. All these lakes have been surveyed except about one half of Lake Michigan and a portion of Lake Superior, and certainly $100,000 is enough to keep all the force occupied that the Engineer Bureau can spare.

Mr. PAINE. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not prevail. It is very manifest from the statement he makes he has no definite knowledge of the condition of the lake surveys. The complaint he has made against the other appropriations will not apply to this one, for it is designed and is needed for civil purposes. I am satisfied from the examination I have had occasion to make as a western man and a resident upon one of these western lakes, that the appropriation made by the committee in accordance with the recommendation of the War Department is not too great for the protection of the interests of our inland commerce. The necessities of that survey, the necessities not only of the western country, but of the country at large, require this entire sum to be appropriated and expended in making proper survey of our northwestern and northern lakes. I hope, therefore, the House will not be inclined, if disposed to economy in any direction, to be niggardly toward the surveys of our northern and northwestern lakes, so essential to the success of our western commerce and all the interests located along those lakes.

Mr. STEVENS. As we have stricken out the appropriation for platforms for heavy cannon, as gentlemen seem to believe there should be no forts there, and if we do not need any forts, of course these surveys will be unnecessary. But, sir, I judge both this appropriation and the one for platforms are necessary, and I shall ask for a vote in the House on the amendment just adopted. I hope the pending motion will be rejected.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes thirty-one, noes not counted.

Mr. SCOFIELD called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SCOFIELD and Mr. PAINE were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 47, noes 50.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to add the words "to be expended under the direction of the Coast Survey." It is manifestly the proper policy of this Government to have the surveys of all of its water lines done by the same department.

Mr. STEVENS. The lakes have been excluded from the operations of the Coast Survey Bureau.

Mr. SCOFIELD. The survey of the northern lakes is very nearly completed, as I have before stated, only a part of Lake Michigan and a part of Lake Superior remaining unsurveyed, and all the maps and drawings are in the Bureau of Engineers. If the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee prevails, it will put the work of the present in one bureau, while the work of the past is left with another bureau in another department.

Mr. MAYNARD. By letting these surveys be closed by the Coast Survey we will have a system of uniform maps for our coasts and for the lakes. At the request of friends, however, I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. ROSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill; and on this subject I simply desire to say if my motion shall prevail we will save, in my judgment, without detriment to the public interest $1,300,000.

In looking over this bill I find it is made up almost exclusively of appropriations for repairs, and that exactly $50,000 is required for the repair of each fort. It seems to me that no such expenditure is required for any such purpose. I do not see how it should require $50,000, exactly $50,000, for each one. It seems to me to be wise economy and good policy on our part to strike out the enacting clause of this bill and to save this money to the Treasury. I hope my motion will be agreed to, and that we will go to other measures.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Chairman, in connection with the motion to strike out the enacting clause of this bill the gentleman from Illinois should also move to disband the Army and dismantle the Navy, to do away at once with all the nation's means of offense and defense. If there be any sound maxim supported by history, acknowledged by all civilized nations, recognized by all civilians and military men, except my friend from Illinois, it is that in time of peace we should prepare for war.

In order to cultivate as far as possible a practical economy, this House the other day did with the former bill what the gentleman asks may be done with this. The Committee on Appropriations, appreciating the importance of at least preserving these great fortifications, sent again to the War Department, had again an interview with the officer in charge of that branch of the service, and, in accordance with the supposed wishes of the House, they asked him to report the lowest possible estimate of the expense actually necessary for this branch of the service to prevent the decay of existing works commenced, and do those things which are absolutely necessary to preserve in proper condition the works already completed. In accordance with that estimate these items are incorporated in the bill which is now before the House.

Now, is it proper, when a bill has been prepared in this way by an officer who is the most competent to prepare it, prepared for the purpose of meeting all reasonable wishes of the House, for gentlemen on the floor, who know nothing at all, myself included, if I choose to take that ground, of the necessity or the details of our works of defense, to move to abolish the whole of the appropriations and leave the works to go to ruin from utter neglect? I submit this is neither statesman-like nor economical. I therefore hope that neither this motion will be adopted nor any other motion in the direction of indiscriminate and unintelligent reduction of appropriations which, we are informed on the highest authority, are needed for the public service.

Mr. ROSS. I regret that I should have called down the wrath of my distinguished friend from Iowa by having attempted to economize the expenditures of the Government in a slight degree. He says we know nothing about these things. Somebody must have made a very close and accurate calculation of the amount necessary to preserve all these forts to have ascertained that it takes exactly to a cent $50,000 for each one of these works. How happens it that just $50,000 are necessary to preserve each one of these forts that has been built long ago?

A MEMBER. Built a year ago.

Mr. ROSS. The gentleman says built only a year. Well, sir, if it requires that amount to preserve a fort that has been built only a year there must be something wrong. Why, sir, if our houses were to decay at this rate they must be made of very extraordinary material.

Mr. KASSON. I suppose the gentleman could not have failed to observe the other branch of my declaration, that it was to preserve those we had, and also to continue the work on the unfinished ones and keep them in a condition to promote economy and safety. Those works to which the gentleman refers are most of them unfinished.

Mr. ROSS. Looking over the bill I see it is all for preservation. Now the gentleman says, "In time of peace prepare for war." I doubt if that is a correct doctrine under all circumstances.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Will the gentleman allow me to offer an amendment which, if adopted, will, I have no doubt, make the bill perfectly acceptable to him?

Mr. ROSS. My own motion is very acceptable to me, if it is adopted. Nothing can be more acceptable than to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Will the gentleman allow it to be reported for information?

Mr. ROSS. Not just at present. This doctrine of always preparing for war in time of peace I do not appreciate exactly. I do not think it is necessary that we should burden ourselves with unnecessary taxes year after year for fear somebody is going to whip us. I am not of the opinion that any of the nations of the world desire particularly to have a conflict with this country. I rely upon our resources and our strength in case of emergency to come to the rescue of our Government. That is sufficient for defense. They are not going to attack us. But according to the notion of the gentleman from Iowa we should be armed to the teeth in order to have peace. Carry that notion out to its legitimate result and each man who comes into this Hall ought to arm himself with a pistol and bowie-knife in order to insure peace among ourselves. I do not recognize any such doctrine. There is no necessity for it either in an individual or national point of view. Hence these appropriations, in my judgment, are useless expenditures. Year after year we have squandered the people's money upon these fortifications, which are of no utility or benefit to the country, and the sooner we stop this raid upon the national Treasury the better for us all.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to permit the amendment which I send to the Chair to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that no motion to amend is in order at this time until this motion is disposed of.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I only ask to have it read for information.

Mr. GRINNELL. There is no objection to its being read.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I am in favor of the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois. I believe this bill ought not to pass. There may be some few items in it that are needed, but I believe that most of them are wasteful. I would not make the motion again to strike out the enacting clause, having made it the other day, but I will vote for it.

I know that economy is always unpopular in a legislative body, and that prodigality is always popular. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] a few days ago, in speaking of a slight effort to save some millions of dollars to the Treasury and to relieve the tax-payers of the country to that extent, called it one of those "spasms of economy" with which, he said, this House was sometimes seized; and I thought at the time that there was some approbation of the remark indicated by members of the House. I wish that gentlemen might be seized with one of those "spasms" now, so that we might vote down the bill; but I suppose that since we learned the other day that we can at any time issue $100,000,000 of legal-tender notes with which to pay our debts, without levying the amount off the people in taxes, the House will not hesitate to vote away almost anything.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that nearly all of these appropriations if made will be lost to the country. I suppose that some few additions and repairs may be made to the fortifications, but they will be useless. We have outgrown all the old modes of fortification. Since I made the motion to strike out the enacting clause a few days ago, a great many men who know more about these matters than I do, and even more than the gentleman from Iowa, military men, have spoken to me on the subject and have told me that these appropri-tions would be so much waste, that these fortifications would all have to be made over again upon some new plan, that the experience and developments of our late war had shown that to be so; and that we ought to make no appropriations either for erection of new fortifications or the repair of old ones until we should be prepared to avail ourselves of the lessons of the last four years.

Mr. DELANO. I have been unable to ascertain exactly the amount that this bill appropriates.

Mr. STEVENS. I will inform the gentleman: $1,365,000.

Mr. DELANO. Now, Mr. Chairman, I recognize the wisdom of the maxim cited by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Kasson.] "In time of peace prepare for war;" and if this is the best way of obeying it, then let us appropriate this money. However, I do not myself know of any better way to prepare a nation for war than to put her finances in a sound and healthy condition, so that when a heavy and sudden draft is made upon her she may be able to meet the exigency. And when a nation is, as ours is, just recovering from the effects of an exhausting war, her wisest policy and her first and most pressing duty is to husband her resources and strive in every way to put her finances in a healthy condition.

Therefore, sir, I do not believe that the true way of putting in practice that wise maxim is by appropriating this money for these fortifications. I do not believe that there is much use in them, or that if war should come upon us they would be of any material service to the country; and I think military men in this House will concur with me in the opinion that these permanent fortifications are really of much less utility than we have hitherto supposed them to be. Our late war taught us that; and, if I am not mistaken, it also demonstrated that an army could in a few hours throw up defenses, in the form of earthworks, much more valuable and effective than those of a permanent and very costly character.

It will be seen, by looking over the list of appropriations in this bill, that there are appropriations for improvements where, if what I have just adverted to be correct, they are totally unnecessary. Now, in view of these things, to which I call the attention of the House, I hope this whole appropriation bill will be postponed, at least for the present. I think the whole system is one of annual drain upon the Treasury of the United States without any returning benefit equal to that drain. I am satisfied that this annual drain is perhaps more for local purposes, for the benefit of particular localities, than for the common weal. I could say more upon this subject, but I forbear.

Mr. STEVENS. When the former bill, containing appropriations to the amount of nearly two million dollars, was before this House, the enacting clause of the bill was struck out. The Committee on Appropriations then deemed it their duty to get up something new. They accordingly sent for the General in command, and asked him to make out an estimate of the lowest sum that would be necessary to carry on what was already nearly completed, and to preserve what was completed without commencing any new work.

That estimate was made out according to our instructions; and the estimate I now hold in my hand. It leaves out everything that the General thought came within our instructions, and inserts nothing but what he deemed absolutely necessary to carry on works nearly finished without loss to the country. We have copied that estimate word for word in this bill and submitted it to the House.

Now, I do not pretend to know so much about these things as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DELANO] or my colleague, [Mr. SCOTFIELD.] I do not pretend to know much more about it than the General in command. But those gentlemen do know a great deal more about it than the military authorities of the nation; they know that these things are not necessary; they know that fortifications do not obstruct an enemy. Sir, if that be so, why was it, after the rebels had seized our forts throughout all their territory, that it took us so long and compelled us to construct so enormous a fleet before we could enter their harbors? They held us at bay almost to the end of the war, and kept us out of the harbors by means of these very inefficient works to which the gentlemen refer.

Now, we must do one of two things: abolish your whole system of fortifications, leave your sea-board forever exposed to the inroads of the enemy, make no further efforts to finish, man, and arm those works; or else do not let them sink into decay by degrees, do not let them go down now if you ever mean to perfect them. If you neglect them now you will some time have to appropriate four times as much to rebuild them.

But we shall never get through the appropriation bills if we devote so much time to discussion. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. Will my colleague [Mr. STEVENS] allow me one word in reply?

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman had eight or ten words in advance.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I want to know if the leader of the House is to get up here and denounce three or four members as knowing nothing, and give us no chance to say one word to show that we are not quite so ignorant as he would represent us to be?

Mr. STEVENS. I call the gentleman to order.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion that the committee rise is not debatable.

The question was taken; and upon a division, there were—ayes 41, noes 38; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. KASSON and Mr. SCOTFIELD were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes fifty-nine, noes not counted.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DONNELLY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, according to order, had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the bill of the House No. 1184, making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, and had directed him to report that they had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that when the House shall again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the fortification appropriation bill, all debate on the bill be closed in one minute.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DONNELLY in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the fortification appropriation bill as the special order.

The CHAIRMAN stated that under the order of the House debate on the pending bill closed in one minute.

The pending question was on the motion of Mr. ROSS, to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. ROSS, it was agreed to—ayes 61, noes 49.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I move that the Committee rise and report its action to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. DONNELLY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 1184) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, had directed him to report back the same, with a recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The question is, "Shall the enacting clause be stricken out?"

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the further consideration of that question be postponed until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot promise that it will come up to-morrow. It is impossible to say when the bill will be reached if it be postponed.

Mr. STEVENS. I withdraw the motion to postpone and call for the yeas and nays on the question of striking out the enacting clause.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, (at nine o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to, there being—ayes 39, noes 59.

The question recurred on striking out the enacting clause.

Mr. HALE. Is this motion debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely trust that this House will not take so grave a step as to kill this bill at this period of the session, but that a little reflection may be devoted to the consideration of what the necessities of the nation require.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOTFIELD,] the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DELANO,] and others have expatiated upon the amount of the appropriations involved here, and they insist that this money is absolutely thrown away. I submit to those gentlemen and to this House that if it be true that we need no further appropriations for the defense of this country, for the maintenance of our means of defense, their argument will not stop with this bill. And I will ask those gentlemen how they reconcile the position which they take here upon this bill with the votes which they have given for a permanent military establishment and for our naval appropriations? If it be true that we need no fortifications, it is equally true that we need no Army, and I may say equally true that we need no Navy.

It is idle for gentlemen to say that these fortifications are useless as a means of defense. No man in his senses ever dreamed of such a thing as maintaining anything in the nature of a military power for the defense of the country except by maintaining proper fortifications. If it is true that we do not need these fortifications, we certainly do not need the troops to garrison them. And if this bill shall be defeated by a vote of this House, then I submit that to make ourselves consistent in any degree we ought to go further and repeal what we have done in regard to the organization of the Army and the support of the Navy. Let us disband the Army, disperse the Navy, dismantle the fortifications, trusting to that good time which is coming when we shall have no more wars or rumors of wars.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest that the provisions in regard to the Army and Navy have reference to ourselves, while these fortifications have reference to protection against a foreign enemy? Has the gentleman considered that distinction?

Mr. HALE. I have not considered it; and I do not suppose that that is the theory on which any gentleman acts. I suppose, sir, that we are to be a united people henceforth and forever; that we are to present a united front against all foreign enemies, and not to be looking forward to future dissensions among ourselves. I certainly hope that this motion to strike out the enacting clause will not prevail, but that we shall go on and perfect the bill in Committee of the Whole and pass it through the House.

Mr. ROSS demanded the previous question. The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 57, nays 69, not voting 64: as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ames, Ancona, Baker, Benjamin, Boyer, Buckland, Campbell, Sidney Clarke, Cook, Dawson, Delano, Deming, Eldridge, Farquhar, Finck, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Hawkins, Hayes, Hill, Hise, John H. Hubbard, James R. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Scofield, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Sloan, Stokes, Nelson Taylor, John L. Thomas, Trimble, Van Aernam, Andrew H. Ward, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, James F. Wilson, and Stephen F. Wilson—57.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Barker, Baxter, Bergen, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Broomall, Bundy, Chandler, Cobb, Conkling, Cooper, Cullom, Davis, Dawes, DeFreese, Dodge, Donnelly, Eliot, Ferry, Garfield, Grinnell, Hale, Henderson, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbell, Hubbard, Hunter, Jenckes, Kasson, Ketcham, Lafin, Latham, Longyear, Lynch, Marvin, McClurg, McRuer, Moorhead, Morris, Myers, Niblack, O'Neill, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, Alexander H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Spaulding, Starr, Stevens, Taber, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Upson, William B. Washburn, Williams, Windom, and Woodbridge—69.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Beaman, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Bromwell, Reader W. Clarke, Culver, Darling, Denison, Dixon, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Griswold, Harris, Hart, Higby, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jones, Kelly, Kelso, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Loan, Marshall, Marston, McCullough, McIndoe, Miller, Morrill, Moulton, Phelps, Plants, Radford, Raymond, John H. Rice, Rogers, Rousseau, Sitgreaves, Stilwell, Strouse, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thornton, Trowbridge, Bart Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Winfield, and Wright—64.

So the House refused to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

The SPEAKER. By Rule 123 the bill is recommitted to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union without further action or debate.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of discharging the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill, so that it may be brought into the House for action.

Mr. SCOFIELD. A portion of the bill has not yet been read in committee, and that portion I have marked to strike out. I did not intend to move to strike out any of these surveys.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

IRON-CLAD CONTRACTORS.

Pending the motion to adjourn,

Mr. DELANO. I move to take up the message from the Senate asking for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill for the relief of iron-clad contractors, and that the House agree to the conference asked for.

There was no objection and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. SLOAN, Mr. DELANO, and Mr. McKEE managers of said conference on the part of the House.

TENNESSEE AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

Mr. MAYNARD, by unanimous consent, moved to take from the Speaker's table the amendment of the Senate to House bill No. 213, to extend the provisions of the act in regard to agricultural colleges to the State of Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to.

The amendment of the Senate was read as follows:

Strike out the following:
Provided, The grant of lands so made by the act to which this refers and is amendatory shall be held by the State of Tennessee subject to this condition: that no person shall ever be employed as a professor or teacher in the said agricultural college for the State of Tennessee who had ever held military or civil office under the so-called confederate government, or under the rebel State government of Tennessee.

Mr. MAYNARD moved to concur.

The motion was agreed to.

39TH CONG. 2D SESS.—No. 98.

PARIS EXPOSITION.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, transmitting the communication of Governor Fairchild, of Wisconsin, with resolutions of the Wisconsin Legislature, in reference to the Paris Exposition; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. STEVENS's motion was then agreed to. And thereupon (at ten o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Also, the petition of the officers of Wagner Free Institute of Science, praying the continuation of that provision of the law heretofore existing, which allowed the importation, duty free, of all books, maps, &c., intended for public libraries, colleges, and other literary institutions.

By Mr. LYNCH: The petition of George Gwynn, of Portland, for relief.

By Mr. PAINE: The memorial of M. L. Fairser-vice, of Wisconsin, for an amendment of the act of March 3, 1865, for the benefit of officers commissioned before, but mustered after that date.

Also, the memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, for payment for arresting and keeping a certain prisoner of the United States.

By Mr. WELKER: A petition and resolution of Elyria Temple No. 93, of the Independent Order of Good Templars, asking legal enactments rendering any citizen addicted to habitual use of alcoholic stimulants ineligible to any elective or appointive office.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 19, 1867.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.

On motion of Mr. CONNESS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SUMNER. I present a memorial from the Union League of Winchester, Virginia, setting forth a resolution, unanimously adopted by them, as follows:

"That the bill for the reorganization of civil government in the State of Louisiana, as introduced by Hon. THOMAS D. ELIOT, of Massachusetts, and passed by the House of Representatives, meets our earnest approval, and we unite in requesting Congress to extend similar terms of reconstruction to the State of Virginia."

I ask that this memorial lie upon the table. It was so ordered.

Mr. RAMSEY presented a memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota, in favor of the removal of the Chippewa Indians to their own lands; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota, in favor of a grant of land to aid in the construction of the Green Bay and Lake Pepin railroad in Wisconsin; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota, in favor of an appropriation for the improvement of the navigation of the Minnesota river; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota, in favor of the establishment of a mail route from Geneva to Freeborn, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota, in favor of the establishment of a mail route from Richmond to Chipewia, in that State, via Lake George, Big Grove, Grove Lake, White Bean Lake, Reno City, and Homes City; which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. SUMNER. I present another petition, which I have received since I was on the floor a few moments ago, from colored citizens of the District of Columbia, and late soldiers of the Union army, in which they ask Congress to see that the colored regiments of the regular Army are officered by colored men who did good service and distinguished themselves in the war for the suppression of the rebellion. They add that they do this because they think Congress are their true friends and will no longer countenance any difference on account of race or color. I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented a petition of citizens of Idaho Territory, praying that troops may be sent to that Territory to protect the citizens from Indian depredations, and that a superintendent of Indian affairs may be appointed other than the Governor of that Territory, and recommending Edward W. Taylor for that position; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. POMEROY presented resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, directing the Governor of that State to turn the State arms now at Topeka over to the General Government and to discontinue the use of the building now used as the State arsenal, and in favor of transportation for the said arms being furnished by the Government; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer another petition, which I have received also since I was on my feet before, from the Southern Republican Association, whose place of meeting is in Washington. The petition contains a resolution, adopted unanimously, as follows:

That in any action by the Congress of the United States touching the condition of the States lately in rebellion it is essentially necessary to the protection of the lives and property of loyal men, and to the creation of loyal governments in those States, that the present existing governments be abolished, loyal men of all races be enfranchised, and at least a portion of the rebels disfranchised, and the organizing of legitimate State governments confided to loyal hands.

We therefore respectfully but earnestly ask Congress to apply the bill known as the "Louisiana bill," reported by Mr. ELIOT, of the House of Representatives, to all the insurrectionary States not now represented in Congress, and we disapprove the bill now pending before the House of Representatives known as the "military bill," as it passed the Senate of the United States.

THOMAS A. DURANT, President.

D. H. BINGHAM, Secretary.

As this whole question is now before the Senate, I ask that the petition lie upon the table.

It was so ordered.

Mr. TRUMBULL presented a petition of citizens of McLean county, Illinois, praying for the repeal of the law now in force requiring a reduction of $4,000,000 per month from the circulation of United States Treasury notes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ROSS presented a resolution of the Legislature of Kansas, in favor of a pension being granted to Eliza Drake, whose son, her only support, was killed by the Indians while in the discharge of his duty as a private in company E, sixteenth regiment Kansas volunteer cavalry; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. POMEROY, it was Ordered, That the petition of Michael Hennessey, praying for a pension, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 163) to provide in certain cases, for the removal of alcohol from bonded warehouses free from internal tax.

LAND TITLES IN SANTA CLARA.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask the consent of the Senate at this time to take up the bill received from the House of Representatives last evening and laid on the table on my motion. It is House bill No. 878, to quiet title to land in the town of Santa Clara in the State of California.

Mr. SUMNER. I should like to ask if that bill will probably take much time.

Mr. CONNESS. It will not. If it does I shall not press its consideration now. The Committee on Public Lands have agreed upon it. It is a matter of importance to my State, but will excite no discussion.

Mr. SUMNER. The only reason I ask the question is that there is a bill of immense political urgency, the Louisiana bill, which I think the Senate ought to act upon at once.

Mr. POMEROY. This bill will take no time. It has received the concurrence of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will not shake the gory locks of the Louisiana bill at everything that comes up here. It is a very formidable measure, we know. We may take hold of it directly.

The motion of Mr. CONNESS was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 878) to quiet title to land in the town of Santa Clara, in the State of California. It proposes to relinquish and grant all the right and title of the United States to the land situated within the corporate limits of the town of Santa Clara, in the State of California, as defined in the act of the Legislature of that State incorporating the town, to the corporate authorities of the town and their successors, in trust, for and with authority to convey so much of the land as is in the bona fide occupancy of parties upon the passage of this act, by themselves or tenants, to such parties; but this grant is not to extend to any reservation of the United States, nor to prejudice any valid adverse right or claim, if such exist, to the land or any part of it, nor preclude a judicial examination and adjustment of it.

Mr. CONNESS. I will simply say that this is a town of eighteen years of age in our State, the title to which is still in an unsettled condition. I have an amendment to offer which proposes to apply the provisions to two other of our towns in the same condition. The Committee on Public Lands of this body, as I have said, have considered the matter, and I suppose it will excite no discussion. My amendment is in line five after "Santa Clara" to insert "Petaluma and Placerville," and also to strike out the word "town" wherever it occurs in the bill and to insert the word "towns."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed; and its title was amended so as to read: "A bill to quiet title to land in the towns of Santa Clara, Petaluma, and Placerville, in the State of California."

PILOT LAWS.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the consent of the Senate to take up a bill of a single section, which will occupy but a few moments, in relation to pilots. It is Senate bill No. 467.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 467) to amend the act entitled "An act further to provide for the safety of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, to regulate the salaries of steamboat inspectors, and for other purposes," approved July 25, 1866.

The bill proposes to amend section nine of the act entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act further to provide for the safety of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, to regulate the salaries of steamboat inspectors, and for other purposes,'" approved July 25, 1866; so as to read as follows:

SEC. 9 And be it further enacted, That all vessels navigating the bays, inlets, rivers, harbors, and other waters of the United States, except vessels subject to the jurisdiction of a foreign Power and engaged in foreign trade, and not owned in whole or in part by a citizen of the United States, shall be subject to the navigation laws of the United States; and all vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and navigating as aforesaid, shall also be subject to all rules and regulations consistent therewith, established for the government of steam vessels in passing, as provided in the twenty-ninth section of an act relating to steam vessels, approved the 30th day of August, 1852. And every sea-going steam vessel now subject or hereby made subject to the navigation laws of the United States, and to the rules and regulations aforesaid; shall, when under way, except upon the high seas, be under the control and direction of pilots licensed by the inspectors of steam vessels, vessels of other countries and public vessels of the United States only excepted: Provided, however, That nothing in this act, or in the act to which it is amendatory, shall be construed to annul or affect any regulation established by the existing law of any State requiring vessels entering or leaving a port in such State to take a pilot duly licensed or authorized by the laws of such State, or of a State situate upon the waters of the same port.

Mr. MORGAN. This bill reenacts the ninth section of the act of last year. The only new provision in it is contained in the proviso at the end of the bill exempting from the provisions of the act of last year such States as have pilot laws already that are satisfactory. The bill has received the unanimous approbation of the Committee on Commerce, and there is a written report accompanying it, but unless its reading is called for by some Senator I will not ask to have it read. I believe there is no objection to the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIEUTENANT JOSEPH P. FYFFE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to consider the bill (H. R. No. 140) to restore Lieutenant Joseph P. Fyffe to his grade in active service of the Navy, which has been reported favorably by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which authorizes the President of the United States to nominate, and with the advice and consent of the Senate to appoint, Lieutenant Joseph P. Fyffe to the active list of the Navy, and to restore him to the rank to which he may be entitled thereon.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 1143) to provide for the more efficient government of the insurrectionary States, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. THADDEUS STEVENS of Pennsylvania, Mr. SAMUEL SHELLABARGER of Ohio, and Mr. JAMES G. BLAINE of Maine, managers at the same on its part.

LIEUTENANT COMMANDER S. L. BREESE.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask the Senate to take up a little joint resolution, similar to the bill which has just passed, of the same nature precisely, and which was considered by the committee at the same time. It will take no time to dispose of it. It is to restore another lieutenant to the active list of the Navy, and was reported along with the bill which has just been acted upon. It is House joint resolution No. 216.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I appeal to the Senator from Indiana to allow me to make a motion with regard to the military government bill which has just been returned from the House of Representatives.

Mr. HENDRICKS. This will only take a minute.

The motion of Mr. HENDRICKS was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 216) for the restoration of Lieutenant Commander S. L. Breese, United States Navy, to the active list from the retired list. It authorizes the President of the United States to nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to appoint, Lieutenant Commander S. L. Breese to the active list of the Navy, with the rank to which he may be entitled thereon.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire simply to say, lest it might be supposed that I was in favor of the passage of this resolution by my saying nothing, that it does not meet my approval.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYN, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House (H. R. No. 356) fixing the compensation for the bailiffs and criers of the courts of the District of Columbia; and that the House had also agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 1099) providing for the election of a Congressional Printer.

The message further announced that Mr. R. C. SCHENCK, of Ohio, had been appointed a manager on the committee on conference on the part of the House on the joint resolution of the Senate (S. R. No. 90) to suspend temporarily the collection of the direct tax within the State of West Virginia, in the place of Mr. JAMES A. GARFIELD, of Ohio.

GOVERNMENT OF SOUTHERN STATES.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS, the Senate proceeded to consider its amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 1143) to provide for the more efficient government of the insurrectionary States, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and upon which the House had asked a committee of conference, and had appointed Mr. STEVENS, Mr. SHELLABARGER, and Mr. BLAINE as managers of the conference on the part of the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and agree to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope that will not be done. A Senator behind me says, "Oh, yes." Mr. President, this is no ordinary bill. As I think, in its present position, it is a question not to be committed to a conference. We know very well how matters are managed by conference committees. We know what compromises are made, and how little is to be said and how little to be done when their reports come before us. This question, in my judgment, transcends in importance any other that has ever been before the American Congress. Therefore, as I think, it should be considered with the deliberation that its importance demands. I do not deny that conference committees are generally appointed with a view to reflect the opinions of the bodies upon the question on which the conference is asked; but I need not say that of all systems of legislation that which is the result of action in a conference committee is the least satisfactory.

Now, sir, what is the difference between the House of Representatives and the Senate upon this question? I undertake to say that it is a fundamental difference, upon which at this time a conference committee can give us no additional light, cannot aid us in arriving at a correct solution. Besides, Mr. President, I am impressed that—as I shall call it without intending to reflect upon the action of the other branch of the national Legislature—the unfortunate decision arrived at there is in part the result of not the best faith on the part of professed advocates of this great measure. I say this because the importance of the subject, as I have before observed, demands the utmost candor as well as the most serious contemplation.

What will be the result if we commit this measure to a committee of conference? Are they to agree to strike out the provision which requires, as a prerequisite, that the franchise shall be conceded and provisions to guaranty it incorporated in the constitutions of the States proposed to be reorganized in the South? Is that a question to be compromised upon? How shall it be compromised upon? Compromised by the Senate giving way? Why, sir, if they gave way on that point no report of a conference committee, I undertake to say, could be adopted in the other branch of this Legislature at all. Is the Louisiana bill, so called, to be substituted in a conference report for this bill? I object to that course, not because of what the Louisiana bill contains, but because it presents a scheme diametrically differing from the one now before us, and which, if it is to be considered at all, I insist must be considered in open Senate.

I need not say that the result arrived at by the Senate in reference to this bill was after the most mature consideration that was ever given to any proposition that came before this body, resulting in a unanimity, at least on this side of the Chamber, unparalleled in legislative proceedings; a result hailed by the country at large, demanded by the most intelligent and powerful of the American press, alike acceptable to the industrial and commercial interests of the country, which suffer from a continual disorganization of the country affecting its vital industries. And yet it is proposed now to commit the consideration of this great measure to a committee of three of this body, who shall compromise on the one hand by abandoning a material and fundamental condition, or, on the other hand, by attempting to substitute for it a proposition essentially differing and involving the reorganization of the rebel States.

Now, Mr. President, I object. I hope that this proposition will be discussed in open Senate and not in a conclave of conference. I am rather in favor this morning, since the House by whatever means—and I shall have something to say in the further progress of the debate upon the means, so far as they are within my knowledge—since the House, I say, by whatever means, have arrived at the conclusion that they have, I am rather in favor of laying it upon the table in the Senate, and then taking up the Louisiana bill, and so amending that as to make it acceptable to the majority of this body. I desire, Mr. President, in behalf of the portion of the country that I represent and of the industrial interests of the country everywhere, that this question shall receive the most open and serious and full deliberation in open Senate; and I say again, I object to confining its further consideration to the narrow, special embraces of a conference committee of three members of each body.

Mr. STEWART. I will inquire if it is in order to ask for a division of the question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. STEWART. I ask for a division of the question; that is, I desire to amend the motion by moving that the Senate continue to insist on its amendment without agreeing to the conference asked for by the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the motion were an original one here the motion of the Senator from Nevada to divide it would be perhaps correct; but it comes from the House; they, having disagreed to our amendment, appointed a committee of conference, and asked a concurrence in the proposed conference. To insist, therefore, on our amendment would not answer the question of the House whether we will have a conference with them on the subject or not. The Chair thinks the motion, under the circumstances in which it is placed, is not divisible in the way suggested.

Mr. SHERMAN. If such a motion were made in the Senate originally as an independent motion, probably the Chair is correct; it is not divisible as a matter of right; but a Senator has the right to move to adhere or to insist. A Senator would have the right simply to move that the Senate insist on its amendments. That we have done; and it may even go so far as to insist on an amendment to an amendment. The motion to insist on an amendment is the first question put. The Senator from Oregon couples the two together; that is, that the Senate insist and agree to a committee of conference. Perhaps that is not divisible, because it is a distinct motion; but any other Senator has a right simply to have the question put on insisting. That sends the bill back to the House for another vote. They can then still further insist on their disagreement, and afterward we can have a committee of conference. I think that is the practice at least; I am not very familiar with the rules. The motion to insist is always in order, and can be put without the motion for concurring in a conference.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I presume it is advisable to pursue the same course in reference to this bill that is pursued in reference to other bills about which the two bodies disagree. The fact that it is a very important bill only makes it the more necessary, as it seems to me, to adopt the usual practice in such cases. I do not know what ground the honorable Senator from California has for assuming that the differences between the two Houses are wholly irreconcilable, and that it is not possible for a committee of conference to agree upon something that will substantially embrace the provisions of this bill and at the same time obviate the objections that exist to its passage. I know that the debate (if it be allowable to introduce in a discussion of this kind the debate in the other House) took a wide range; but it is possible that if a committee of conference is appointed such an agreement might be made as would be satisfactory to both branches of Congress. It is entirely within the power of the Senate, when the report of the conference committee is made, to agree or disagree to that report. Nobody is bound by the action of the committee of conference. It is with a view of expediting the passage of this bill, if possible, that I make this motion for a committee of conference. I find that there is some division of opinion among our friends in the Senate as to the better course to be pursued; but it seems to me that under all the circumstances we had better try this expedient. We can no more than fail. I am inclined to the opinion that if we insist on our amendment and send the bill back to the House it will necessarily result in the defeat of the bill. I believe it to be our duty under the circumstances, considering the importance of the bill, to make every possible effort to secure its passage in substance, if not in the precise form in which it was passed by the Senate. I hope, therefore, that there will be no serious objection to this proceeding.

Mr. SUMNER. I am in earnest, sir, for the passage of some substantial measure that shall give relief to our suffering fellow-citizens in the rebel States. The Senate has made its best endeavor; the House has refused to concur with what we have done; and the question now is what action we shall take. The Senator from Ohio, if I understood him, proposed to interpose a motion of delay to the effect that we should send this proposition of the House back and ask them to vote upon it again. Why, sir, if we do that we kill the bill; so I fear, at least. To me it seems plain that out of such a course there can be no substantial result. Farewell, then, during this session to any just and beneficent measure either of protection or reconstruction, both of which I wish to accomplish. Farewell, because there will not be time in which to accomplish this great result. Surely not unless the House should be inspired to a course which is too much to expect.

The only remaining question, then, is whether this great measure shall be committed to a conference committee between the two Houses. I have heard it observed on this floor that the measure was too vast for any conference committee. On that, sir, let me make one remark: there is a time to sow and a time to reap. So also there is a time for open debate in this Chamber and there is a time for the action of conference committees. We have passed the first stage and are now in the second. We have arrived at that period when, according to the natural course of business, this great measure can find its solution only through a conference committee. If you set aside a conference committee you set aside every just and beneficent measure of protection or of reconstruction. For one, sir, I will not take that great, that terrible responsibility. I long for something, and I now take the only way which seems to me practicable.

Mr. POMEROY. I gather from the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts that he sees a way of passing this bill providing there is a committee of conference and the two Houses agree to it. I never like to make any reference to the difficulties of passing a bill. Our duty is to do what we can toward passing it. But the Senator having alluded to it, I will say that I can see no way of passing this bill and having it become a law even if there is a committee of conference and the two Houses agree. I believe it is too late in the day. I do not believe it possible that such a bill as we want can become a law this session even though the two Houses do agree. I only make that remark in reply to what was said by the Senator from Massachusetts, that some bill might become a law. I have no idea that such a bill as the Senate want, judging from the votes we have had on this bill and the fact that we have passed it, can become a law at this session by any conference whatever.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope that the Senate will insist on their amendment and concur in the request for a conference. I do not know, I have taken no pains to inquire, what was the leading difficulty or principal difficulty in the minds of gentlemen of the House with reference to the amended bill as we sent it to them, but I am told that it arose out of a belief that the amendment, what is called the Blaine amendment, as redrawn, had not sufficient safeguards about it; that it left too much to what was supposed to be the rebel element in the original voting; and they did not think that our loyal friends in the South and the loyal portion of the country would be safe under it. That was the leading objection. Now, sir, with the committee that has been appointed there, and which represents that feeling—not that the Blaine amendment goes too far, but that it does not go quite far enough—there will be no difficulty, probably, in an agreement on something that will be satisfactory to both Houses. Whether the bill can become a law or not at this session is a question depending not upon us. Our duty plainly is to do all that we can toward making it a law. When we shall have accomplished that the responsibility will not rest upon us. If we undertake to refuse a conference and say we will not ascertain what the difficulties are and will not try to obviate them, the responsibility will be upon us here of refusing all attempts to pass such a law as would answer satisfactorily our purpose.

Now, sir, I confess that so far as I am concerned I concur in the idea that the Blaine amendment, so called, does not go far enough with regard to safeguards. That is my objection to it, and has been from the beginning. I would have preferred, as I stated here—I do not know that I stated it publicly in debate, but I stated it to gentlemen in conversation—I would very much have preferred the military bill, as it was called, pure and simple, without having anything else upon it, and leaving to other legislation, if it was judged expedient, what else might be done. We should then have stood in a perfectly good and sound condition, in my judgment, before the country. I could see no objection to it, and I had no quivering or shaking about it one way or the other.

We had proposed to these rebel States guarantees that were demanded of them before we would listen to the subject of reconstruction. We went before the country upon them, and the country approved our position. We therefore stood perfectly well. I belong to that class of men who think that in a difficult crisis, where there is confusion and it is troublesome to ascertain what it is best to do, true statesmanship requires that you should do no more than is absolutely demanded by the exigency of the case. That being my impression, I was willing to stand upon that and wait, because I thought we could afford to wait.

But, sir, it was felt throughout the country, for some reason or other, that the freedmen in the South, and our loyal friends there generally, were not safe, and that something should be done for their protection. Instead, therefore, of framing mere civil governments which could give them no protection, unless they represented the prevailing sentiment of the loyal people—and we all know that they are but a very small minority there—it was thought that we should give them protection that would be efficient; and that was the same protection to which they are entitled now from the Executive, but which the Executive does not give—that is, military protection which we could direct the Executive to give, and see whether an issue would be made with Congress upon that point. That was what would have been most satisfactory to me; and would have been, in my judgment, safest without any committal as to the particular terms that we should require in the setting up of civil governments.

But, sir, a majority of the Senate, contrary to the vote of a majority of the House who had rejected the amendment, and a large majority of the Senate—it was the prevailing sentiment, and a sentiment to which I felt myself compelled to yield in order to save the bill—considered that something should be done by way of holding out terms of reconstruction. Those terms, it seems from all I can learn, are not satisfactory to a strong feeling of the House requiring stronger guarantees. If that is the case, is it so difficult, is it so hard to appoint a committee which shall meet the committee on the part of the House, and with some variation of this amendment make it satisfactory to both branches of Congress, and thus have a law which will be efficient and will accomplish both purposes? I see no difficulty in the way.

Besides, we are taking a responsibility with reference to the matter if we refuse to act which we cannot very well stand under. Suppose we insist upon our position, and say we will have no conference; suppose, then, that the House, acting with precisely the same temper that we exhibit, should say, "We adhere;" then the bill is lost; and at this period of the session we cannot afford to lose it if it is a bill that we ought to pass. Certainly it would be very unprecedented, almost without precedent in the history of this Congress, to refuse to confer with the House, which has acted consistently, because in rejecting this bill it has only rejected what it rejected before. It might have been anticipated that such would be the result, because the bill came to us with this amendment substantially refused in advance. We made it, and they now object to it and send it back to us still declining. It only shows that there should be a conference between the two Houses in order to meet the exigency and determine upon the terms that will be satisfactory to both Houses. We have the same power over it when it comes back from a committee of conference that we have now. If we do not like the report of the committee of conference we can reject it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We cannot amend it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is very true we cannot amend it, but we can reject it and give the subject to another committee of conference, who can amend it and change it if it is objectionable. There is always a way to meet that. There is no trouble about it.

Now, sir, I do not want to see this bill lost, and I will say to my friend from California that the same objection to a committee of conference does not lie in this case that lies in the case of a tariff bill or a tax bill or something of that sort, in which a great many things are mixed up together, and we may be in the hands of a committee of conference to a greater or less degree. This presents a single question which everybody can comprehend, and a gentleman can at once state his objections to the result of the committee of conference if he has any.

Under these circumstances it strikes me that the wise thing for us to do, instead of taking the responsibility upon us of saying we will have our own bill as we passed it or we will have nothing, would be to see if we cannot agree upon something that will be satisfactory to both Houses. I hope, therefore, that my friend from California will withdraw his objection. Certainly nothing can be lost by the attempt to have legislation which would be beneficial.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, the bill as it passed the Senate was under discussion for a considerable time. Considering the lateness of the session it underwent all the consideration that it was possible for the Senate to bestow upon it. The discussion upon it was an animated and anxious discussion, as we all know, and I am not aware that the honorable Senator from Maine in the course of that discussion said anything in his place here against the amendment as we finally agreed upon it. I refer to the Blaine amendment. It seems now that he has all along entertained objections to that amendment. It would have been more gratifying to me if the honorable Senator had stated his objections to that amendment in some of its forms during the pendency of the bill, and on occasions where his opinion would certainly have been not without great weight.

I do not think, Mr. President, that under the circumstances it becomes us to create a committee of conference for the purpose of taking into consideration this very grave subject. I am unwilling for one to intrust a subject of such vast magnitude, whose influences are to be so vast and so enduring, to a committee of four or five or six or seven, as the case may be, and from whose report it is next to impossible for the Senate to appeal. Such a subject as this ought to be settled deliberately by the two bodies in open session. There should be no darkness overhanging their deliberations or their opinions; there should be no bargaining or selling, no trafficking or compromising—things which do sometimes take place among the most honest men upon committees of conference. Were it an ordinary measure I should not object to a committee of conference; if it related to the raising of revenue, or any other ordinary subject of legislation, I should be ready to agree to a committee of conference; but I do think that on this subject there ought to be no committee of conference. The two Houses ought to be able to agree upon this great measure of protection, settlement, and tranquillity if we have wisdom and common sense enough to agree, and I surely think we have. If we have not, then I despair, for one, of the passage of any bill that will meet the great urgency that is now upon us.

Mr. SHERMAN. Usually I would vote for a committee of conference as a matter of course, because where the two Houses disagree it is necessary that one or the other should yield, and often it applies to each; but in this case we know as a matter of fact that the opposition to this amendment in the House is not one that we can reconcile unless we can mix fire and water. We know that the opposition to the amendment in the House, as it stands upon the record, is from men of extreme opinions from each other; and therefore I can see no reason for sending this to a committee of conference. We know very well that it is impossible to reconcile the opinions of these hostile opponents of the measure without surrendering the principle upon which our amended bill is based.

The bill itself in the shape in which the Senate passed it is founded upon the declaration contained in the first two lines of the preamble, that there are no legal State governments in the southern States; that all the governments that have been founded by executive authority alone are illegal and void, and can operate only in the nature of municipal or local law for the protection of life and liberty, but they are not legal State governments. We know that that foundation of the bill will be opposed by a political party in the House of Representatives. It is not necessary for us to look to the record to know that. They insist upon it that these States are legal States, entitled to Senators and Representatives now. We therefore cannot expect by any modification of this bill to reach the class of members that I speak of.

On the other hand, another class of members, no doubt perfectly sincere and honest in their convictions, are of the opinion that we ought not to hold out terms like these to the South, or to the southern States, or to the rebel States; and I do not know any modification, short of absolutely destroying the principle of the bill, that will suit this class of opinion.

Therefore I do not think it is worth while to transfer to three members of the Senate the discussion and deliberation of so grave and momentous a question as this. I do not believe that any bill more important could be presented to our consideration. The whole matter is now within our power. If a majority of the Senate is willing to modify the amendment, it is now open for amendment. The whole subject is now before us. To send this bill to a committee of conference might compel us, after the gravest deliberation, to yield to a very small fragment, representing an opinion that is not concurred in by the great body of the Senate.

I prefer, and it is respectful and parliamentary, to say to the House that the Senate still further insists on its amendment, to send it back and allow the House again to take a vote upon it. If then they still stand by their opinion, it will be perfectly competent for either House, at any time before the vote to adhere is taken, to call for a committee of conference. It is manifest that the session is now so far advanced that this bill is within the power of the Executive; that unless approved by him it cannot become a law, because no proceedings taken by us can probably so advance the bill that it may not be easily defeated by the power of the Executive, if he does not approve it. Therefore my own opinion is that it is better for the Senate to stand by its deliberate conviction, at least until the House may have an opportunity to reconsider their single vote upon the bill. I shall therefore vote against this motion and for a motion to insist.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Reference has been made by several Senators to the possible failure to pass this bill so that it may become a law. I suppose the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Kansas refer to the possibility that the President should refuse his approval of the bill and also decline to send it to Congress with his objections. Now, I wish to say to those Senators and to the Senate for myself that I desire no such action on the part of the Executive. If this bill or any other bill of such grave importance should pass Congress in time to allow the President an examination of it, and in time to allow him to prepare his objections to it, if he object to it, I should regret very much if he were not to send it back to Congress. I think we have no reason to expect that the President will decline to act if Congress allows him time to do so. I have no information upon the subject whatever. I express my own desire on the subject, and so far as I have conferred with Senators on this side of the Chamber I believe I express their wish on the subject. If Congress is in the right in this policy I desire the question to go to the country; let it be fairly and squarely met.

I shall not vote for the committee of conference. I agree with the opinion expressed by the Senator from California on that subject. A committee of conference is now simply for the Senate to abandon its ground, to allow the House to have its way upon this question. The debates in the House, together with the names of the committee sent to us, justify me in saying this.

Mr. POMEROY. In reply to the Senator from Indiana, I will say that in the remarks I made I did not have reference entirely to the action of the Executive. I remembered very distinctly the action of the opposition to this bill in the Senate, and knowing that the report of a committee of conference, although not open to amendment was open to discussion, I was satisfied that the time consumed in the discussion of that report, together with the opposition that might be made by the Executive, would certainly defeat any bill, if it was desired by either the party opposed to this measure or the Executive to defeat it.

In regard to the responsibility that the Senator from Massachusetts referred to, that we were taking a most fearful responsibility in voting against this committee of conference, I have this to say: that responsibility is shared at least by not simply the House of Representatives, but it is shared especially by those who have voted consistently against the measure that the Senate sent to the House, and I for my part am not able to fasten any responsibility upon any one vote or any one measure or class of individuals in the Senate or in the House. If there was a probability of enacting this into a law, either with or without the approval of the Executive, I would vote for the committee of conference and take the risks; but I do not believe it is possible even with a report of a committee of conference that suited us; and that not being possible to my mind, I do not choose to take the risks. I know of no way that it can be made a law in any form in which it would suit me at this session, and I do not choose to abandon the position that we have taken, and take all the risks of a defeat besides abandonment.

Mr. LANE. I shall vote at present against ordering a committee of conference, believing that such action would simply be idle and result in nothing. The history of this bill is, that after a very long debate in the House, and a very able debate, they refused to adopt the principle of what is called in the House the Blaine amendment and in the Senate the Sherman amendment. When the bill came to the Senate we adopted that amendment by a vote of 29 to 10. Every single Republican member in the Senate voted for it. There was no diversity of opinion on the subject.

Now, the question here is not one of mere expediency or compromise. It is a radical, elementary principle, which I cannot abandon under the report of this proposed committee of conference. The House proposed a military bill, pure and simple, for the government of the southern States. That is doubtless right as a temporary measure to afford protection to loyal people there, black and white; but I am not willing to force any such bill upon the people of the southern States unless we hold out to them a prospect, an immediate plan for the restoration of civil government.

If you will analyze the votes on this question in the House, if I may be permitted to refer to that subject, you will find there is no hope of any compromise in a committee of conference. We are told that the extreme Radicals of the House opposed the amendment because it does not go far enough. Every single Democrat in the House, amounting to forty-two, voted against it, because it goes too far. Gentlemen speak of the prevailing public sentiment in the House against the Blaine amendment. How is that public sentiment brought about, and who entertains it? A vast majority of the Radical Republican Union party favor the amendment; but by the union of a few extreme Radicals with the whole Democratic party en masse it is voted down.

Now, do you hope for any compromise? The House stands simply upon a military bill. The Senate by an unprecedented majority propose some plan and some time when civil governments can be restored. Now, sir, how are you to compromise? If we refer this to a committee of conference and they soften or destroy or report against the Blaine amendment, it fails here by a vote of three to one if Senators stand upon their honest convictions, as they stood only two days ago. Then how do you hope for anything from this committee of conference? There is nothing to confer about. The House by two deliberate votes have taken their action. The Senate, after an exhaustive debate, have taken their action. I am unwilling that this great question, affecting the very foundations of American society and free institutions, shall be taken out of the hands of Congress in open session and given to the compromises and conferences of a committee of conference. It is due to us to settle the question here.

The Senator from Massachusetts speaks of the fearful responsibility of the defeat of this bill. Who defeat it? Its friends or its enemies? Who defeat the bill? We have stood consistently by it from the beginning; we stand by it yet; but we do not propose to abdicate upon a great subject like this and give up the power of Congress to a committee of conference. Nor would any good result from it. I will not anticipate what the action of the President may be. I do not think it is parliamentary even to refer to it. I shall decide this question as it comes up, to the last day of the session, without any possible reference to the action of the President of the United States, and I shall ask full debate and full deliberation, and that the Senate shall speak, and not a committee of conference.

Mr. WADE. Mr. President, I believe, with the Senator from California, who spoke a while ago, that this is altogether too grave a matter to be left at this stage of the session to a committee of conference, a committee whose doings we are all of us unaware of. What it may do or forbear to do is hardly ever very well known to the Senate.

Sir, I do not like some things that dropped from the Senator from Maine. It seems that he was present while the debate was going on, and that he all the time entertained the idea that this bill was defective in some particular; yea, so defective that after its passage even he would not consent to it; and yet he never let his opposition to it be known—never proposed a remedy for the defect that he thought he saw all the time. I like frankness here and everywhere else. If a bill is passing here, and I entertain the idea that it is defective in any way and that I can remedy it by legislation, I certainly will make it known to the Senate that I believe such a defect does exist, and propose the remedy. Why, sir, this whole Senate, who continued through the whole debate, night and day, and never left their posts till it was finally decided, to a man agreed to what we had done, and we believed that it was as near right as it was possible for us to get it. Why then do we wait until after we have exhausted all our powers of persuasion, and when the bill passes, failing to make our arguments here, make them somewhere else? I do not like that way of doing business in the Senate of the United States.

Now, sir, I know that Congress is responsible for framing a bill on this great subject of reconstruction that shall be satisfactory to the country, and I am not one of those who despair that we shall have the wisdom and the ability to do it; but I say here now, I would rather begin again de novo, with all the experience we have had, and do it in open Senate and in open day, than to undertake to patch up these measures that both Houses or some of both Houses seem to think are somehow defective. We have time enough to do it. There is no difficulty upon that subject. We have all the time there is; for the moment this Congress shall cease; another, not less wise, not less vigorous, not less intent upon making a remedy for all these evils than ourselves, will be here on the spot, with full time to deliberate on the subject, and before we separate my word for it we shall have something that will satisfy the country and be satisfactory to ourselves. I will not be driven into this doubtful position by the idea that we have only a little time and the President may veto our proceedings. I know he may. I know now we have lost the opportunity to send this bill to him in time because the House have failed promptly to meet the amendment that we proposed.

I find no fault with the House because they did not agree with us in this matter; but we need not consider ourselves driven by time to patch up a hasty measure here that will be unsatisfactory to ourselves and the country. If we cannot do it now, let us begin again de novo at the next session, and take all summer for it if it is necessary.

But, sir, how do I know what a committee of conference will do here? I do not know who they may be nor what sentiments they may entertain on this subject. Although it has been debated here from day to day and night to night, still I am told that gentlemen have not expressed some opinions that they entertain on this subject and have entertained all along. I do not know what kind of expression we may get from this committee of conference; and I do not like to have a subject as broad as this stand on so narrow a pinnacle as that of a committee of conference. I would rather insist upon what we have done; let it go back to the House, and if they are still decided and stand upon their doings let it fail for the present and let us begin again. That is my judgment, sir—not that I will give it up; I will never give it up until we have got something satisfactory to the country and to Congress; but I will not be driven on a subject of this importance for want of time, nor by the argument that we shall not get it before the President till within ten days of the close of the session, when he may pocket the bill. Let him pocket it if he sees fit to do so. It will be very easy for us to revive it again at the next session. And I thank God we have had the providence to provide against any fatal contingency arising from any delinquency that we may fall into now. There is no occasion for undue haste. Let us deliberate until every gentleman who entertains an opinion shall bring it forward with his meed of influence and share of wisdom to build up and perfect just such a mode of reconstruction as we all believe will be the best that can be made.

I shall vote against sending this matter to a committee of conference. I will not agree to that now. I would rather, as I said before, begin at the foundation with the bill, either in one branch or the other. If the Reconstruction Committee cannot fit up a measure that they themselves will stand by, I trust we shall get a committee somewhere that will get up a mode of reconstruction that they themselves will stand by if all others disagree.

Mr. FESSENDEN. From what friends have said to me outside with reference to this matter among my brethren of the Senate, and from what the Senator from Ohio has said just now, especially with reference to the Reconstruction Committee, I want to ask him whether, in the remarks he has been making, he alluded to me?

Mr. WADE. What remarks?

Mr. FESSENDEN. The remarks about getting up a bill by the Reconstruction Committee that they themselves would stand by; and also the further remark of not expressing sentiments here, but expressing them elsewhere with regard to this matter.

Mr. WADE. I did refer to the Senator.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is what I supposed.

Mr. WADE. I supposed I was sufficiently explicit so that there could be no doubt on that subject.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The only doubt was as to knowing who the Senator meant, and that was a matter I wanted to make certain. With his customary frankness he has admitted that in the remarks he made he referred to me particularly. Now, sir, perhaps I owe something to myself with reference to this matter. The Reconstruction Committee reported the military bill; that bill I have stood by from the beginning. The Reconstruction Committee did not report the Blaine amendment or any amendment having reference to those subjects in any shape or form.

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator permit me to say a word?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Certainly.

Mr. CONNESS. Although the Reconstruction Committee did not report the Blaine amendment, the body that created the Reconstruction Committee did report it and adopt it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is all very true, and I have no objection to make to that statement; it is mere matter of fact. But I am now talking about the Reconstruction Committee. The Reconstruction Committee, so far as I am concerned, stood, and were prepared to stand, directly upon the bill that they reported. There is no question about that. The other is a part that came on to the bill, not from the committee, but from the body itself, as stated by the honorable Senator from California.

Now, sir, in regard to the other remark that is made by the Senator from Ohio about not expressing opinions here but expressing them elsewhere, I have this to say: that I took no part in the debate, not a particle. Did the Senator?

Mr. WADE. No.

Mr. FESSENDEN. None at all. We took very little part in the debate on this side of the Chamber. Senators will bear me witness that it was perfectly understood that we should not take part in the debate; that we should leave the discussion to our friends on the other side of the Chamber, so long as they chose to discuss it. With that understanding I agreed, and I was perfectly willing to agree to it, for I had no particular disposition to take part in the debate, and I never have a disposition to take part in debate upon a matter that is agreed upon by my friends, which does not entirely meet my approbation. All I think that they have a right to demand of me in such a case, the utmost that they have a right to demand of me, is that I shall not oppose the decision of my friends, and that if I cannot support it I shall at least let it go. What more have they a right to demand? The honorable Senator from California shakes his head. Can they demand of me that I shall get up here in the Senate and advocate what I do not exactly like or approve?

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator permit me right at this point?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Certainly.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask the honorable Senator what he would think of a military officer who had sat as a member of a council of war, but whose plans and suggestions and opinions had been overruled, if, when the battle began, he should simply not oppose his friends, but did not engage in capturing and destroying the enemy?

Mr. FESSENDEN. The answer to that is, we are not a council of war. It is not a military matter.

Mr. CONNESS. It is a council of peace and the same rules govern.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is a civil matter, a matter of legislation, not a council of war by any manner of means, or anything of that description. Therefore I do not think the question of my friend from California is exactly pertinent.

Now, sir, let us have an understanding about this matter. I acceded or yielded to the opinions of my friends on this subject, and I yielded because it was out my power to oppose or prevent the action they agreed upon. Does that impose upon me the obligation to take part in a debate and to advocate what I do not approve? Can anything more be asked of me than that I submit, or of any member of the Senate under such circumstances? I take it, not.

As to expressing opinions elsewhere, in conversation with several gentlemen I did say, and I stand by what I said, that I did not like the bill as it stood, and I repeated it. I did further express the opinion, in answer to a question that was asked of me, if the House non-concurred whether I thought there would be any difficulty in settling it by a committee of conference. Arguing upon what had taken place before, I did not think there would, and I stand by that, although it seems I am mistaken in that last opinion from the expressions I have heard here.

Now, sir, I take it that I am neither bound to advocate what I do not approve, nor to withhold my opinions in private conversation with our political friends as to what my opinions are on that subject. The obligations of party do not go as far as that; and I want gentlemen so to understand it. They do not go as far as that with me. If gentlemen choose to find fault with me on that subject, I stand ready to take the consequences, whatever they may be in relation to it.

I know there are certain gentlemen here who delight in an occasion to find fault with me, and to put responsibilities on me that do not belong to me. I have felt that for some period of time, and I have sat here silent and borne it without reply. But, sir, I take it that I stand in the same position in this Senate that every other gentleman does: at liberty to consult, and if overruled, to yield; but my obligation does not go so far as to compel me to support what I do not like or approve in any other-wise then by my vote, which I am often compelled to do, not because it is strictly right, but because I think on the whole it is best to do so, and therefore I yield something that I do not like to much that I do. Nor do I think it goes so far as that in conversation with my political friends outside. I shall not say what I think of the measure itself.

The honorable Senator from Ohio was bitterly opposed to this Blaine amendment, as it was so called, himself. He did not want it put on to the bill. The honorable Senator from Michigan who has spoken was opposed to it to the last. He cannot deny that.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the honorable Senator from Maine allow me one word?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Certainly; anything the Senator pleases.

Mr. HOWARD. What he has now said in reference to the Blaine amendment as it was presented to the Senate by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] and finally passed by this body, is, as he must be aware, a mistake. I voted for it in that form. I voted for it when the honorable Senator from Maine was at his lodgings enjoying the sweets of sleep; at a time when I believe, if I was rightly informed, he had paired off with some member of the Senate and thus escaped what to me would have been a responsibility in voting either for or against that measure.

While I am up, and as the Senator has referred to me, he will allow me to say further that my connection with this measure in all its stages and in all its forms, and my knowledge of the discussions that have taken place upon it, have been probably as intimate and careful as his, and until this moment when he announced that the amendment was disagreeable to him, that he was opposed to it, I have been all along in total ignorance of that opposition on the part of the honorable Senator from Maine. He never, so far as I know, has spoken one word in my hearing in opposition to what is known as the Blaine amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator then on one or two occasions has been very hard of hearing. That is all I have to say on that subject. His ears were sealed in some way to what I did say.

Sir, there are some things about it that I like. My objection to it from the beginning has been that it did not go far enough in its protection of ourselves. That has been my objection to the Blaine amendment, that there was not enough of it, that we were binding ourselves to too much for the future. That has been my difficulty with it. I did not think we were safe under it. That is the way I have felt with regard to it, and I have so expressed myself to several friends in conversation; but I saw from the feeling of this Senate that it or something like it was doomed to go on; that the measure could not be sustained as we had it unless something of the kind did go on. Well, sir, I could not help it. I could not get the military bill pure and simple as I wanted it, and therefore I yielded, as I was bound to yield, to the majority. But if gentlemen contend that, having yielded to the will of the majority on that subject, I was bound never to open my mouth to anybody with whom I conversed on the subject and never to express my opinions about it in private conversation with our political friends, I think that is putting on an amount of pressure to which I am not disposed to yield at any rate, and to which I will not yield. Gentlemen may reprove me as much as they please, or attempt to do it. I am of that opinion still; and I should like to have that amendment amended and some more safeguards about it than there are now. If gentlemen who glory in the name of radical are not quite so radical on that subject as I am, that is all the difference between us. And now, for being too much of a radical, I am to be lectured in this side-hand way by the honorable Senator from Ohio. Sir, I have my own opinions, and I shall stand by them, and I shall take the liberty to express them in a proper way on all occasions.

Now, as to the glorification of the honorable Senator from Michigan, that he stayed here going without sleep while the Senator from Maine was enjoying his repose, as he calls it, that is very true; I did not stay in the Senate. I believe it is the first time since I have been a member of Congress, when I was not confined to my bed with sickness, which has not happened often, that I have not been here day and night constantly attending the sessions of the Senate, when many gentlemen were dining or sleeping or doing something else, anything but attending the Senate—the first time in a period of nearly fourteen years, since I have been in the Senate. Whether that applies to the honorable Senator from Michigan or not on any occasion I do not know; but I know a great many to whom it does apply. I think after the service that I have rendered here in staying up night after night in passing bills when other gentlemen were enjoying their repose elsewhere I am the last person to be lectured or hinted at by the Senator from Michigan for not being here on that occasion. Sir, I did as other gentlemen do. I knew, in the ordinary course of things, that this week and the remainder of this session was to be to me more laborious probably than to any other member of the Senate, because it so happens that I have charge of the business of the Finance Committee, which comes up at the end of the session. I had been very ill for two days, hardly able to hold up my head, as many gentlemen know. I knew, or I believed that if I stayed here, the result would be that I should be entirely unfit for business all this week, and probably be sick in my bed. I consulted several friends in the Senate whether I was needed or whether it was not best for me to retire, expressing my willingness to stay if they wished it, and every one of them advised me that I was not needed; there was no debating to be done; the thing was perfectly safe, and I had better go home; and I paired off with a gentleman on the other side, as was stated. I believe it was about the first time I ever did pair on anything of consequence, and the Senator from Michigan is ungenerous enough to allude to that.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the Senator allow me to say a word?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. I regret very much to hear so reproachful an epithet from the Senator from Maine toward myself. What I said in regard to his not being in his seat at the time of the vote was not spoken in the spirit of fault-finding or censure toward the Senator from Maine. I was not aware of his ill-health. Had I been aware that that was the occasion of his withdrawing from his seat on that occasion I certainly should not have alluded to the subject at all. I am quite aware that the Senator's health is not as firm as that of many of us. He was excusable for the course he took, undoubtedly.

I alluded to that fact, however, in connection with what I had said before, that I was ignorant of the Senator's opposition to what is called the Blaine amendment. If he was opposed to the Blaine amendment secretly and covertly, not having made his opposition known, then to withdraw from his seat and to go into his bed would have been a very natural consequence if he were anxious to avoid the responsibility of either voting for it or against it. That is what I meant, sir.

I do not wish to protract a discussion of this personal nature with the Senator from Maine; but it does not become him, let me say with all respect to him, to assume to lecture me upon this subject. I know as well as he does, and he knows as well as I do, how he has stood all along in reference to the Blaine amendment, and what he has actually done on that subject. Further than this I do not wish to go at this moment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the Senator did not allude to me with the intention to cast censure upon me for being out of the way the only other horn of the dilemma he can take is, that he meant to glorify himself for staying here, or else he would not have said anything about it at all. But enough on that subject, sir.

Mr. HOWARD. There was no glorification about it. The term the Senator uses is entirely out of place and gratuitous in its intention and purpose. I remained in my seat because I was well and felt it my duty to remain here and to vote upon this measure. That is what I did, and that is the whole extent of my offending. If I had been out of health and unable to remain here I should have followed the Senator's example and paired off with somebody else; but I abjure all glorification in the discharge of an honest duty. I will throw off no responsibility; I will set up no suspicious excuse or pretense for a failure to do my duty.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Mr. President, the Senator has thrown out a very oracular remark about my knowing as well as he did what took place elsewhere. That matter has got into the newspapers; and that is, that this subject was committed by our friends to a committee, of which the honorable Senator and myself were members. Now, with regard to that—

Mr. HOWARD. It has got into the newspapers, if at all, not through my instigation.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know through what channel it got into the newspapers; but I saw it in a newspaper this morning myself. Now, let me say with regard to that, it is one of my principles, when I find that a thing is to go contrary to my judgment, to make it as unobjectionable as possible, and to that point I labored, and I labored honestly; but I have never changed my opinion with regard to the point which I have stated. I stand now precisely where I did then. I would have voted for it; that is to say, voted for the bill with it, had I been here, and it was so announced by my colleague. That was the vote I was prepared to give; but I am not bound, therefore, by the fact that that was the case to approve everything there was in it or to say that it had no defect; and the extent of my offending is simply that I was not satisfied with it and so expressed myself. Can gentlemen reasonably find fault with that? I have acted in no bad faith with anybody or upon any subject. I have supported what I agreed to support throughout. But if gentlemen hold that the obligation goes further than that and ties a man's tongue as to a piece of legislation when his opinion is called for by a political friend, I hold that that is going further than I am ever willing to go under the direction of anybody, either any individual or any body of individuals.

I am sorry that this discussion has sprung up; I am sorry that the honorable Senator from Ohio took occasion in his speech that he made here to make flings at me. I felt bound, therefore, in my own vindication, without any reply as to himself—I dare say he always acts in good faith; I have always found that he did, with perfect frankness, no double dealing—to defend myself against an implied charge of that description. Whether that defense is sufficient or not the Senate will judge. Whether they judge so or not, I will not say it makes no difference to me, but it does not change my fixed determination to act according to my own conviction and in my own way.

Mr. WADE. Mr. President, I am very sorry that so disagreeable a topic should come up this morning for discussion, but I am very well compensated for it by what has fallen from the Senator from Maine. He tells us that the fault we find with him is his radicalism. Well, sir, if he has become radical I shall be compensated for all that has happened here today. I was exceedingly glad to hear it. I know that it will aid us when we come to frame other bills more than anybody can imagine, if the Senator from Maine, with his vast influence here, will throw it on the side of radicalism and aid such poor radicals as I am to get measures satisfactory to ourselves.

Now, Mr. President, on principle I was opposed to leaving this important question to the judgment of some five or six members of the two Houses of Congress in a committee of conference, and therefore I spoke as I did, and in that connection I could not help alluding to what I supposed I knew with regard to the course taken by the Senator from Maine, which was not satisfactory to me, and with his explanation it is no more satisfactory. He has said that he entertained opinions upon this bill as it was progressing unfavorable to some of its details, or something like that; I do not give his words; but it seems that in open Senate or in committees of which he formed a part, in all that he ever said or did with regard to this bill, he never made known one of those objections until after it had been discussed here, and until I had been kept up here two nights to consider it, and supposed everybody that harbored objections to it had made them known; and finally, after all that had been done in committees, in open Senate, and everywhere else, it was agreed that the bill should pass with a unanimity on this side of the Chamber that I have never known, nay, sir, that never can be exceeded, for there was no man in the negative.

Mr. CONNESS. Those who were left the Chamber.

Mr. WADE. Every one that was here voted for it. The Senator from Maine paired off, leaving his colleague to declare that if he had been here he would have voted with us. So we had him on our side. Another Senator left without giving, as I know of, any opinion on the subject; but every other man on this side of the Chamber voted for the measure, and it was no hasty vote that they gave. It was for a measure that had been considered in open Senate, considered in committee, considered everywhere and in every way that we could consider a subject, and finally, the deliberate judgment of this side of the Senate was manifested by a unanimous vote.

I do not agree with the Senator from Maine that a Senator should withhold opinions strongly formed in opposition to a measure. In such a case, it seems to me, he ought to vote against it; but at all events, after withholding opposition here and leaving it to be inferred that he was in favor of a measure, it was hardly proper for him to go to the other body and attempt to defeat it by showing his dissatisfaction there. I should not like, after having been kept here so long to pass a measure having the assent of the Senate, to find gentlemen supposed to be in favor of it going into another body and using their influence there for its defeat and overthrow. The Senator says this is perfectly reconcilable with good faith. I do not know but that it is. It is not, however, the way that I deal with this body or ever expect to. If I have objections so strong that they lead me to argue for the overthrow of a measure anywhere, the argument shall be made here and my vote shall attest my opinion.

Now, the Senator says that I, like himself, was opposed to this Blaine amendment. Well, Mr. President, I was opposed to any amendment, and I understood that the Senator was. I said very little about it; but I did say that I would endeavor to defend the measure against any amendment from any quarter whatever; that we would take the military bill of the House pure and simple, and then we would get up the other bill that had come from the House to supply, as I thought, all its defects; and that the two measures would make, as I believed, an excellent reconstruction system, taking this military bill as it came from the House, and then taking up the Louisiana bill, and amending it so as to apply to the other States; and both together, I declared here, would be, as I thought, right. I intended to urge the passage of the Louisiana bill first; but the Senator himself persuaded me out of it, and induced me to agree to take up this bill that we both agreed should pass without amendment; but it did not pass without amendment, and I do not know that the Senator resisted that amendment very strongly. I believe he entirely consented to it before we got through. Certainly he did not try to prevent it; neither his arguments nor his votes tended in that direction. I gave up all opposition to amending the bill, as he did; for I saw that by taking the amendments that were framed we could make an entire reconstruction project that ought to be satisfactory to all the States. I thought so, and yet I confess that I would rather have taken each bill as it came from the House by itself, for I thought then, and think now, that both together formed an excellent scheme of reconstruction; but the amendment the Senate adopted I believed then, and believe now, presented, in connection with the military bill, a most excellent reconstruction system; and I had not dreamed that the Senator from Maine objected to it because it was not radical enough. If I were permitted to speak of what transpired in other places, I should say that I was entirely convinced it was not its radicalism that troubled him then. I understood that he himself agreed that the bill should be amended before we got through with it, and I understood him to advocate an amendment. I do not find any fault with the amendment. It was a very tempting field to take that bill as it came from the House, and add to it some system of reconstruction which ought to be satisfactory to the South and to us, and make an entire measure in one bill. We undertook to do it, and it received the approbation of the Senate with great unanimity. What I complain of is that after Senators had voted for it they should endeavor somewhere else to overthrow it. I do not like that phase of it.

As to staying here in this Chamber, the Senator looked at me when he said that sometimes gentlemen were absent from their seats. Sir, since I have had a seat in this body I have not been absent one hour, and I defy any Senator to prove that I have been. I ask any Senator here if in his remembrance, during the long period I have been here, he has ever found me out of my seat unless I was engaged out of the Chamber on a committee. I do not know that the Senator intended to charge me with being absent; but certainly that is not a sin of mine.

I am always here. Perhaps it would be better if I were not here; but I am regular in my attendance.

Sir, I shall not detain the Senate. I wish now to do the best I can for the country; but I dare not trust the fate of this great measure upon the result of a conference committee. I have seen too many evils grow out of that mode of proceeding. I had rather begin again, as I said before, and build up a system before the whole country that should be satisfactory to us all, than to hazard this measure on the narrow chance of a patching up by a conference committee.

Mr. BROWN. If I understand the condition of this bill, it is one that if referred to a committee of conference will throw open to their manipulation every principle that has been involved in the two measures. The bill originally came to us a simply military bill. It was amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and substituting a totally different measure, one that differed not only in the matter of the Blaine amendment, but that differed in the manner of the assignment of the military commanders; that differed on the question of the suspension of the habeas corpus; in fact upon every section of the bill. Therefore, if this is to go to a committee of conference, it will open to them the work of producing a measure totally new, a measure involving every principle in this bill, and one in which they may report so as to override the whole decision and whole determination of the Senate.

That is a condition of affairs and the principles which are involved in it are of too grave importance for me ever to consent to refer it to a committee of that character. When the bill came to the Senate we ingrafted upon it distinctively the principle of universal suffrage as the one on which reconstruction should be grounded in all the southern States. It is known to members of this Senate that I for one have contended for four years past that I never would assent to the admission of any of these States into the councils of the nation until they had bottomed these constitutions upon that doctrine of universal suffrage. Now, sir, here is a measure incorporating it in the fullest degree, incorporating it in advance before they form their constitutions, incorporating it as one of the features of their constitutions, and then reserving to Congress itself the approval thereafter of those constitutions when presented. These are grounds of reconstruction that I can heartily and cordially indorse. I am not willing to trust these grounds to the manipulation of any committee, the constitution of which I know not, and which may force me to a vote here and to the onus of defeating the whole measure in the late and last hours of the session.

I have seen a good deal of this legislation by committees of conference, and I have rarely seen a conference report that met with my approval. The result of such conferences is generally to bring back a report at the last hours of the session, a report that does not embody the decision of the Senate, and to throw the onus of the defeat of the measure and of all involved along with it, not upon those to whom it properly belongs, the members of the conference committee, but upon individual Senators who may find it necessary to vindicate their faith by voting against the measure, although their action may be in perfect accord with the almost unanimous approval previously of the Senate.

For these reasons I for one shall not approve of any reference of this matter to a committee of conference. I have no objection to insisting upon the action of the Senate and letting the House take further action, whether it will amend the amendment we have sent to them; but I will not for one assent to any other disposal of the subject.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, my deliberate judgment is that the Senate ought to agree to a committee of conference and exhaust every legitimate means to procure the passage of this bill; but my individual opinion seems to be generally overruled by those with whom I am in the habit of acting in this body. I do not know upon what ground it is assumed that those who may constitute the committee will recede from the position that the Senate has taken or will compromise away the principles that are involved in this bill, or upon what ground it is assumed that the conferees on the part of the House may not accede to the positions that have been taken by the Senate. But as it is assumed that those who may be appointed on behalf of the Senate would not reflect the views of the body, and as I made the motion, after the expressions that have been made here, I would not consent under any circumstances to serve on such a committee.

Mr. President, I prepared this bill in the first place. I waited month after month for some of these old and experienced legislators to bring forward something upon the subject of reconstruction; but nothing was done, and this military bill, as it is called, was prepared by me and introduced into the Senate. It was referred to the joint Committee on Reconstruction, and by that committee it was reported with some verbal amendments to the House of Representatives, and it passed the House and was brought here to the Senate. As it will be remembered, I indicated at the time, on account of suggestions made to me by Senators, that I would propose an amendment. Upon questions of this kind I do not believe that any one man is wiser than everybody else; that any man knows so much as not sometimes to be enlightened by the suggestions of others; and when it was suggested to me in the Senate by several members in whose judgment I have great confidence, that something like the Blaine amendment would be advisable and acceptable to the Senate, I gave notice that I would propose that amendment; but when I was advised as to the condition of business in the House of Representatives, I gave notice then that I would not propose the amendment, and that I felt it my duty, in view of the necessity of passing the bill, to oppose all amendments, and I did oppose all amendments; but I was overruled and I acquiesced and supported the bill as amended. I am very anxious that it should pass as amended, notwithstanding my particular views have not in all respects obtained in reference to this bill.

When I prepared this bill it was my opinion that the true policy on the part of Congress was to establish a military power in the South adequate to the protection of loyal men, and when that power was there made efficient, then to proceed with the business of reconstruction by the necessary legislation; and I undertake to say that you may pass as many laws as you please, you may enact as many enabling acts as you please, but they will be a dead letter upon the statute-book unless military power is put in the South to protect the loyal men in the exercise of their rights under that legislation.

Mr. CONNESS. All agree upon that proposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know whether all agree upon it or not; but these are my views, and it was with that view that this bill was prepared. But, sir, as I have stated, I would not consent to serve upon this committee, and it is manifest that the Senate will not agree to the appointment of a committee.

Mr. BROWN. Allow me to say a word to the Senator before he takes his seat. He seems to have taken to heart some remarks made by me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not at all.

Mr. BROWN. I had no allusion to the Senator as being on that committee. It did not occur to me at the moment that he would probably be a member of the conference committee, as having moved the conference; but I can say to him that although he might be a member of that committee, and I might have perfect confidence, as I would, in his truly reflecting the sentiment of the Senate, yet he would simply be one of that committee, and might easily be overruled in any action of the conference.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not understand the Senator particularly to allude to me more than other Senators, and I did not suppose any of them alluded to me specially.

Mr. CONNESS. Not at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But then, of course, as I made the motion, under the circumstances I should expect to be appointed on the committee. But, without any further discussion, with the consent of the Senate, I withdraw the motion that I made.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment to the House bill, and that the usual message be sent to the House, and I think this is all that is necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Oregon is withdrawn, and the Senator from Ohio now moves that the Senate insist upon its amendment. The Chair entertains strong doubts about the motion being parliamentary, but will not refuse to entertain it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have examined the parliamentary law.

Mr. CONNESS. I rise to say to the honorable Senator from Oregon that whatever opposition I have made to the creation of a conference committee did not go to the Senator, for if such a course was taken there is no Senator in whose hands I would trust either that or any other subject sooner than in his.

Mr. WADE. I wish to say the same in regard to the remarks I made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is not necessary.

Mr. WADE. I suppose not; but I never thought of such a thing.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I beg to be pardoned for saying a word on this subject. In my mind neither the original bill nor the amended bill as passed by the Senate holds any favorite place. Under ordinary circumstances I would vote for a committee of conference as a matter of course, in a case of this kind, in order to produce agreement between the two Houses and to facilitate the transaction of public business; but I understand perfectly well what voting for a committee of conference in this case means. Upon the enunciation of the committee of conference, as appointed by the other House, I understand that our appointing a committee on this subject to join with the House committee of conference, and committing this subject to them, means, and means only, the utter defeat and destruction of the Senate proposition. The idea of any general or liberal concession to the opinions of the Senate from a committee constituted as this one would be is perfectly idle. There are certain mental constitutions which we entirely comprehend, and in this case the result is not one of doubt.

Now, sir, being indifferent between the two measures—the original bill and the amended bill—I simply vote to sustain the dignity of the Senate on this subject. I do not propose to send our measure to a tribunal which will utterly destroy the whole work that has been done by this body. I would vote against the motion to appoint a committee of conference, if it were persisted in, but I believe that proposition has been withdrawn. For the present I shall vote to insist upon the amendment made by the Senate, simply as an act of duty to the body of which I am a member, under the peculiar circumstances.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish it distinctly understood, after the remarks made by the Senator from Pennsylvania, that I make this motion in the sincere hope that the House will reconsider its vote. When the bill is sent back there, a motion can then be made to recede from its disagreement. If, however, the House should still insist upon the disagreement, I shall be perfectly willing then to go for a committee of conference. In the first instance, I think the Senate ought to stand by its amendment, because I do not see how a committee of conference can vary the question as it now stands.

Mr. WILSON. I had intended to vote to send this bill back to the House without a committee of conference, but after the remark just made by the Senator from Ohio, I do not see any object in making any further fight.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have not said a word in reference to this bill. I believe I have never opened my mouth in regard to it in the Senate. I never regarded the bill as it came from the House of Representatives, called the military bill, as of the slightest importance. The law as it now stands confers all the power that was attempted to be conferred by that House bill. I will read the section of the statute, and it will be seen that it embraces everything that was in the original House bill as it came here. It is the fourteenth section of the act amendatory of the act creating the Freedmen's Bureau.

"Sec. 14. And be it further enacted, That in every State or district where the ordinary course of judicial proceedings has been interrupted by the rebellion, and until the same shall be fully restored, and in every State or district whose constitutional relations to the Government have been practically discontinued by the rebellion, and until such State shall have been restored in such relations, and shall be duly represented in the Congress of the United States, the right to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, and give evidence, to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold and convey real and personal property, and to have full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings concerning personal liberty, personal security, and the acquisition, enjoyment, and disposition of estate, real and personal, including the constitutional right to bear arms, shall be secured to and enjoyed by all the citizens of such State or district without respect to race or color or previous condition of slavery. And whenever in either of said States or districts the ordinary course of judicial proceedings has been interrupted by the rebellion, and until the same shall be fully restored, and until such State shall have been restored in its constitutional relations to the Government and shall be duly represented in the Congress of the United States, the President shall, through the Commissioner and the officers of the bureau, and under such rules and regulations as the President, through the Secretary of War, shall prescribe, extend military protection and have military jurisdiction over all cases and questions concerning the free enjoyment of such immunities and rights, and no penalty or punishment for any violation of law shall be imposed or permitted because of race or color or previous condition of slavery or other or greater than the penalty or punishment to which white persons may be liable by law for the like offense. But the jurisdiction conferred by this section upon the officers of the bureau shall not exist in any State where the ordinary course of judicial proceedings has not been interrupted by the rebellion, and shall cease in every State when the courts of the State and the United States are not disturbed in the peaceful course of justice, and after such State shall be fully restored in its constitutional relations to the Government, and shall be duly represented in the Congress of the United States."

This law made it necessary to divide the rebellious States into districts, and assign to the command of them a Commissioner, who is General Howard, and assistant commissioners, who are Army officers detailed by the President, which is exactly what the bill which came from the House did; and it made it the duty of the President to protect these persons by the military power, for the Freedmen's Bureau is but a branch of the military service—made it his duty to protect them in every right and in the enjoyment of every liberty. Did this bill do anything more? There is no sort of importance in the bill. If this has not been done, your law has not been executed; that is all. Will it be executed any better if you repeat the law? It is but a reiteration of what the statute already is, passed less than a year ago. I thought it was important that something else should be put upon this bill, and I was very much in favor of the amendment which the Senate made. The House of Representatives have, however, refused to concur in that amendment, and the bill comes back to the Senate with their refusal, and some feeling is manifested about it here as to what we ought to do. I have no feeling. As I said, I have taken no part in the debates which have arisen upon this question in the Senate. I want to do that which shall be for the best. I am desirous that these rebel States shall be restored to their constitutional relations to the Government at the earliest period it can be done with safety to the Republic, and with safety to the loyal men and the freedmen in the South. I am unwilling that it shall be done leaving those States in the control and under the domination of the very men who inaugurated the war and brought on the rebellion. I thought the amendment put upon this bill by the Senate contained every guarantee that had ever been asked for by any one. It provided that no State government should be organized there unless it was organized by delegates chosen by all the male inhabitants, without regard to race or color, who were twenty-one years of age, excluding only those who had participated in rebellion or been guilty of a crime. It provided that this constitution when thus framed should be submitted to all the people, the same people who elected the delegates. It provided that it must receive their sanction. It provided, then, that this government thus formed must ratify the constitutional amendment which excluded from office, as we all know, every person who had held an office of any considerable importance and afterward took part in the rebellion. It would instantly turn out of office, I think, every Governor, every judge, and every important officer through all the rebellious States. This provision of ours provided that the constitutional amendment should be adopted before the government could be recognized, and that constitutional amendment excludes from office every person who ever took an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, as a qualification for any office of any significance or importance and afterward took part in rebellion, and this would sweep out nearly every person in all the rebellious States who now holds office. I am told it would be a general sweeping out of the whole of them, and would necessarily put the governments in loyal hands.

Then, sir, beyond all this, before the governments thus set up could be recognized they must be submitted to Congress and be approved by Congress itself; and, further than that, as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BROWN] reminds me, they must incorporate universal suffrage in their constitutions.

Now, sir, if you ever mean that these rebel States shall be organized, peace and harmony and good-will shall be restored in this country, will you afford no means to do it? What more do you ask? What else would you have? Can anybody think of anything else to require of these people except to put their governments in loyal hands, adopt the constitutional amendment, adopt universal suffrage, and keep rebels out of power? What more, I ask, can be required of them?

But, sir, this is rejected and comes back to the Senate, and the question is: What shall we do? It was first moved that the Senate agree to appoint a committee of conference. What is the objection to that? The Senator from Missouri stated it very aptly. It is that we should thereby submit to a committee of conference this whole question of reconstruction, and place ourselves in the position of having a mere negative upon the action of that committee. When that committee reported we should be in the condition of the Senate on a nomination from the President. We may reject the nominee, but we cannot select another person to fill the office. We may reject the report of a committee of conference, but we cannot amend it. We cannot propose anything in regard to it. We should be like the French Senate, a body of merely negative powers. I believe there the laws are proposed by the ministry, and the Senate have the right, if they think proper, to reject them.

Sir, I am not willing to put myself in that condition. I want to be free to act, to propose amendments, and to vote upon amendments, and consider the question, and not be put in the position of taking the precise thing that may be reported by a committee of conference or nothing. I do not think such a question as this should go to a committee of conference, and therefore I am opposed to it; and I regret exceedingly the remark which has fallen from the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] that if the House refuses to recede from its position we can then have no committee of conference. Sir, never by my vote. Never shall such a great question as this, open in all its parts, be by me submitted to any committee of conference. I might agree to submit a single proposition, a single matter, about which the two Houses disagreed, that was not important, but here you submit the whole question. The two Houses disagree in toto, and it is competent for this committee of conference to draw an entirely new bill, covering every principle that is referred to in the bill from the House or the amendment put on it by the Senate. I am not willing to turn this subject over to any committee of conference to frame a bill upon which I can merely say "ay" or "no;" and I trust that no such impression will go out as that this Senate will ever agree to submit this whole subject to a committee of conference to be dealt with in this way.

I shall vote to adhere to the amendment which the Senate has made. I consider that there is no sort of importance in the original bill, and for that reason I called the attention of the Senate to the fourteenth section of the act passed over the veto of the President on the 16th of July, 1866, which provides for this military protection. If the President does not execute that law, what assurance have you that he will execute a new law any better?

Mr. COWAN. I desire to ask a question. Do I understand the Senator from Illinois to insinuate that the Freedmen's Bureau law is not properly executed?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do insinuate that in my judgment it is not properly executed.

Mr. COWAN. Then I would ask the honorable Senator whether his friends have it not all in their own hands; whether General Howard is not a true man, according to his acceptance of that term, and a good Radical?

Mr. TRUMBULL. It matters not to me whether a man is a good Radical or not in the execution of the duties of his office. I do not understand that General Howard is left at liberty to execute this law as it ought to be executed. I have understood that not long ago, in the State of Virginia, the murderer of a colored man, when arrested by the military authorities, was, by orders from Washington city, set free. I have understood that when the military commander in the States of North Carolina and South Carolina, in obedience to this law to protect all persons in their personal liberty and secure to them equal rights, issued an order forbidding the whipping and scourging of colored men all over these States, by orders from Washington the action of the commander was revoked, at the instance of the Governor, so called, of South Carolina, who went from his seat in a rebel Congress at Richmond to preside over this pretended State government set up in South Carolina.

Sir, there was read to the Senate the other day, by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. WILSON,] evidence that in hundreds of cases the civil rights bill had been set at naught; but here is the Freedmen's Bureau bill, an act creating a bureau in the War Department, presided over by military officers, established for the very purpose of protecting colored men in their rights, which has not been enforced, I say to the Senator from Pennsylvania, according to my opinion, so as to afford that adequate protection to which the colored people are entitled. If it had been we should have been free from very much of our difficulty.

I wish to say to the Senate that I attach no great importance to this bill which came from the House of Representatives, called the military bill. That will be under the control of the President just as the Freedmen's Bureau is. The officer whom he will detail, with the rank of brigadier general, to command in the districts he shall create through the South, will, I apprehend, be no better than General Howard. I wish I could think he would be as good. The trouble is that the officers of the Freedmen's Bureau are not furnished with the means to enforce this law.

I did not intend taking up the time of the Senate in regard to this measure, in the shape that it is now before us, and I do not know that I should have risen at all, except to enter my protest against the declaration of the Senator from Ohio, that this bill is to go to a committee of conference. It is no use sending it back to the House of Representatives if that is the disposition we are going to make of it.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, in what the Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] has said with regard to the failure of the President to discharge his duties under existing laws I entirely agree. He has touched the case to the quick. It is impossible not to see that the great difficulty of the present moment springs from the bad man who sits in the executive chair. He is the center of our woes. More than once before I have reminded you of that saying of Catholic Europe, that "All roads lead to Rome." So now do all roads among us lead to the President. You can attempt nothing which does not bring you face to face with him, precisely as during the rebellion you could attempt nothing which did not bring you face to face with Jefferson Davis. I mention this now, not to deter you, but for encouragement. You have already conquered the chief of the rebellion. I doubt not that you will conquer his successor also. But this can be done only by strenuous exertion. It is no argument against legislation that the President will not execute it. Let us do our duty, and insist always that he shall do his.

Therefore I am in favor of some measure of reconstruction, the best that we can secure; the more thorough it is the better it will be for me. And I ask you to take such steps as will best accomplish this result. There is a difference between the two Houses, and at this stage the customary proceeding is a conference committee. But the Senator from Illinois is against any conference committee in a case of such magnitude. To my mind his argument should be directed against that rule of parliamentary law which provides a conference committee at this precise stage of parliamentary proceedings. Let him move to change the parliamentary law, so that in cases of peculiar importance the common rule shall cease to be applicable. Let this be his thesis. But so long as the Lex Parliamentaria exists I submit that it is hardly reasonable to resist its application, especially when the House has asked a conference committee on a bill of theirs which you have amended.

There is nothing in reason or practice to sustain the Senator in his objection so far as I can see. Practice is in harmony with reason. If you glance at the memorable measures of later years, you will find that they all came through conference committees. Through that gate they passed. In other words, the various forces developed by debate and vote in both Houses were all combined and resolved into the final result through a conference committee. Emancipation, the confiscation of rebel property, the Freedmen's Bureau, were all obtained in this way. I might mention other measures hardly less important. I do not remember that the Senator from Illinois on any of these occasions objected to the parliamentary law as inapplicable to matters of such magnitude. On the contrary, he acted with his associates here and helped place these beneficent measures in the statute-book. But now he has grown wiser, and will not allow the conference committee. He argues most earnestly that the bill should be discussed in the light of day. Very well; let it be so discussed. It has already undergone much discussion, by daylight and by gaslight, too. It may be discussed still further if you wish to discuss it. Because it goes to a conference committee there is not an end to discussion. On the report of that committee it will be open again to discussion precisely as on the report of any other committee. The sessions of all committees are with closed doors, and a conference committee is not an exception. But every report must be in open Senate, where every Senator can be heard. The Senator from Illinois will have his opportunity.

Pardon me, then, if I can see nothing in reason or practice against a conference committee. This is the proper agency now. This bill has already been considered by committees of both Houses; it has passed through all its proper stages in both Houses, and now, when the two Houses fail to agree, a conference committee is the agency supplied by parliamentary law. If I accept it I do little more than follow precedents and the law.

The Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] cooperating with the Senator from Illinois, moves directly that the Senate insist upon its amendment, and refuse the conference committee asked by the House. I regret this motion, simply because it seems calculated to endanger the bill, while it cuts off all reasonable chance of further amendment. Do not forget that, in order to act independent of the President, so as to avoid a "pocket-veto," you must complete your work before midnight. When the hand of that clock points to twelve the time will be passed within which you can act with any good expectation of a practical result; at least so I am informed by those who have made the calculation of time, which I have not. The ten days which the Constitution allows to the President for the consideration of bills will absorb the remainder of the session, so that you will send this measure to encounter the risk of being "pocketed," without any declaration of reasons by the President. This at least is the risk which you will run. Only through a conference committee can this risk be avoided. Any other course will require too much delay; but delay is fatal.

Mr. SHERMAN. With the consent of my friend, I will state that I have no doubt that with moderation on the part of both Houses this measure can be passed with the assent of both Houses without any material change before ten o'clock to-night. There are members of the House of Representatives who desire one or two modifications, so slight that if the bill be now sent back to them on my motion so that they can propose amendments to our amendment, they can soon put our amendment in a shape perfectly satisfactory to the majority of the House, and thus the subject-matter can be disposed of to-day.

I will further state, in explanation of the remark I made a while ago, that I make my motion not to throw this bill back to the House in an offensive sense; that is not the way to legislate; because it is very easy to excite a feeling of pride, of esprit du corps, between the respective Houses; but it is to send this amendment back with our deliberate judgment that it ought to prevail, and then let them propose such modifications as are necessary to secure the assent of the House to it. My impression is that if it be sent back thus, it will be passed by both Houses before ten o'clock to-night.

Mr. SUMNER. Each Senator has such information as he can gather with regard to the possible fate of the bill in the other House.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have expressed my hope.

Mr. SUMNER. The information which I gather is the other way. Should the Senator's proposition prevail, I fear that the bill will be lost. But I differ from the Senator radically when he intimates that it needs only "slight" amendments. With this opinion I can understand that he should urge a course which will cut off such amendments as seem to me essential.

Mr. President, let me speak frankly of this measure, which has in it so much of good and so much of evil. Rarely have good and evil been mixed on such a scale. Look at the good and you are full of grateful admiration. Look at the evil and you are impatient at such an abandonment of duty. Much is gained, but much is abandoned. You have done much; but you have not done enough. You have left undone things which ought to be done. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FESSENDEN] was right in asking more. I agree with him. I ask for more. All the good of the bill cannot make me forget its evil. It is very defective. It is horribly defective. You cannot use too strong language in characterizing a measure with such fatal defects. But nobody recognizes more cordially than myself the good it has. Pardon me if I do my best to make it better.

This bill is the original House bill for the military government of the rebel States, revised and amended by the Senate in several essential particulars. As it came from the House it was excellent in its general purpose, but was very imperfect. It was nothing but a military bill, providing protection for our fellow-citizens in the rebel States. Unquestionably it was much improved in the Senate. It is easy to mention its good points, for these are conspicuous and seem like so many monuments.

Throughout the bill, in its title, in its preamble, and then again in its body, the States in question are designated as "rebel States." I like this designation. It is brief and just. It seems to justify on the face any measure of precaution or security. It teaches the country how these States are to be regarded at least for the present. It teaches these States how they are regarded by Congress. "Rebel States!" I like the term, and I am glad it is repeated. God grant that the time may come when this term may be forgotten; but until then we must not hesitate to call things by their right name.

More important still is the declaration in the preamble that "no legal State governments" now exist in the enumerated rebel States. This is a declaration of incalculable value. For a long time, too long, you have hesitated; but at last this point is reached, destined to be "the initial point" of a just reconstruction. For a long time, again and again, I have insisted that those governments are illegal. Strangely you would not say so. But this bill fixes this point, which is the starting point of a true policy. If the existing governments in the rebel States are "illegal," you have duties with regard to them which cannot be postponed. You cannot stop with this declaration. You must see that it is carried out in a practical way. In other words, you must brush away these illegal governments, the spawn of presidential usurpation, and supply their places. The illegal must give way to the legal; and Congress must supervise and control the transition. This bill has a special value in the obligations which it imposes upon you. Let it find a place in the statute-book and your duties will be fixed beyond recall.

But there is another point established which is in itself a prodigious triumph. As I mention it, I cannot conceal my joy. It is the direct requirement of universal suffrage, without distinction of race or color, in all the constitutions of the rebel States. This is done by act of Congress, without constitutional amendment. It is a grand and beneficent exercise of existing powers, for a long time invoked, but now at last grasped. No rebel State can enjoy representation in Congress, until it has conferred the suffrage upon all its citizens, and fixed this right in its constitution. This is the Magna Charta which you are about to enact. Since Runnymede, there has been nothing of greater value to Human Rights.

Add to this enumeration that the bill is in its general purposes a measure of protection for loyal fellow-citizens now trodden down by rebels. The military power is set in motion to this end, and the whole rebel region is divided into districts where the strong arm of the soldier is to supply that protection which is asked in vain from the illegal governments which have been constituted there.

Look now at the other side and you will see the defects of this bill. By an amendment of the Senate the House bill, which was merely a military bill for protection, has been converted into a measure of "reconstruction." But it is reconstruction without any machinery or motive power. There is no provision for the initiation of the new governments. There is no helping hand extended to the loyal people who may seek to lay anew the foundations of civil order. They are left to grope in the dark. This is not right. It is a failure of duty on the part of Congress, which ought to preside over the work of reconstruction and lend its helping hand, by securing Education and Equal Rights to begin at once, and by appointing the way and the season in which good citizens should proceed in creating the new governments. I cannot forget, also, that there is no provision by which the freedmen can be secured a piece of land for them and their families, which has always seemed to me important in the work of reconstruction. But all this, though of the gravest character, is dwarfed by that other objection which springs from the toleration of rebels in the copartnership of government. Here has been a strange oblivion, showing a strange insensibility.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] agreed that this bill would put the new governments in loyal hands. Has he read it? My precise objection is that it does not put the government in loyal hands. Look at it carefully, and you will see this staring you in the face at all points. While requiring suffrage for all without distinction of race or color, it leaves the machinery and motive power in the hands of the existing governments, which are conducted by the rebels. Therefore, under this bill rebels will initiate and conduct the work of reconstruction, while loyal citizens stand aside. The present President once said—"For the rebels back seats!" This bill says, "For the loyal citizens back seats!" Nobody is disfranchised. There is no traitor red with loyal blood, who may not play his part and help found the new government. The bill excepts from voting only "such as may be disfranchised for participation in rebellion." It does not require that anybody shall be disfranchised, but leaves this whole question to the existing government, who will, of course, leave the door wide open.

It is when I look at this feature of the bill that I cannot condemn it too much. It is true that the suffrage is given to the colored race; but their masters are left in power to dominate and even to organize. With their experience, craft, and determined purpose, there is too much reason to fear that all your safeguards would be overthrown, and the Unionist would continue the victim of rebel power. This must not be. And you must interfere in advance to prevent it. You must exercise a just authority in disfranchising dangerous men. On this point there must be no uncertainty—no "perhaps." It is not enough to say that rebels may be disfranchised. You must say that they must be disfranchised. Without this you surrender everything to them.

Such a surrender Congress must not make. Therefore, do I rejoice with my whole heart that the House of Representatives has given to the Senate the opportunity of reconsidering its action and taking the proper steps for amending the bill. The new governments must be on a loyal basis. Loyal people must be protected against rebels. Here I take my stand. I plead for those good people, who have suffered as people never suffered before. I appeal to you as Senators not to miss this precious opportunity. Take care that this bill is amended, so that it may be the fountain of peace and not the engine of discord and oppression.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Massachusetts now for the first time in the Senate has stated his opposition to this bill. It has been ably discussed in each House, but up to this time the opposition of the Senator from Massachusetts had not been stated.

Mr. SUMNER. Allow me to correct the Senator there. The Senator was not here when at two o'clock in the morning I denounced this amendment in the way which I have to-day, and much more severely.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Massachusetts, perhaps, past midnight two nights ago, expressed his decided opposition to the Blaine amendment; but it must be remembered that since then this substitute was introduced after careful consideration by the Senator from Massachusetts, as well as others, he contented himself with remaining in his seat in silence, without expressing the least opposition to it. It may not be improper for me to say that at an early hour he left and went home, leaving the friends of the measure to pass it without his vote and ignorant of his opposition, at least from any expression of his in the Senate. Now, he now states that the ground of his opposition is that the bill does not disfranchise the whole rebel population of the southern States.

Mr. SUMNER. I beg the Senator's pardon. I take no such ground. I say it does not provide proper safeguards against the rebel population. I have not opened the question to what extent the disfranchisement should go.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator has characterized this bill as a horrid bill, and the reason assigned is that it turns the loyal people over to the care and custody of the disloyal. Now, sir, this proposition, for the first time, places the ballot in the hands of the whole negro population of the southern States. It gives them the power to go to the polls and exercise the elective franchise for their own protection. Now, for the first time, there is an opportunity to carry out the doctrine which the Senator from Massachusetts has so often and so eloquently proclaimed here, "Give me the ballot and I will be satisfied; the ballot is the beginning and the end, the alpha and the omega of the whole theory of reconstruction." How long did we hear him declaim about the ballot at the last session? Now he has the opportunity to give the ballot to every male negro above the age of twenty-one years and to put him on a footing of equality with his former master.

Here is a bill that cripples him by no restriction, that requires no educational qualification, that does not tie his hands on account of past ignorance, but gives him that great power which the Senator has so often demanded for him. The Senator is not satisfied when this is done by the unanimous vote of his political friends in the Senate, every voice concurring; and that, too, when it is supported by military law, backed by the proposition that until the people of these States shall themselves arm the negro with political power they shall not be represented here. The Senator says that is not sufficient. Although in many southern States the negroes are in the majority, and if they have the intelligence and the vigor and the firmness of the white men they can vote down the white men; the Senator says he is not satisfied with that. Now, what is asked? What was asked in the House of Representatives? That we shall disfranchise the white population and leave only the negroes and the few loyal white people there are in the southern States to vote. If that is the proposition, let us meet it boldly and manfully. Sir, the people of Ohio I know do not demand such a proposition. All they ask is that the negro shall be protected in all his natural rights, and, as the highest means of protection, that he shall be secured the ballot. And, sir, no proposition can ever pass this Congress, and no bill can ever be sanctioned by the American people which will disfranchise the white population of the southern States, with very few exceptions, and place the power of ten States in the hands of ignorant, emancipated freedmen. We want neither black nor white oligarchies. Our people are willing to protect the freedmen, to secure them with military power, to give them money for temporary relief, to arm them with the ballot, to do everything that is necessary for their protection; but we are not willing to establish in this country ten States in which all the white people are disfranchised, and only the black can vote. When I say all, I mean practically all, because we know very well that there are comparatively few white men in the southern States who have not been complicated more or less in this rebellion; and when you attempt to draw a line between white men, when you say that one class of white men may vote and another shall be excluded, you will find yourself involved in perpetual difficulty. It is impossible to draw any such line. There will be the same difficulty in attempting to draw such distinctions that we had when we attempted to frame a property qualification for the negro.

We sweep from our legislation all tests for voting except such as each State may prescribe. We build reconstruction upon the broadest humanity and invite all men to take part in the work. So far as voting is concerned we proclaim universal amnesty in exchange for universal suffrage, and yet the Senator is not satisfied. What more did he ask a year ago? Nothing. If we exclude from voting the rebels of the South, who compose nearly all the former voting population, what becomes of the republican doctrine that all governments must be founded on the consent of the governed? I invoke constitutional liberty against such a proposition. Beware, sir, lest in guarding against rebels you destroy the foundation of republican institutions. I like rebels no better than the Senator from Massachusetts; but, sir, I will not supersede one form of oligarchy in which the blacks were slaves by another in which the whites are disfranchised outcasts. Let us introduce no such horrid deformity into the American Union. Our path has been toward enfranchisement and liberty. Let us not turn backward in our course, but after providing all necessary safeguards for white and black, let us reconstruct society in the rebel States upon the broad basis of universal suffrage.

This bill does not proclaim universal amnesty except as to voting. On the contrary, it requires these States to adopt a constitutional amendment by which the leading men disable themselves from holding office. Six thousand or perhaps ten thousand of the leading men of the South are embraced in the restriction of the constitutional amendment, and are forever excluded from holding office until two thirds of both Houses of Congress relieve them from that restriction. Is not that enough? Is it not enough that they are humiliated, conquered, their pride broken, their property lost, hundreds and thousands of their best and bravest buried under their soil, their institutions gone, they themselves deprived of the right to hold office, and placed in political power on the same footing with their former slaves? Is not that enough? I say it is, and a generous people will not demand more.

But, sir, when the attempt is made to defeat a measure of this kind, which yields all that the Senator has ever openly demanded in the Senate, all that has ever been demanded by any popular community in this great country, all that has been demanded by any Legislature, more than we claimed at the last election, I have the right to characterize this opposition as unusual and unnatural. Sir, let us issue this call to the people of the southern States. We have given here our deliberate judgment on a legal proposition: we say that the State governments organized by the President of the United States were without authority of law, because they were without the sanction of Congress. We therefore sweep them away, not for all purposes, but for all State purposes. We deny their validity as State governments. They only have the same force and effect as the local Mexican law had in California after we conquered California, the same effect that the local law of Maryland would have if the British should overrun the whole of Maryland; no more, no less. The State communities are swept out of existence, and the people are required to proceed in their own way to form State governments. What objection can there be to this?

No machinery is provided, it is true; but we have three examples already in our history of States being organized by the people without any previous enabling act. Here is an invitation to the people. They can call their party conventions, their State conventions, and finally by a movement of the people, without regard to their local Legislature or local tribunals, a constitutional convention can be convened, elected by all the people, and they can form a constitution. We prescribe what shall be in that constitution, and say that they shall, by that constitution, secure the elective franchise to all. Then the constitution is to be submitted to all the people, black and white, and to be ratified by a majority of those who vote at that election. All these steps must be taken before there is any danger of Senators coming here to sit alongside of my friend from Massachusetts. Then that constitution must be brought by these people and laid here in the Halls of Congress, that the Senate and the House may examine it. Then he can raise his objections to it; and even at that stage, if Congress does not ratify it, the whole superstructure falls. If, however, they have gone through all this machinery, then we say to them they shall go further, and their Legislature shall adopt the constitutional amendment; and what is that? Why, sir, it is an amendment which requires of their leading men to surrender all hope of office until two thirds of both Houses shall proclaim universal amnesty. Even that amendment which received the sanction of Congress never proposed to debar them of the right of voting, and if you now carry out the idea of the Senator from Massachusetts you have no longer a republican form of government in these States, according to his own definition. He told us over and over again, at the last session, that there was no republican form of government in the southern States, because all the people were not armed with the ballot; and yet he now proposes to organize these governments that are not republican because all the white people will be excluded from voting. South Carolina was not a republican form of government before, because none of the blacks could vote; and now he proposes to organize South Carolina without letting any of the whites vote.

The exemptions and qualifications of that constitutional amendment are ample protection. What more? While excluding these men from holding office, the constitutional amendment provides that all men shall stand equal before the law; provides ample security for the rights of all, blacks and whites; and if they attempt hereafter to take away or limit the right of the black man to vote they are met by the provision which declares that it can only be done by a loss of political power on their part. Then there is another clause of the constitutional amendment giving Congress ample power to enforce all the provisions of the amendment.

What more can you want unless you are willing to adopt the principle, now for the first time proclaimed by the Senator from Massachusetts, of depriving the larger portion of the southern white people of the right to vote? I am not willing and am unprepared to do that. I am perfectly willing to give to the negro in the southern States every protection and right that he can possibly have, all that my honorable friend has ever before claimed for him; to give him the ballot; to give him the benefit of military law; to give him schools; to give him a constitution in the formation and adoption of which he must participate; to give him equal rights before the law. But I am not willing to deprive the white people of the southern States of these same rights, merely because they were dragged into a rebellion, many of them against their will. Many, I know, were guilty agents; but have they not been punished enough? Is not the loss of property, the loss of honor, the loss of position, the loss of office, the loss of everything that can actuate and move a man of honorable motives, enough? Are there not enough graves in the South? Are there not enough recollections which harrow up all that is bad in the human heart?

Do we want more? Do we want the white people in the southern States to be deprived even of the poor right of going to the ballot-box and exercising political power? Certainly not. That is not the voice of the American people. Sir, if my voice could reach every citizen in this broad land I would not only appeal to the Senator from Massachusetts, but I would appeal to the people of the southern States to accept this as the final and the last offer that can be made to them. One year ago we offered to them the constitutional amendment. They have rejected it. It was the most liberal offer ever made to a conquered people in their condition. Now, it is necessary for us to organize governments there, and we again, following the scriptural rule, say to them, "If you will now do justice to the black people among you who are true and loyal to us we will do justice to you."

Let the South now reject this offer; let the South admit of no mode of reconstruction except the present unhappy condition of military surveillance, and then we shall be compelled from the necessity of the case to organize governments in the South, even if we have but ten colored voters to base organization upon; but, in the mean time, I think the highest statesmanship, yes, the simplest wisdom, demands that an effort shall be made, at the same time protecting the rights of all who have been true and loyal, to reform constitutional governments in the southern States that will represent the people of those States.

I must express my conviction that if this bill goes back to the House of Representatives, and they will do what we cannot do, take up our amendment and amend it in open debate before the American people, we can yet come to a concurrence upon this bill. I do not want to abandon this great subject to a secret conclave of six members, three of the Senate and three of the House of Representatives, where we do not know who offers a proposed amendment, where we do not know what form the bill will finally assume. Let the action of Congress on this great measure be in the light of day, so that every man takes his responsibility. If we send it to a committee of conference, and it comes back to us, we have to vote on it as an entirety—take the whole or none; it is beyond our power to amend it. We must either take the report of the committee of conference without question or not at all. But, sir, if we send the bill back to the House and enable them to make such amendments to our amendment as will make it suitable to them, I think we shall be able to agree with their modifications. At all events, we shall then have the issue broadly presented to the American people. We shall see the points of disagreement between the two Houses. Let us reconcile them, if we can; but if we cannot, then the people of the United States, who are our common judges and arbiters, will decide between us. For one I shall lose no opportunity, leave no stone unturned, if possible, to bring about a concurrence between the two Houses on this important bill, with a view that it may be sent to the President of the United States. If he disapprove it, we then have our appeal to the next Congress. But, sir, I have occupied a much longer time in these remarks than I intended when I arose. I merely wished to reply briefly to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator from Oregon, the author of this bill, moved a committee of conference. After a brief debate the indications were so clear that the judgment of the Senate was against his motion that he withdrew it. A motion is now made by the Senator from Ohio to allow the bill to go back to the House of Representatives, in the hope that the House will amend the bill or agree to it as it now stands, and that it can become the law of the land. I feel, as the Senator from Ohio feels, entire confidence that the bill can be passed, and I now suggest to our friends here that they allow the vote to be taken in order to give time to do this work. I hope that this debate in which we seem to be afloat, discussing general questions, will be dropped, that we shall take the vote now, and send the bill back to the House of Representatives, in the hope that it will there be passed either as it now stands or be amended in such a way that we can concur, and that thus this great and grand measure, the greatest by far of the measures of the session, if not of any session we have ever had, may become the law of the land.

Mr. COWAN. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of discussing the relative merits of the several propositions which have been before the other House and this body; nor do I rise for the purpose of discussing the best mode by which to attain immediate action; but it is for another purpose.

The honorable Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] has stated here publicly in debate that the Freedmen's Bureau bill has not been executed, and that the fault lies with the President, and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] rises and indorses that statement, as of course he might be expected to do. Now, I will read the preamble of the bill we passed day before yesterday morning, which the Senator from Massachusetts thinks expresses a great truth. That preamble says, "no legal State governments" exist in the South.

Why, Mr. President, what is a legal State government? Is it a government cooked up for a State here in Congress, or is it a government that the people of the State make for themselves? I like a plain answer to a plain question. Who made these State governments? The State government of Louisiana was made by the people of Louisiana under a proclamation issued by Mr. Lincoln referring that question to them. The question then arose between Mr. Lincoln and the Senator from Massachusetts and others of his school as to whom this question should be referred to as people, or in other words, who are the people. Radical gentlemen said the people are all persons, blacks and whites all together. Mr. Lincoln, however, on consulting the lawyers, was informed that the word "people" had two significations, that in its general and ordinary signification it did mean everybody, whites and blacks; but that in its technical or political meaning it meant the people of a State who were intrusted with the political power of the State; and by what law? By the law of the State. There is no other law fixing who this technical class of persons are anywhere existing. Not even the ingenuity of those who invent so many things has ever, so far as I know, discovered any law anywhere except upon the statute-books of a State to discover who the people were to whom this question should be referred. But it seems that to be guided by the law as it was found on the statute-books on the part of Mr. Lincoln was an offense, and it is also an offense on the part of the present incumbent of the presidential chair. Mr. Lincoln was guided by the law. He could make no law; nobody was bound to obey any law which he might announce if he had undertaken it. He did not undertake it, but he took the law as he found it, and he referred the question to the people of Louisiana—the persons to whom the people of Louisiana had intrusted the ballot upon their statute-book. He directed that that should be the guide, and by way of precaution he required that the voter should take an oath of allegiance to support the Constitution of the United States.

That is the government of the State of Louisiana, and that is the government which the Senators from Illinois and Massachusetts denounce as illegal, and they propose to make one here for the people of the State; and yet, I suppose, after that they will contend that the object of the Constitution and the formation of the Union was to preserve the States free, because that was its real object. It was not to subordinate them or make their people serfs, or to take away from them any of their rights as freemen which they had brought to this country.

I go on a little further: this preamble states, and it has been reiterated here upon the floor of the Senate by the Senator from Illinois that "no adequate protection for life or property now exists in the rebel States of Virginia," and so on, naming the other States; and with a great deal of parade the Freedmen's Bureau bill has been referred to, and the civil rights bill also, I believe, although I am not so certain about that; and it has been asserted that full provision had been made for the protection of life and property, especially to negroes, in the southern States; but that, by reason of defective execution, by reason of dereliction on the part of the President to do his duty, these laws were not executed. As was said to a man of no very remarkable veracity once before, a fictitious character, whom many gentlemen may remember as Sir John Falstaff, mark how plain a tale puts all this down, mark how easy a thing it is to tear out the scaffolding from under all these measures, and to show, as was asserted here two or three days ago, that it is all cooked up for the occasion, all trumped up to base this extraordinary legislation upon.

It does so happen that members of this body occasionally desire to see themselves in print by way of offering resolutions. Nothing is so common here as to inquire of the President and of the several Departments in regard to various matters, and perhaps one third of the force of the Departments is occupied in making answers to these queries. On the 8th day of January last a resolution was sent from this body to the President requesting him—

"To inform the Senate if any violations of the act entitled 'An act to protect all persons in the United States in their civil rights, and furnish the means of their vindication,' have come to his knowledge; and if so, what steps, if any, have been taken, by him to enforce the law and punish the offenders."

In reply to that resolution the President says:

Not being cognizant of any cases which came within the purview of the resolution, in order that the inquiry might have the fullest range I referred it to the heads of the several Executive Departments, whose reports are herewith communicated for the information of the Senate.

With the exception of the cases mentioned in the reports of the Secretary of War and the Attorney General, no violations, real or supposed, of the act to which the resolution refers have at any time come to the knowledge of the Executive. The steps taken in those cases to enforce the law appear in those reports.

The Secretary of War, under date of the 15th instant, submitted a series of reports from the General commanding the Armies of the United States, and other military officers, as to supposed violations of the act alluded to in the resolution, with the request that they should be referred to the Attorney General "for his investigation and report, to the end that the cases may be designated which are cognizant by the civil authorities, and such as are cognizant by military tribunals." I have directed the reference so to be made.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, February 18, 1867.

It will be observed here that the only heads of Departments who reported that they have heard of any, either real or supposed, violations of this law are the Secretary of War and the Attorney General. Now, I beg the Senate to listen to this terrible story of outrages in the South. I especially ask the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER,] who makes most fuss about these things? I believe he has repeatedly, over and over again, treated the Senate to anonymous letters on this subject; and the other Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] has a little book in which he has a catalogue of enormities that would have sunk Sodom and Gomorrah; he has them all ticketed down. Now, I beg the attention of these honorable Senators first, and of all others in the second place, and, as I said before, mark how plain a tale will put you down; mark where your preamble goes; see where the scaffolding upon which you set these measures goes. If there are violations of the law the officers of the Freedmen's Bureau are there to see to them. That was the purpose for which the bureau was constructed; that was the purpose for which the law was passed creating it; that was the argument upon which its passage was compelled through this body and the other House; and it has been in the hands of men unquestionably as much devoted to the dominant party in this body as any men to be found in the Army. Nobody that I know of has ever complained of the action of a single agent of the Freedmen's Bureau on the ground of his neglect of what the Radical majority here supposed ought to have been his duty. Nobody ever heard of such a thing as that. These men are scattered broadcast all over the South.

I believe the other day the Senator from Michigan stated that there were fifteen hundred murders. Was it in Texas alone or all over the South?

Mr. HOWARD. In Texas.

Mr. COWAN. Fifteen hundred murders in Texas alone!

Mr. HOWARD. And permit me to say further that the gentleman who gave me this information says there are some tracts of country three hundred miles in extent which the foot of no agent of the Freedmen's Bureau ever trod.

Mr. COWAN. Well, it is exceedingly strange to me if it is so dangerous a place that the foot of a negro ever trod it. It seems to me he would have trod out of it pretty quick if there were fifteen hundred murdered there last year. I rather think the gentleman who gave the Senator his information must have been reading Dr. Livingstone's last book. He did find a country in Africa three or four hundred square miles in extent, altogether devastated and as many perhaps as fifteen hundred bodies lying there, because he says sometimes the stench almost prevented their proceeding; sometimes he found them floating in gangs in the river.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Let me ask my honorable friend a question, as I know he is always very particular in these matters. I hold that murder is not the greatest crime in this world, and I want to ask—

Mr. COWAN. Oh, do not let us go into a disquisition on the criminal law.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I want to ask the Senator if he can tell me how many divorces there have been in Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Connecticut in the last twelve months? [Laughter.]

Mr. COWAN. If these outrages as charged were true, if there were fifteen hundred murders in Texas, if dead men's bodies lay around

"Thick as autumnal leaves
That strew the brooks in Vallambrosa"—

As the little book of the Senator from Massachusetts would incline you to believe, I should like to know why it is that all the roads lead to Rome as the other Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] says, all roads lead to Rome and nulla retrorsum vestigia, no tracks backward. All the information of this kind comes to the Senators from Massachusetts. Why is that? You see no tracks leading backward out of that cave. Nobody else can ever give this information. Here are the heads of Departments; here are the officers specially appointed to receive information of that kind, and they know nothing of it. Here is the answer of the Secretary of War. I suppose that his patriotism will not be impugned at least upon this side of the House. I suppose it will not be pretended that he has taken the whitewash brush in hand. I do not think any man who knows his character will ever suspect him of attempting any artistic feats of that kind. He will neither paint portraits nor rouge complexions I should say. Here is his report:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON CITY, February 18, 1867.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of Senate resolution of January 8, 1867, requesting the President to inform the Senate "if any violations of the act of Congress entitled 'An act to protect all persons in the United States in their civil rights, and furnish the means of their vindication,' have come to his knowledge; and if so, what steps, if any, have been taken by him to enforce the law and punish the offenders," together with a report of the Attorney General on the construction of the act referred to, which papers were referred to me by you for report on the 23d of January. In answer to said reference I have the honor to report: first, that in relation to the steps taken by this Department to enforce the act of Congress referred to in the said resolution—

I beg the attention of the Senator from Illinois to this, that Mr. Stanton informs the President of what steps have been taken to enforce this law, and not that the President dictates to him or to anybody else how it shall be done. Anybody, however, desirous of knowing the truth, and anybody desirous of not misrepresenting the first officer of the Republic, might have supposed that to be the case without any information from Mr. Stanton. He says:

"First, in relation to the steps taken by this Department to enforce the act of Congress referred to in the said resolution, so far as its execution devolved upon military authorities, it was promulgated in General Orders, No. 50, July 21, 1866, to all commanders of military departments, districts, and posts, a copy of which order is hereto attached."

Now, I want you to observe the extent of the military authority; and, in observing that, I only beg you to remember what was said by the Senator from Illinois. He got up and read his book, and he told the Senate that the military bill brought in from the House the other day to this body was of no kind of account at all; it gave to the General Government no military authority more than they had already under the Freedmen's Bureau bill and the civil rights bill; that if military authority was the thing wanted we had plenty of it already. Now, if that military authority is coextensive with the mischief, full and ample, then Mr. Stanton says that he has provided for its execution everywhere, and he has provided by public orders—"General Orders, No. 50, July 21, 1866." When an officer is to be assailed here publicly for dereliction of duty it might be well to read that order in his behalf. I did not know what it was; but here it is, and it can be read.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania right there allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COWAN. I would rather answer it after I get through reading.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Does the Senator not know that the President has set aside all military authority?

Mr. COWAN. If I do not know—

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the President has not proclaimed that the civil authority is supreme there, and set aside the military?

Mr. COWAN. I know of no such thing. I know, so help me Heaven, of no act of the President, for one year at least after the close of the war, and after there was time to have people settle their heads, which was not strictly in accordance with law, and with the plainest principles of law, even down to his appointment of provisional governors, which the honorable Senator chose to catechise me upon the other night at a very unseasonable hour, and to which, if I had chosen, I could have given him a complete answer. It was triumphantly alleged at that time that the appointment of a provisional governor was a violation of law. A violation of what law? What law did it violate? Gentlemen should be careful to distinguish between that which is done without law and that which is done against law. That which is done without law is not a violation of law always. If the thing in itself be innocent, harmless, it may be acquiesced in; it may be acquiesced in for such a length of time as that it is never necessary to ratify it by statute law; but it may be ratified by law.

But apart from all that, the President was intrusted with the preservation of the State governments of this Union. He was obliged to secure their perpetuation by military power; and when they fell into his hands what was necessary to be done? He did not do anything more than any court of common law would have done under the circumstances. The State was a corporation; the officers had proved faithless to their trust, and it fell into his hands in this way. Does the chairman of the Judiciary Committee pretend to assert that a court of common law, without any statute to that effect, without any law further than the law of their duty to preserve the trust, would not have appointed trustees to support it? What were those provisional governors but trustees to support the trust, just exactly the same as though the managers of a turnpike company had run away and a court of common law had appointed somebody to support the trust until the corporators could get together and elect new managers?

That is the whole proceeding from beginning to end about which so much noise has been made. The corporations fell into the hands of the President; the trustees had been faithless, and he appointed trustees to support the trust until the corporators could under their own law, the law of their own existence, come together and elect new ones. That is what all this fuss in regard to reconstruction is about, simply supporting the trust until the corporators could come together and restore it.

Now, Mr. Stanton says "a copy of that order is hereto attached;" and he goes on:

"The enforcement of said act of Congress is also one of the general regulations of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands. And a general order hereto attached was also issued from the Army headquarters."

No instance has been reported to this Department of any neglect or refusal by military officers or employees of this Department to enforce, to the extent of their legal authority, the provisions of the aforesaid act of Congress within their respective commands and stations, and I have no knowledge of any such neglect or refusal having been reported to the President."

I suppose Mr. Stanton thought it might be said that the reports were made to the President, as they are made to the Senators from Massachusetts, by somebody; he did not know of them if there were any.

"Second. The following cases of alleged violation of the said act of Congress were officially reported to the President, to wit:

"1. The case of Dr. Watson, for the murder of a negro in the department of Virginia, who, after his discharge by civil tribunal, was put on trial before a military commission."

That is the case, I suppose, to which the Senator from Illinois alluded; and here again mark how plain a tale will put you down:

"before a military commission, which was dissolved on the ground of want of jurisdiction under the decision of the Supreme Court."

Now think of it! "Under the decision of the Supreme Court!" a military commission was dismissed and a criminal turned over to the civil tribunals; and that is heralded here as a high offense, and gentlemen almost burst themselves with holy indignation while they discourse upon it. There is the whole of it from the Secretary of War, that so far from the President violating the law, the President but obeyed the law, and the Secretary of War but obeyed the law. The Supreme Court decided that military tribunals were unconstitutional for the trial of civilians, and they decided it rightly. The President and the Secretary of War would have been guilty, then, of a high misdemeanor and of a high crime, the highest that could be committed against the American people, if they had attempted in the face of that decision to go on with these illegal and arbitrary modes of jeopardizing the lives and property of men.

I have thus given you the first case. The second case is that of William Fincher:

"2. The case of William Fincher, a person of color, sentenced to the chain-gang in Georgia as a vagrant, which was referred to the Attorney General, and is under his direction and charge."

I will not detain you with the report of the Attorney General upon that case, or of the district attorney, to whom he had referred it; but it appears that William Fincher was a vagrant in the State of Georgia; and it appears, as may be found in many of the States of the North, that in Georgia vagrancy is a crime, and if a black or a white man either is found there without any known visible means of subsistence, a vagrant in other words, according to the definition of the law, an idle, wandering, worthless fellow, of no use either to himself or society, but obliged by necessity to live by theft and plunder, such a man is held to be a criminal in the State of Georgia. William Fincher, this individual here, was taken into the courts of Georgia, was tried there, and convicted and sentenced by a jury according to the law of Georgia, to be put to work in a chain-gang for a certain length of time in order to teach him how hereafter to avoid vagrancy, and be like other men, earn his living without it. I think it will be found that there is a letter from Mr. Fincher's counsel, who defended him in that court, and who took the case to a superior court, where the judgment was affirmed, that everything was right; no distinction was made between Fincher and other men, but if he had been a white man the sentence might have been the same according to the law.

That is Fincher's case, and the district attorney of Georgia was obliged upon a report of the case made to him to ride two hundred miles to see how all this was, and why? I do not know whether that ever got into the hamper-basket of the Senator from Massachusetts, but it is more than likely it came there from some of the wilds of Georgia that this vagrant negro had been sentenced by the laws of Georgia to a punishment common there and common to both black and white men, and that is swept on the wings of the wind and comes here to swell this storm of indignation and wrath which bursts so many manly bosoms at the North at the way William Fincher has been treated and other Finchers.

There is one case more, and I congratulate the Senate there is only one. This last fellow the Department seems to be in a little doubt about his name, and it is referred to as "the case of — Perkins." If the records here could be referred to to fill up that blank, it might relieve us of considerable difficulty hereafter. If the Senator from Massachusetts, who keeps the book, would look and see whether there is any Perkins there, that might settle the question. Perhaps he may be a lineal descendant of Perkins Warbeck, who gave so much trouble at one time.

"3. The case of — Perkins, in the State of Texas, where protection to a colored man from alleged illegal acts under color of civil authority was afforded by the assistant commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau, and his action approved by this Department."

There! He was actually protected; the bureau did its duty for once, and the Department approved of it. Then, taking the whole three cases, we find that one was swept away by the Supreme Court, the other one is without a scintilla of anything wrong about it; and in the third case we find the man was rescued and protected, and the action of the bureau approved by the Department; and Mr. Stanton, with a gravity which does him great credit, and which would if he were as wise as we are here certainly win for him the character of a man of high humor, goes on:

"No other reports of the violation of the act aforesaid have been made to you by me. Reports by military commanders of crimes and offenses committed against freedmen and others in their respective commands have been made to this Department and referred to the Attorney General for his opinion on the appropriate remedy. Whether they or any of them constitute violations of the civil rights law, I am unable to state."

Your obedient servant,

EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

"The President."

The Attorney General has his report here, and that is devoted to Fincher's case, so that I now give you the length and breadth of it, the sum-total of all this which attracts the attention of the nation, which invokes an omnipotent authority on the part of this Congress, invokes an authority which I venture to say no lawyer will pretend to find within either the letter or spirit of the Constitution. Think of it—Watson, Fincher, and — Perkins, the long catalogue of enormities booked by the Senator from Massachusetts to the contrary notwithstanding, the long array of anonymous letters of the other Senator from Massachusetts to the contrary notwithstanding! Here is the record. There is the place where these murders ought to go to. Why do you bring them in here? If fifteen hundred negroes have been murdered in Texas what was done at the War Department? Who reported the case? Who ran there to save these poor creatures from being butchered after that manner? And where is this agent of the Freedmen's Bureau who saved one colored man from what he believed a violation of the law, and whose action was approved by the Department, and what is he doing, and where are the other officers? Ah, but gentlemen say, there are five hundred miles square in Texas where the foot of a Freedmen's Bureau agent never trod. Very well, whose fault is it they do not tread it? My brother from Oregon [Mr. NESMITH] says the Camanches tread it; but suppose it was true that that was a thickly-settled and well-populated part of Texas, and there was not a Freedmen's Bureau agent there, and the information comes to the Senator from Michigan of fifteen hundred murders in that region, was it his business to come into the Senate here and expose this sore upon the body-politic? It seems to me I would have gone to the War Department and reported to Mr. Stanton, and asked him "Can you not cure this; we have made you a law; you have got a plenty of money and plenty of soldiers, can you not put an agent along this five hundred miles square or five hundred of them if you please, rather than permit such enormities to go on?" No, all this is kept concealed from Mr. Stanton. Mr. Stanton says he knows nothing about it.

What is it kept concealed for, if it is in existence? It is kept concealed because it is false, or if it has any existence whatever it is kept concealed from him in order that it may be trumpeted here to widen the breach between the various sections of the Republic, which some of us are now trying to heal; trumpeted here to bring the Chief Magistrate of the Republic into disrepute; trumpeted here to make the people hate him whom they ought to honor and reverence, and trumpeted here for the purpose of letting loose the diabolism of infuriated parties, and so much infuriated the one against the other that in a very short time neither of them will be willing to submit the destinies of the country to the other, and this will eventuate in an issue of blood. That is the danger.

If these enormities exist, if they exist as has been asserted here in Maryland, if they exist in Virginia, if they exist anywhere, let gentlemen attempt to have them remedied and let them call upon the Secretary of War, and my life upon it he will give them a remedy. Instead of exposing the nakedness of the Government, the nakedness of your country, instead of disgusting the whole world by a catalogue of enormities of this kind, even if they were true, you should have covered them with your mantle going backward. Have we no pride left?

Mr. HOWARD. Kept silence, as you did at Philadelphia.

Mr. COWAN. Yes; I can tell the Senator that if he had been at Philadelphia at the first convention he would have been ashamed to carry any longer the torch of disunion between brethren—shamed, aye shamed; and if there had been a bottom to his heart, or a heart in him at all, he might have joined his tears to those who met there in the hope that we again might have a common country despite the harpies and hyenas who would dig up the graves of the dead and fill the air with stench, and the hearts of all men with hatred, so as to prevent anything like a future reconciliation.

There were two Philadelphia conventions, and I have no difficulty in deciding to which a gentleman might have gone and preserved his own self-respect and preserved his own character for patriotism and for a little Christianity, too. Let them be contrasted, and I am willing to contrast them anywhere and upon all occasions and with anybody, humble as I may be. Truth is truth, and must and will prevail in the end, although she is at the bottom of a well very often and finds it difficult to get up for a long time.

Sir, I have embraced this opportunity, and I think it was an appropriate and fitting one, to vindicate the President of the United States, and to vindicate the heads of Departments from this vile, insensible charge, and to repel this violent clamor about the treatment of colored people in the southern States and that they are outraged there.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, bearing upon this precise point which my honorable friend is discussing I have had placed in my hands some very important statements, and upon authority, which I wish to have go out directly in connection with the speech of my honorable friend from Pennsylvania. I hold in my hand a letter addressed to a gentleman elected to Congress, by Mr. S. McD. Moore, of the State of Virginia, a lawyer of great ability, a man of high standing, who has always made Virginia his home, who was a Union man and very much opposed to secession, a member, I think, of the Legislature of Virginia opposed to secession until after secession, so-called, had taken place. That gentleman thus states:

"It is asserted by one party in Congress and conceded by the other that a state of lawless violence and anarchy exists in this part of the country, for which there is in fact and in truth no foundation. I have no hesitation in affirming that as good order prevails, and that the laws are generally as well administered, as I have known to be the case for the last fifty years."

I have stated to you the gentleman's name and stated his character. It is entirely reliable. His letter is written from Lexington, in Virginia, stating that the charges made of lawlessness and anarchy, and want of execution of the laws in Virginia, are entirely without foundation.

Mr. DAVIS. I will inform the honorable Senator that I know the writer of that letter, Samuel McDowell Moore. I served in the House of Representatives with him. He was then a man of as much respectability, and I presume he is now, as any one.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. That is my information of him. He is a man whose word I would take as soon as I would take the word of any Senator on this floor, to a fact within his own knowledge. Let me repeat what this gentleman says:

"As good order prevails, and the laws are generally as well administered as I have known to be the case for the last fifty years."

I shall not take up the time of the Senate by reading the whole letter. He goes on in this letter to speak of two cases in particular where trials were had, and explains the occurrences, stating that out of those two trials much of the rumors and exaggerations have got into the press of the North in relation to that section of the State.

On this same point, I have the testimony of another gentleman who must be known to both the honorable Senators from New York. I refer to Hon. Peter M. Dox, once a member of the Legislature of that great State, from the county of Ontario, and who subsequently removed to the State of Alabama, where he has lived for many years, and has been all the while a Union man. Mr. Dox I knew well. I was in college with him, and knew him thoroughly and well, as I knew a brother, and a more honorable, high-minded, or truthful man does not live. I would believe him just as soon as I would believe myself. He is writing from Alabama to a gentleman of Ontario county, New York, on this very point of which we hear so much, and upon which misrepresentations all over the northern States are published in the press from day to day, for the purpose of inflaming the passions and hatreds of the people of the North against the people of the South, and he says:

"You also ask, finally, can northern people live here quietly and pleasantly, so far as their social relations are concerned? To this question, from personal experience, and as the result of much careful observation, I unhesitatingly answer yes. Any industrious northern man, of good character, could live here in peace, and without fear of molestation from any one. He can be as free as he pleases in the utterance of his opinions, and no one will venture to gainsay his right to their maintenance. Of course if he makes it his business to tell every southern man that he is a traitor, or to be otherwise offensive personally, or if he chooses, as some who come here do choose, to write letters to be published in northern newspapers, misrepresenting the people among whom he lives, he will probably receive the cold shoulder from those whom he has seen fit to malign. No personal harm would befall him even in that case—he would only be left to himself. The southern people are too thoroughly subjugated to think of doing personal violence to any northern man simply because of his opinions, however intolerant their character or expression. In no part of the North, by night or by day, whether in the crowded streets of a town or on the common road of the country, would any stranger be less likely to be assailed than would a northern man, known to be such, in any portion of northern Alabama. Such, at any rate, is my honest opinion, after the rarest opportunities of observation. Any cases occurring to the contrary are as strongly exceptional as would be the crime of murder in Ontario county, New York."

And there is not a county where the people are more educated and intelligent and obey the laws better than the county of Ontario, in the State of New York. He says further:

"I therefore unhesitatingly stamp as false, or as the grossest misconception of the truth, any statement, no matter by whom made, which is the reverse of that which is here given. I will further say that any northern gentleman and family would be received here not only with kindness, but they would be cordially welcomed by all classes of our citizens. A stranger, uninitiated, could not go into Geneva, New York, and expect everybody to embrace him and press him to their confidence and affections. Just so is the case here; but let any man come to this place from Geneva, with a letter formally introducing him from yourself or any other respectable gentleman, and my word for it he would be cordially welcomed. There are, of course, men in Geneva, perhaps, or elsewhere in the North, whom even I unfalteringly, devotedly attached to the Union as I have always been, would hesitate to recommend to the confidence and respect of the southern people. But I take it for granted that it is not your purpose to send any of that sort of people in this direction. But should even that kind come they would not be unsafe personally."

It will be remembered that the other day I read the letter of the Governor of Florida, Mr. Walker. I read from a letter of General Tarbell, a resident now of the State of Mississippi, indorsed by Governor Fenton, of New York, in which this last November he repeated what he wrote to me the year before, in which he pronounced these statements willful, wicked, malicious falsifications of the fact, or gross exaggerations for the purpose of inflaming the people of the North against the people of the South. I read also a statement from a young soldier of our Army, who went to the State of Texas and located at La Grange, the very home of Hamilton, where he states the condition of affairs in that county, in the State of Texas. I have known him from his youth; he lived in my county, in the county of Racine, in the State of Wisconsin; and he states that the people are as law-abiding as they are in Racine county, Wisconsin, and he went on to give an account of a trial there.

Mr. President, while I state these things I do not say that throughout the southern States there are not outrages perpetrated. They are perpetrated everywhere upon the earth; but I say, and I say it most solemnly, that the American people have cause of gratitude to Almighty God, when they consider that this war has just closed and that an Army of a million men have just been withdrawn from the camps to be scattered all over this vast country, men who have been trained to bloodshed, trained more or less to plunder, and that crime is not more abundant everywhere than it now is. We have reason to be thankful that such an enormous mass of men trained to arms should be everywhere scattered among our population, and at least, as a general thing, so perfectly peaceful and law-abiding. The astonishment of the European world to day is as great that our armies, both North and South, should be disbanded and scattered among the people and produce no more of bloodshed and outrage than they have produced, as it was at the great fact that the Republic could bring such armies in the field. The dispersion of these armies and the absorption of them into the body-politic is to them as great a wonder as it was that we could raise them and bring them into action.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to submit a little testimony on the other side of the question, and I will not read from any anonymous letter or from any letter, but I will read from the sworn testimony of Major General George A. Custer, with whose fame we are all acquainted, and whose veracity I presume no one will dispute. In answer to a question put him by a committee of Congress as to the feelings of the people of Texas toward the freedmen, he said:

"There is a very strong feeling of hostility toward the freedmen as a general thing. There are exceptions, of course, but the great mass of the people there seem to look upon the freedman as being connected with or as being the cause of their present condition, and they do not hesitate to improve every opportunity to inflict injuries upon him in order, seemingly, to punish him for this. This feeling exists to a certain extent and is often manifested in their courts. I might illustrate it by stating what I know to be true, that since the establishment of the provisional government in Texas the grand juries throughout the State have found upward of five hundred indictments for murder against disloyal men, and yet in not a single case has there been a conviction, while in one judicial district, embracing seven counties, adjoining Travis county, the judge, in making to the Governor his report of the last session of court held by him, stated that fourteen negroes had been tried within his jurisdiction for various slight offenses; that the fourteen had all been convicted and sentenced to various terms in the State prison. And to show you the manner in which justice is meted out in their courts toward the freedmen, one was tried and convicted of stealing one bushel of sweet potatoes and sentenced to the penitentiary for two years. Another for stealing an equally small amount was sentenced for the same period. Then to show you their hostility further, it is of weekly if not of daily occurrence that freedmen are murdered. Their bodies are found in different parts of the country, and sometimes it is not known who the perpetrators are; but when that is known no action is taken against them. I believe a white man has never been hung for murder in Texas, although it is the law. Cases have occurred of white men meeting freedmen they never saw before, and murdering them merely from this feeling of hostility to them as a class."

That is the testimony of Major General George A. Custer.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Does he swear that he ever saw one man murdered?

Mr. WILLIAMS. He says he knows what he states to be true.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. He does not swear that he saw a single one murdered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I simply refer to this as a specimen of the evidence taken by the committee to which I referred; and since this discussion has been progressing in this body I have received from an appointee of Andrew Johnson in the State of Texas a letter stating that murder was so common there that it was barely the subject of ordinary comment, and giving an account of atrocities perpetrated upon black people which decency forbids me to mention.

Mr. FOWLER. My information from the southern States is precisely the same as that stated by the Senator from Oregon. I do not intend to present any letters, but simply to refer to a fact to show the value of a letter that was read in this Chamber a few weeks ago and has been alluded to again to-day. I will take but a few moments, as I know time is precious and the Senate is anxious to come to a vote. The letter to which I allude is one that made some charges against Governor Hamilton. The facts I am about to state I have learned from other sources, and I believe they can be substantiated by oral testimony.

The first case Governor Hamilton ever had in the State of Alabama after his admission to the bar was a case in which he sued for the liberty of five negro children who were about to be carried away by their own father and sold into slavery. He recovered their freedom, and the mother of those children bound two of them to him, which he took to Texas with the record of the court. A female child at the age of sixteen went into voluntary slavery to another citizen of Texas under a statute of that State; the other remained with Governor Hamilton until the commencement of the war, when he gave him $150 in gold and two mules and told him to make the best use he could of them. This shows the value of the letter which was read here the other day, at any rate so far as its reference to Governor Hamilton was concerned. I do not know the facts which I have stated; but I am assured by persons who do know, and by Governor Hamilton himself, that this is the ground for the charge which has been made against him, and I believe the statements I have made can be sustained by sworn testimony; and the only objection that could be made to the witnesses is that they have been and are yet Union men. I do not read letters to the Senate, and never expect to do so, and this incident shows the value to be attached to many of them.

According to the argument of the Senator from Illinois, the military protection which this bill provides for is already directed to be extended by a firmer law. Then there is nothing of importance in the bill but the fifth section. The State of Tennessee has disfranchised the rebel portion of her population. I agree with the position my State has taken on that subject, and believe it is right. I believe the safety of the Union people there as well as the safety of the nation required it. If that class of people ought to vote in the southern States, they ought to vote whether the negro population be enfranchised or not. The fact that the negroes are not yet enfranchised ought not to interfere with their right. Then why not meet these people, with their State governments as they are, with this simple proposition, "Enfranchise your negro population and your States may remain?" I see no real difference between that proposition and the proposition made here generally by those who advocate this bill. That is the sum and substance of the argument adduced here on this subject. It is not mine; on the contrary, I believe that a certain portion of the rebel population of those States may be disfranchised; and so far from those States being in a condition of tranquility and peace and an example of good order, I believe protection is absolutely needed for life and property, not only by the loyal white people, but by the freedmen in all those States.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, violations of law and order will occur in every community, however old and well organized. Every one who is acquainted with the history of human society must know that, and yet I sit here day after day and hear paraded before the Senate of the United States individual and special cases of the violation of law by a white man against a negro; but the same eloquent, impassioned gentlemen never rise to tell us of any violation of law or order by negroes against white men. These gentlemen tell us what they receive by letters; and I rise now to tell you an incident in my own personal history and observation.

When I was a young man I was a lawyer and practiced at the bar. On one occasion a negro man was arraigned for the murder of a white man. I was not in the court-house at the time, but the humane spirit of our law assigns to the humblest, white or black, the choice of an attorney to defend him in a court of law charged with crime. When that negro man was asked if he had an attorney his answer was no. He was asked, "Who will you have?" He selected the humble individual that now addresses the Chair. A messenger was sent to my office for me. I was inclined not to undertake the defense, because I had seen from the public papers in my immediate neighborhood that he was guilty and had justly forfeited his life. I asked the court to excuse me. The judge said, "The prisoner is poor and humble; he cannot afford to pay counsel; he desires you to defend him, and the court asks you to defend him." I still declined. The court said to me with the mandatory voice of the law, "Defend him." I accepted the trust, and retired to my office and prepared to fulfill it. For two days that poor negro man was on his trial for murder, willful, deliberate murder, because the man whom he had murdered had a warrant in his pocket to arrest the negro, and seizing his opportunity, concealed in his house, from the garret of his humble habitation he shot that man dead. I went into court with such a case as that and for two days defended him, and for four hours addressed the jury in defense of that poor, humble negro, and what was the consequence? In the clemency of a jury in a slave-holding State he was acquitted and went free upon society.

Sir, no such cases as this are presented here; but if a negro happens to be killed in a southern State, it matters not how many white men he may have killed, his case is paraded here, and not only are authenticated cases presented, but anonymous letters are read in the face of the Senate of the United States, and you are invoked by measures of this kind to visit upon millions of white people vengeance because perhaps a negro has been wronged or injured. If one of your own race has suffered injury and wrong you hear nothing of it.

Sir, where am I? What is the duty of the hour? A great, superior race is engaged in the Senate of the United States to-day, not in those great legislative enactments that ought to concentrate and concentrate the thoughts of American statesmen upon great public and political interests, but in the consideration of the question whether or not some negro has suffered wrong in some State. When a nation's fate hangs upon your deliberations to-day, when constitutional liberty is involved in the decision of the passing hour, we, as American statesmen, are invited to stand aside and listen to some miserable, petty story sent here to us about a negro having been dealt wrongfully with in some other section of our country. Had I the eloquence of a Demosthenes to implore the gods and goddesses to listen while I spoke; could I command the utterances of a Burke or a Pitt to call back the attention of the American Senate from the consideration of such questions as these to the great questions now devolved upon them by the political events through which we are passing, I would implore you, I would beseech you to quit the consideration of all these frivolous subjects, and turn and see whether an empire's destiny does not hang upon your words. Whatever others may think, I consider that not only the present hopes of this country for the preservation of constitutional liberty, but the destiny of my race and the hopes of mankind now and for all time are in your hands; and I implore you once more cease to think of these things as the mere party trifles of the hour, and recollect that humanity throughout all ages has an interest in your deliberations, and so act that, when you cease to be, future generations may pronounce your name blessed; yes, even the little innocent children of future generations may decorate your graves with flowers, betokening their kindness and their appreciation of you.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I desire to correct one or two misapprehensions, which I will do in a few minutes. It will be remembered that the law known as the Freedmen's Bureau act makes it the duty of the President "though the Commissioner and officers of the bureau, and under such rules and regulations as the President, through the Secretary of War shall prescribe," to "extend military protection and have military jurisdiction over all cases and questions concerning the free enjoyment of such immunities and rights," referring to personal liberty, personal security, the acquisition, enjoyment, and disposition of estates, real and personal, by freedmen in the southern States. That is the law, and it is made the duty of the President to exercise this military jurisdiction and authority until the States shall have been restored to their constitutional relations in the Union. Now, what did the President do? The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. COWAN] denied that he knew that the President had not enforced that law. The law made it his duty through these military tribunals to afford this protection till these States were restored and represented in the Congress of the United States. On the 20th day of August last the President issued a proclamation declaring "that the said insurrection is at an end, and that peace, order, tranquillity, and civil authority now exist in and throughout the whole of the United States of America." Was that executing the law? The Senator said that General Howard was Commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau, and that if that law was not carried out it was his fault, and not the President's. Here is what General Howard says in his report:

"I have obeyed your orders and instructions, making no other objections than those I have made to yourself and the Secretary of War. Could the Freed-men's Bureau be now administered with your full and hearty sanction, and with the cooperation of the other branches of the Government it would fulfill the objects of its creation in a short time, and be made, while it existed, to conduce to industry, enlightenment, and justice for all classes of the people."

There is a pretty distinct allegation that he has not been permitted to execute this law as it ought to be executed.

Now, sir, in reply to the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. DOOLITTLE,] who read a letter from somebody in Virginia, I will read what is officially reported by General Brown in regard to the condition of things in Virginia:

"In districts where the civil authorities have been invested with full power to try and punish freedmen for crimes, complaints are frequently made of the manifest injustice of the judicial officers and the abuse of authority on the part of the executive officers of the State government. When a fair trial is granted the prisoner, punishments are often of cruel severity, and sometimes executed in a barbarous manner."

That is the report of General Brown, assistant commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau for the State of Virginia. The report before me is full of statements from all the rebellious States of the same character; it is the report of the Freedmen's Bureau submitted to Congress at the commencement of this session.

Mr. McDUGALL. I move that the Senate take a recess until seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us vote, and after we take the vote we will take a recess.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. McDUGALL. I should have preferred the opportunity of more deliberation before addressing this body on a question as grave as this, and about which I pretend to be somewhat informed. It has been the fortune of my life to have been born in the far North, and yet to have lived in nearly all the States of this Union and in many portions of the continent of North America. I know as well as a man well informed, having kindred both North and South, can know, that this tale of wrong and outrage in the South is a falsehood. We hear of Governor Hamilton—Jack Hamilton—being badly abused. It is an honorable name; honorable in the country my ancestors came from. He comes here with tears in his eyes and groans on his chest, saying, "how I suffer;" when every man who knew anything of frontier life and of the dangers that belong to frontier adventure knew that he had not been in danger at all. He left his family in the South; he said he could not bring them out. Oh, Hamilton's family—

Mr. WILSON. You had better let his family alone.

Mr. McDUGALL. Very well. The Hamiltons that I know anything about are all brave. I say these things have not transpired in the South, and I have reason to say so, because I have kindred in the South as well as in the North, men who have been planters there two or three generations; and I say the men of the South, having been compelled to yield to our arms, are to-day as loyal citizens as you or I. It is not worth while to discuss this controversy after this fashion. There are great errors afloat as to the condition of the South and the public opinion of the South. They did undertake to fight us, and they fought and were vanquished. Shall we not say to them as Damas did of the fellow with whom he fought, as Bulwer has recorded him, "I did not know how well I liked him till I had fought him." Why should not generosity be the first sentiment after triumph? There seems here to be a want of that high magnanimity which is becoming under the circumstances; and if it does not exist this Government is not worth preserving. The man who would trample on a fallen foe is a coward, as all men know.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] the other evening said he would compel the South to yield to what is here required, whether they consented or not. Now, think of that for one moment. How can a man consent? I cannot consent till the subject presented to my mind has met my full concurrence. If I give my consent before that, there is a lie sub modo. I cannot give consent to a thing which has not the full conviction of my mind and my judgment. In the South they have consented; they have given the judgment of their minds to return to their allegiance to the Constitution and Government of the United States.

A friend suggests that I should save myself for the evening. I do not rise to make a speech to ornament my name, and to be referred to in the columns of books hereafter. Things of that kind I have never done, nor have they been in the contemplation of my brain. I am here attempting to maintain what I think to be the right. I have been a defender and not an offender through all my life. I never gave any offense to any man; but I have defended all that were wronged, and I will undertake to do that till my ship goes down beneath the seas.

This legislation is, as I have thought, a great outrage. It should be proclaimed by trumpet and resounded over the hills and the mountains, and that cry will yet ring out from mountain to valley and from all the plains before we have done with this subject. This idea of undertaking to coerce a people into a condition of society repugnant to themselves is a thing that cannot be done. It is one of the impossibilities. No power that can be exerted by the Congress of the United States can compel them. The will and the spirit of a people will not subject themselves, although they are now nearly subjugated. I am of northern blood and have no sympathy with southern views or feelings; but I would not submit my will to such subjection, and they will not. With the high sense of justice which I think I may possibly possess I would not dare to advise the adoption of this policy in the southern States, under which ignorant men from Dahomey may take the rule of the land. I would not in my manhood; I would not with my intelligence; I would not with the red blood that runs in my veins; I would not by the memories of the race from whence I have come. It seems to me that those who are adventuring out now have never run through the blue Symplegades. It would take Jason and the Argonauts to do it, and I do not see Jason or the Argonauts here. All that adventured out before were shipwrecked and their craft lost. We are about adventuring into dangerous seas. We are about forcing upon an unwilling people a system altogether repugnant to them and repugnant to the common sentiments of all men who have Caucasian blood. Perhaps it may be deemed wise to make the effort; for, in the dispensations of Providence, we do not know what is perfect wisdom; we have to take His ultimate judgment to govern us all; but it is the office of all men that live below His sphere to do what they think best; and it is only He who is on His burning throne that knows what is exactly right. It is our opportunity to do our best to maintain what we think to be the exact right.

Now, I should like to know who here in his full conscience, allowing him to employ his conscience and to think that there is a God, would undertake to place the barbarians of Mississippi and South Carolina in command of that country? Who would place Chinamen in my own State in a position where they might overwhelm the Caucasians of my own country and the men from Europe? It is altogether within the range of possibility that there may be two hundred and fifty thousand Chinese there in a few years; and am I then to be subject to the Asiatics, who do not belong to my order of civilization, who care nothing for our free institutions, who have learned nothing more than Confucius taught, who was never able to believe in God, and only attended the worship of the church because it was a habit?

These things, Mr. President, seem not simply painful to myself, but more than painful; they seem as threatening the overthrow of institutions established by those wise and careful men who laid the foundations of our Republic. Never did any Government undertake to compel reconstruction upon such a system. The war of the Roses was, I think, thirty years, and there were lords that went to the block; but did that change the relations of the counties or the principalities of England? Not at all. There were wars between England and Scotland that lasted through five centuries; but did that change the status of antagonistic States? No. They who bellowed loudest in England, and undertook to compel Scotland, came to grief, and they had to accept a Scottish king upon the English throne. Ireland, from the time of the wars of the Pale, was, you may say, subjugated; but what then did Great Britain say to Ireland? "We ask the consent of your Parliament;" and Great Britain, with all its power, did not dare to move even against the inferior hordes of Ireland till by bribery and corruption she had secured a majority of votes in the Irish Parliament to cede away the rights of Ireland as an independent government sub modo.

We seem to have forgotten all the lessons of history. It would be well for us to remember them somewhat better. There is no such thing as coercing an unwilling people. Willing the southern people are now to come under the old Constitution, under the old flag, to be with us again as brothers. They have been punished and have come to us like the prodigal son. We make no feast for them, but have met them with curses, and we pronounce excommunication. Will that policy be a success? Can we hope that it will be a success? We cannot hope for it, because you cannot conquer the human will; you cannot conquer the opinions and convictions that rest in the human mind. Brave men when vanquished can surrender and yield and become obedient, but they cannot be degraded. It is a false opinion that we can degrade a part of the people of our own country, of like ancestry and as brave as ourselves, fewer in number, if you please, having not so much artillery, having not so much arms, but still persistent and resistant against outrageous wrong. All that has been asked by the South since the surrender of Lee has been simply to be received again into our own family, and they who do not think they should be received have the hardness of heart that belongs to savagery; and they who think that that savageness of theirs will result in ultimate triumph will find that they are only embarking our country in difficulties that may last through many years. I would like to see in my time peace restored and the Union altogether reestablished; but it cannot be done upon terms inconsistent with the sense of justice, with the sense of right, and even the political necessities of people who belong to the Union though they have been in rebellion. It is not possible for them in Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama, and South Carolina, to yield the authority of government to negroes, ignorant, altogether uninformed, and who know nothing about what belongs to government. We have done great mischief to ourselves by degrading our institutions in making suffrage too popular. Instead of extending it, it is my opinion that we should try to restrict it to some extent, so that there will be some chance of intelligence in those people who have to do with the making of officers in counties, in States, and in the Federal Government.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment that I may make a suggestion to him? Inasmuch as I observe that his remarks are upon the measure generally, and not upon the particular question before the Senate, I suggest that he yield the floor for the present and let this vote be taken, and his general discussion can proceed when the bill itself is before the Senate at a subsequent stage.

Mr. McDUGALL. The leader of my side of the House dictates to me a certain line of conduct.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am no leader.

Mr. McDUGALL. I will yield to his suggestion now; but it is all wrong from center to circumference, from the axis to the utmost radius. "I will yield, however, to the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, that the Senate insist on its amendment to this bill which has been returned from the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, the Senate took a recess till half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at seven and a half o'clock p. m.

ENROLLED BILLS.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 453) regulating the tenure of certain civil offices;

A bill (H. R. No. 140) to restore Lieutenant Joseph P. Fyffe to his grade in active service of the Navy;

A bill (H. R. No. 1099) providing for the election of a Congressional Printer; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 216) for the restoration of Lieutenant Commander S. L. Breese, United States Navy, to the active list from the retired list.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 8th of January last, such information as is in the possession of the Departments in relation to violations of the act entitled "An act to protect all persons in the United States in their civil rights and furnish the means of their vindication," and the steps taken to enforce the law.

The Secretary proceeded to read the message.

Mr. LANE. That was read to-day. I move that it be laid upon the table and printed for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is mistaken in supposing that it was read to-day at all.

Mr. LANE. It was not read at the desk, but it was read by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. COWAN] in the course of his speech.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope it will be formally read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the duty of the Chair to communicate the message to the Senate.

Mr. LANE. It is the duty of the Senate to hear it or have it printed as they think best. I move that the reading be dispensed with, and that it be laid upon the table and printed for the use of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, communicating, in answer to the resolution of the Senate of the 27th of July last, relative to the practicability of establishing equal reciprocal relations between the United States and the British North American Provinces, and the actual condition of the question of the fisheries, a report on the subject from the Secretary of State, with the papers to which it refers; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

RETAINED BOUNTY OF COLORED SOLDIERS.

Mr. WILSON. I now move to take up the bill (S. No. 595) to regulate the disposition of an irregular fund in the custody of the Freedmen's Bureau.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

As the Commissioner of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands reports a retained bounty fund, derived from a portion of the State bounties of certain colored soldiers enlisted in Virginia and North Carolina, during the years 1864 and 1865, and by virtue of General Order No. 90, department of Virginia and North Carolina, series of 1864, holden by the superintendent of Freedmen's Affairs, but turned over to the Freedmen's Bureau upon its organization; and as the Commissioner has in possession the names of those soldiers from whom the money was taken, and as he has uniformly returned it upon the application or discovery of legal representatives, but retains a considerable portion belonging to soldiers who are either deceased or who cannot be found, therefore the bill proposes to constitute the Commissioner of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands, or his successor in office, the lawful custodian of this retained bounty fund, and to appoint him trustee of the same for the benefit of the colored soldiers or their lawful representatives.

The Commissioner is also specially authorized and empowered to invest the fund, or any portion of it, for the exclusive benefit of the colored soldiers or their legal representatives; but a sufficient amount in cash is to be retained uninvested to meet all lawful claims thereupon that will probably be presented for payment; and any portion of the fund which may remain unexpended when the bureau shall cease to exist is to be accounted for by the Commissioner to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to amend the bill in section two, line three, by inserting after the word "thereof" the words "in securities of the United States;" so as to read:

That the said Commissioner be, and he is hereby, specially authorized and empowered to invest the said fund, or any portion thereof, in securities of the United States, for the exclusive benefit of the said colored soldiers, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

LONGEVITY RATION.

Mr. WILSON. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1185) to extend to general officers and officers on the retired list the benefit of the additional ration for every five years' service.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend section fifteen of the act to increase the present military establishment of the United States, and for other purposes, approved July 5, 1838, so that general officers shall not hereafter be excluded from receiving the additional ration for every five years' service; and further provides that officers on the retired list of the Army shall have the same allowance of additional rations for every five years' service as officers in active service.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I should like to know what that bill does?

Mr. WILSON. The bill gives to general officers and retired officers the additional ration for every five years' service. Every five years it adds $108 to their pay.

Mr. WILLIAMS. One hundred and eight dollars a year?

Mr. WILSON. Every five years the officers of the Army are entitled to an additional ration, which is called the service ration, and is worth $108. Where a man has been in service forty years it annually amounts to $864. This bill gives the benefit of this additional ration to general officers and officers on the retired list. General officers do not receive this ration, while colonels do receive it; so that colonels in the Army receive about the same pay as brigadier generals, in consequence of brigadier generals not getting this service ration. By this bill we extend it to general officers and officers who have been retired on pay proper.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not see the propriety of it myself. It is a mere increase of pay to those on the retired list. I do not think it is right.

Mr. WILSON. If the Senator desires more time to consider it I will let the bill lie over.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not object, of course.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to inquire of my friend from Massachusetts whether the pay of these general officers on the active list is not large enough already, and whether they were not omitted from the previous provisions as to this ration on the ground of their having a sufficient pay already in the preceding law on the subject?

Mr. WILSON. I will say to the Senator that a brigadier gets $5,400, and some of our colonels $4,900 at this time. However, if there is objection to it, I am willing that this bill should lie over, as I have several bills that I am anxious to dispose of this evening.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid aside by common consent, no objection being interposed.

SETTLEMENT OF PAYMASTERS' ACCOUNTS.

Mr. WILSON. I now move to take up House bill No. 475.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 475) to facilitate the settlement of the accounts of paymasters of the Army. It directs the accounting officers of the Government charged with the settlement of the accounts of paymasters and additional paymasters, who have heretofore paid any troops of the United States since the commencement of the war for the suppression of the late rebellion, to place to the credit of those paymasters or additional paymasters all sums and amounts of money paid by them, respectively, to any officer, soldier, or employé connected with the military service of the United States during the war; but such payments are to be shown to have been actually made in good faith, without fraudulent practice or intent, and where the erroneous payments discovered have manifestly not been the result of gross negligence or carelessness.

Mr. WILSON. I will say that the bill passed the House of Representatives a year ago; our committee have held it back for the purpose of looking very carefully into it; but now as the war has closed, and most of the men are paid and the accounts settled, it was thought best that the bill should now be passed. It will settle the accounts of a few paymasters who have in good faith paid men through mistake in construing the laws.

Mr. GRIMES. What is the aggregate amount of suspended accounts in the paymaster's department?

Mr. WILSON. I do not know. I do not think anybody knows what it is; but it cannot be but a very small sum.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think it is millions.

Mr. WILSON. The Paymaster General told me when they had paid out over a thousand millions to the soldiers that they had lost by the paymasters not a quarter of a million.

Mr. GRIMES. I will inquire if there is any communication from the Paymaster General recommending the passage of such a law as this?

Mr. WILSON. The Paymaster General, I understand, is willing that this bill should pass.

Mr. GRIMES. Has the Senator got any information directly from him?

Mr. WILSON. He wrote a letter to the House committee in favor of the bill.

Mr. GRIMES. I do not like to oppose this bill; but I have understood that there are eighty millions of suspended accounts. That statement may be exceedingly exaggerated; but I will state to the Senate that on the committee of which I am a member we never pass any bill of this character or affecting money without having a written opinion and statement from the head of the bureau and the head of the department giving their opinions on the subject as to whether it should be passed or not.

Mr. WILSON. I am anxious to get through with as many bills as I can to-night, and if gentlemen desire time to think of this matter I will let this bill lie over.

Mr. GRIMES. That is the right way.

Mr. WILSON. As I have a great many other bills that I wish to dispose of this evening if possible, I will let this bill go over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid aside if there be no objection.

ABOLITION OF PEONAGE.

Mr. WILSON. I now call up the bill (S. No. 543) to abolish and forever prohibit the system of peonage in the Territory of New Mexico and other parts of the United States.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WILSON. I have an amendment to offer to the bill in two sections, as a substitute for the entire bill. I do not think it necessary, therefore, to read the original bill, but merely the amendment, which is more carefully drawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the original bill will be dispensed with if there be no objection.

Mr. WILSON. I move to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause, and to insert the following in lieu thereof:

That the holding of any person to service or labor under the system known as peonage is hereby declared to be unlawful, and the same is hereby abolished and forever prohibited in the Territory of New Mexico, or in any other Territory or State of the United States; and all laws, resolutions, orders, regulations, or usages of the Territory of New Mexico, or of any other Territory or State of the United States, which have heretofore established, maintained, or enforced, or by virtue of which any attempt shall hereafter be made to establish, maintain, or enforce, directly or indirectly, the voluntary or involuntary service or labor of any persons as peons, in liquidation of any debt or obligation, or otherwise, be, and the same are hereby, declared null and void; and any person or persons who shall hold, arrest, or return, or cause to be held, arrested, or returned, or in any manner aid in the arrest or return of any person or persons to a condition of peonage, shall, upon conviction, be punished by fine not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and by imprisonment not less than one nor more than five years, or both, at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of all persons in the military or civil service in the Territory of New Mexico to aid in the enforcement of the foregoing section of this act; and any person or persons who shall obstruct or attempt to obstruct, or in any way interfere with or prevent the enforcement of this act, shall be liable to the pains and penalties hereby provided; and any officer or other person in the military service of the United States who shall so offend, directly or indirectly, shall, on conviction before a court-martial, be dishonorably dismissed the service of the United States, and shall thereafter be ineligible to reappointment to any office of trust, honor, or profit under the Government.

Mr. DAVIS. I will thank the mover of this bill to inform the Senate what this thing called peonage is; to give us a clear, succinct, and comprehensible definition of the term.

Mr. WILSON. It is a condition of modified servitude, which we have inherited from Mexico. It exists in New Mexico at this time, the only part of the country where I know it does exist. In some cases it is voluntary, but in most cases forcible. In the larger towns it is disappearing, but in a portion of the country it still exists; and what is more, officers of the United States, military and civil, have been carrying it out. The object of this bill is to arrest it, to make it the duty of the civil and military officers of the United States in the Territory to put an end to the system and not support it. A report was made by one of the officers of the Government, one of the Indian agents, to the Indian Bureau, showing how persons were held in service; that officers of the United States held these persons in service; and that Colonel Davis, under the direction of General Carleton, had undertaken to enforce this law or custom in New Mexico. We intend by this bill to put an end to the system. It is a system of modified servitude which is carried on to a great extent in New Mexico, and especially to a lamentable extent with the Indians. A great many Indians are captured and forcibly held in servitude.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator says that it is a system of modified servitude, sometimes voluntary and sometimes involuntary. I suppose that to the extent that it is voluntary there is no necessity and no power on the part of Congress to interfere with it. But how far and to what extent is it voluntary? The system of apprenticeship is a servitude, and an involuntary servitude. I have seen a great deal of general statement about peonage in Mexico, but I have never yet met with any precise definition of it giving me a fair idea of what it was. I admit that my want of information on the subject has not been supplied much by the explanation of the Senator. In what form is it involuntary to what extent; what are the rights of the peon, and what are the rights of the man who claims his services? How can it be terminated? I suppose all these are matters that are governed by the system itself. I think we are about to legislate on a subject that we know very little about; at least that is my case.

Mr. LANE. By the laws of Mexico which were existing in New Mexico at the time of the conquest peonage was established. The system was simply this, as I understand it: that where a Mexican owed a debt his creditor had a right to his labor and services until that debt was paid. The debtor became a domestic servant, and he and his family were supported by the creditor, and the peonage never ended until the debt was discharged. It was a kind of servitude for debt, which the committee thought was inconsistent with our institutions. We simply say by this bill that peonage shall be abolished, and the creditor shall be left to all his legal means of collecting his debt, but he shall not hold the peon in slavery. I understand also that by this system the creditor not only had a right by an involuntary process to the labor of the peon, but the debtor if he chose might become the servant of the creditor and serve until the debt was paid. A very small debt with the interest, where the peon has a family to support and the creditor supports him, amounts to a servitude for life. We now simply say that the creditor in New Mexico shall have all the means of collecting their debts known to the law, but that peonage or servitude for debt shall cease. That is the whole of it.

Mr. DAVIS. Well, Mr. President, I have been for a good many years of my life in about the same state of slavery that my friend from Indiana represents the peons of Mexico to have been; I have owed considerable debts and I have worked mighty hard to pay them. All the proceeds of my labor went to the payment of my debts, and I had not the advantage which the peon has; the creditor was not supporting me during the time I was laboring to discharge my debts; I had to support myself.

I rather think this matter might as well be postponed till the 4th of March. I believe every difficult question is proposed to be referred over to that time. I once heard of an Irishman who stole an old woman's turkey, and he put it under his arm and was traveling off pretty rapidly to make his escape with his booty. She followed him some distance, but he outran her. When she discovered that she could not overtake him, she said, "Oh, you thief, never mind; you will pay for this on the day of judgment." "Well, madam," said he, "if you will trust me that long I will take another." [Laughter.] I think we may as well trust this system of peonage till the 4th of March, when I suppose the honorable Senator from Massachusetts will have time to investigate the whole subject, and to present it just as it exists clearly to the Senate, and inform us what there is in it that deserves correction or reformation, and what there is in it that ought to remain. I think this feature of a man's working to pay the debts that he owes to his creditors, in a modified form at least, ought to exist.

Mr. WILSON. I do not suppose the Senator from Kentucky needs information in regard to what peonage is in New Mexico or Mexico or anywhere else. I do not desire to take up time in defining what it is. It is simply a system of slavery, as I said, a modified slavery. The creditor cannot sell the peon, but he holds his services. The system has been of the most wretched and degrading character, degrading all that class of population. In the larger towns in New Mexico they are getting emancipated from it, and the peons are being elevated by that emancipation.

Mr. LANE. If the Senator will pardon me one moment, I will say that the creditor cannot sell the peon, but he can transfer him just as he would a mule or a horse and give his services to anybody else. It is a system of serfdom worse than the Russian system ever was.

Mr. COWAN. If he assigns him is it not on a consideration?

Mr. LANE. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON. The other day my colleague read from a report of one of the officers of the Indian Bureau an account of the state of things in New Mexico. That officer pressed upon the Government the importance of prompt action in this matter; that a great number of persons were held in that condition; that the system exists in a large portion of New Mexico, and is in force to-day. It has disappeared in the large towns, and peons who once worked for two or three dollars a month are now able to command respectable wages, to support their families, elevate themselves, and improve their condition. It is certainly a most wretched system. It applies not to negroes, but to white men; and while I have great faith in the negro, I believe a white man is as good as a negro; and while I have been against negro slavery, I am also against slavery of this kind for white men. I hope we shall put the bill on its passage, and I have no doubt good results will grow out of it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will state for the information of the Senate that while examining into the Indian affairs of New Mexico, as a member of the committee on that subject, of which the present Presiding Officer was also a member, we reported some testimony bearing on this state of affairs in the Territory of New Mexico. It appeared, I think, from my best recollection without now reading from the report, that it was believed there were about two thousand of the Navajo and Ute Indians who were held in New Mexico as domestic servants in a state of bondage or slavery. The Navajoes, a large and powerful tribe of Indians, numbering nearly ten thousand, had been almost constantly at war with the Mexicans; and it will be remembered that a majority of the Mexicans are of Indian blood, with some Spanish blood intermixed. These wars had continued for hundreds of years probably. They were raiding upon each other, stealing each other's flocks and herds, and stealing each other's women and children. The Mexicans, it is said, rather got the advantage of the Navajoes in the number of women and children, but the Navajoes got the advantage of the Mexicans in stealing sheep and cattle, and running them off into their fastnesses. The sum and substance of the testimony was that probably there were about two thousand Indians held in New Mexico under this system. But, sir, you will recollect the testimony of Judge Benedict, the chief justice of the Territory. He stated that the question having arisen before the United States court in New Mexico upon a habeas corpus, it was decided that these persons were free, and the court had discharged them upon habeas corpus. The court had decided that there was no power in the law of New Mexico which would hold a person against his will in servitude; but he stated that as a practical fact these persons remained in the families and in the service of their former masters or employers. Not knowing their rights, not being in a position to go into court to assert their rights, or not having a desire to do so, they were generally remaining in the families of their masters, and probably there were about two thousand of them in the Territory; that is, so far as Indian slavery is concerned. Some of these Indians were captured by the Mexicans, and some were captured by other tribes of Indians and sold to the Mexicans.

Then, as to the system of peonage, it is true that by the law of Mexico before we acquired the Territory of New Mexico the system of peonage existed there; a system by which a person indebted to another is compelled specifically to perform labor until the debt is discharged. The debtor has the privilege, under their law, of hiring himself out to another man; to get another man or master, if you please, to purchase the debt; and then he goes along with his debt to another master; but as long as the debt remains he is compelled to serve. According to the custom of that country with that class of people, in the development of civilization which they have attained, the practical fact was that almost always when one desired to hire out, the first thing the laborer desired to do was to get in debt to his master, and get in debt as much as he could, and go and live with him. Generally they are in the employ of wealthy persons owning the lands, and the peons live upon the lands and cultivate them as serfs. It is a system of serfdom. I understood, however, from the chief justice of the Territory, that in the decision which was given by the court they had decided against the power to hold these persons against their will; they were not compelled to remain any longer than they desired to remain; but as a practical fact they do reside with the landholders throughout New Mexico to a considerable extent.

I state this simply as the information which came to us upon our examination. The testimony of Chief Justice Benedict and Governor Connolly and various others in relation to the system will be found in the appendix to the report which we have made. I think I have stated substantially just how it stands.

Mr. BUCKALEW. There is no doubt of our jurisdiction in the Territory of New Mexico to enact such a law as the one proposed. I have some knowledge of this system and I think the necessity for this law is evident. Eventually the courts will weed out this system in that Territory, and do it effectually; but it will remain lingering there for a considerable time unless Congress shall interpose by a law of this kind. Upon the publication of such a statute in that Territory the whole system will fall to the ground at once. I think anywhere within the limits of the United States, with our ideas and our civilization, it is a disgrace that it should be permitted to continue where the power of this Government can extend. In practice, this is not a system of service for the payment of a debt, in view of which the servitude commences. As already explained, the almost invariable fact is that the peon continues accumulating debt, and as that debt is formed while he is subject to a master the terms of it are always exceedingly unfavorable to him, and for a very nominal consideration he is continued in this system of service during his whole lifetime. It is a system which degrades both the owner of the labor and the laborer himself, and in my opinion the sooner we terminate it the better.

Mr. WILSON. I hope the bill will now be put on its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered as a substitute for the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; was read the third time, and passed.

RIGHTS OF VOLUNTEERS IN THE ARMY.

Mr. WILSON. I now move to take up the bill (H. R. No. 1134) declaring and fixing the rights of volunteers as a part of the Army.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia reported the bill with amendments.

The first amendment was in section one, line fifteen, to strike out the word "and" and to insert the word "but;" in line sixteen to insert the word "only" before the word "apply," and to strike out the word "all" before the word "appointments;" and in line seventeen, after the word "been" to insert the words "or shall hereafter be;" so that the section will read:

That in computing the length of service of any officer of the Army, in order to determine what allowance and payment of additional or longevity rations he is entitled to, and also in fixing the relative rank to be given to an officer as between himself and others having the same grade and date of appointment and commission, there shall be taken into account and credited to such officer whatever time he may have actually served, whether continuously or at different periods, as a commissioned officer of the United States, either in the regular Army, or since the 19th day of April, 1861, in the volunteer service, either under appointment or commission from the Governor of a State, or from the President of the United States; but the provision herein contained as to relative rank shall only apply to appointments that have already been or shall hereafter be made under the act to fix the military peace establishment of the United States, approved July 28, 1866.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert at the end of the first section the following:

And all officers in the Army of the United States who have served by commission in the volunteer forces in the war for the suppression of the rebellion shall have the same rank by brevet in the Army of the United States as the highest rank they held by commission in the volunteer forces, not including brevet commissions.

Mr. GRIMES. I have seen the statement here—it is before us—that some gentlemen have been appointed first lieutenants in the regular Army who were colonels in the volunteer service. Under this amendment, as I understand it, if I do understand it, they will have the brevet rank in the regular Army of colonel. The result therefore will be that when they are on detached service, although second lieutenants, they will rank even the majors and lieutenant colonels of the Army.

Mr. HARRIS. Major generals in the volunteer service have been appointed captains and first lieutenants.

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator from New York tells me that there are major generals who have been appointed captains and first lieutenants. In that event, if there should happen to be one of them in Texas to-day he would rank the general in command of the district.

Mr. LANE. The operation of this amendment, as I understand, is just this: we propose to give officers appointed in the regular Army from the volunteer service the brevet rank of the highest grade which they held by commission in the volunteers, and I think myself that is perfectly right and proper. Suppose this case: a young man in 1861 was appointed a lieutenant in the regular Army; his neighbor went into the volunteer service; they have both seen precisely the same service. I see no possible reason why the highest commission that the volunteer officer held should not give him the brevet rank over the officer in the regular Army; and that as I understand is the whole of the amendment. I think it is just and proper. I think this discrimination against the volunteer service has been kept up too long in the Army of the United States. We look to the volunteer forces for the preservation of the nation, and I will sanction no discrimination against officers of the volunteer service. It is true that many of these men, now lieutenants and captains and majors, were colonels and brigadier generals and major generals in the volunteers during the rebellion; but they have rendered the same service precisely in the volunteer force as though they had been in the regular Army, and although I know there is opposition to it on the part of regular officers, still I think it is perfectly just that they should have this brevet grade according to their service, whether in the volunteer or in the regular forces.

Mr. GRIMES. I know of no opposition on the part of regular Army officers to this proposition, and I never heard of its being made before. I never supposed that such a proposition could be submitted to the Senate. I do not understand that there is any antagonism or any indisposition to do justice to volunteer officers; but everybody can see, I think, the anomalous condition in which the matter would be placed by this proposition. Take the very case the Senator puts: a young man entered the regular Army in 1861 as a captain; he has perhaps reached the grade of a major; he has done just as good service in the Army, I suppose, during the six years as the man who through family or political influence may have been a lieutenant colonel or a colonel of volunteers, and who has received perhaps the brevet rank of a major general. Now, then, those two men, one of whom has been a major in the regular Army for six years and the other been in the volunteer service as a major general or colonel, are in a regiment in Texas, and the man who is lowest in lineal rank commands the man who is in the highest, on account of his brevet rank. We all know how these brevets have been conferred and how these commissions have been granted. If there is any way to create universal confusion throughout the Army it is this proposition.

Mr. LANE. The Senator will permit me to suggest that they are not to have rank on account of their brevet promotions, but they are to take the brevet rank of the highest commission which they held in the volunteers. That is the whole of it.

Mr. GRIMES. I understand it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I certainly have as great an admiration for the volunteer service as my colleague; yet I am not able to see this proposition just as he does. While we want to confer all honor on the volunteer service, I think it important that the Army should be organized so as to produce no conflicts of command or authority or grade. The proposition here is that an officer who has been in the volunteer service, and who is now appointed into the regular Army at a lower grade, shall have the brevet rank of the highest grade he had in the volunteer service; so that it is legislating a brevet rank; and that brevet rank gives authority and real rank and command on some occasions. It would be a very pleasant thing if we could make all the men who served in the volunteer service brigadier and major generals; but we cannot do it. It has got to be done according to the interests of the service; and it seems to me that the suggestions of the Senator from Iowa are conclusive on this subject.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend the second section of the bill by inserting after the word "regulations" in the fourth line the words "so far as is consistent with the foregoing section;" so that it will read:

That in all matters relating to pay, allowances, rank, duties, privileges, and rights of officers and soldiers of the Army of the United States, the same rules and regulations, so far as is consistent with the foregoing section, shall apply, &c.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I cannot understand this section. I wish the Senator having charge of the bill would explain it. I understand that the first section regulates the longevity ration, and nothing else, I think. I should like to know what the second section amounts to.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the Secretary to read the second section of the bill.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That in all matters relating to pay, allowances, rank, duties, privileges, and rights of officers and soldiers of the Army of the United States, the same rules and regulations shall apply, without distinction, for such time as they may be or have been in the service, alike to those who belong permanently to that service and to those who, as volunteers, may be or have been commissioned or mustered into the military service under the laws of the United States for a limited period.

But nothing in this act shall be construed as affecting or in any way relating to the militia of the several States when called into the service of the United States.

Mr. WILSON. I think that is a very simple and plain proposition. It puts the men who have served in the volunteers, who are now in the regular Army, in regard to pay, allowances, rank, duties, and privileges, on the same footing precisely with those who belong permanently to the regular Army. It ought to pass. I do not see why any objection should be made to it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. What is it? I do not understand it.

Mr. WILSON. As the matter stands now, there is no equal in it at all. A man may have entered the volunteer service on the first day of the war as a lieutenant, and one of his neighbors may have entered the regular Army as lieutenant. They may have served to the end of the war, and at the close of the war the man who entered the regular Army is a lieutenant; the man who entered the volunteers is a major general. He goes into the regular Army as a lieutenant, or perhaps is appointed a captain; and the lieutenant of the regular Army is put in one of the new regiments as a captain. The lieutenant of the regular Army outranks the major general, whose name is a part of the history of the country. Such cases are innumerable. Now, what we want to do is to let the time of service count; that these men shall stand on an equality in all respects in regard to pay. Then we want the man who served in the volunteers to have the same rights as the man who served in the regular Army. This bill passed the House of Representatives for that purpose. We have amended it slightly, restricting its action as it passed the House, with the exception of the clause voted down, which I think ought to pass; but I am not going to make a contest over it here to-night, for I know very well that a set of men who want special privileges in this matter have been writing all over the country that they would not stand quite so high, and somebody else would stand a little higher if men's services were counted in the war.

Mr. HENDRICKS. In regard to the rations and all that, I think it is very right; but how about the command, the authority?

Mr. WILSON. The volunteer officer will be on the same footing by law precisely as the other man who served in the regular Army. It gives the volunteer officers the benefit of their service in the volunteers.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I guess that is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts to the second section of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I offer another amendment, to insert as an additional section the following:

And be it further enacted, That the act entitled "An act to increase the pay of soldiers in the United States Army, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1864, shall not be so construed as to increase the emoluments of the commissioned officers of the Army at the date of its passage. And the first section of the act entitled "An act to amend the several acts heretofore passed to provide for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1865, was not intended to be retrospective or retroactive in its operation, and shall not be so construed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. LANE. I shall ask for another vote on the amendment voted down in Committee of the Whole in reference to the rank of these volunteer officers. I am satisfied the Senate are doing an unjust thing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not in the power of the Senator, it not having been adopted in Committee of the Whole. The Senator can move it again.

Mr. WILSON. You had better not press that now.

Mr. LANE. I will withdraw it if the Chairman says so, but I am satisfied it is an unjust thing to the volunteer service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not suggest that it be withdrawn, but that it is not before the Senate.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Indiana if the effect of the amendment which was disagreed to in Committee of the Whole is simply to put the volunteer officer on the same footing as the regular Army officer? Is that all that it amounts to? I do not know that I understand it.

Mr. LANE. No; it amounts to a little more than that. A volunteer officer who has been a brigadier or a major general goes into the regular Army as a captain; we give him rank according to the highest commission he held in the volunteer service, which I think is perfectly right and proper. At the beginning of this rebellion we had a small regular Army scattered to the four winds of heaven by a traitorous Cabinet. We did not rely upon that Army. We called two million volunteers into the service; and I propose now that volunteer officers who fought through the whole war, and by their distinguished merit and gallantry achieved high commands, when they go into the regular Army shall not be ranked by a graduate of West Point, who graduated it may be yesterday, and entered the regular Army. That is all I propose.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Indiana what is the position of the regular Army officer. Suppose that a captain in the regular Army was made a major general or a brigadier general in the volunteer service, and now he is a major in the regular Army; what rank does he get in the regular Army in consequence of having been a brigadier general in the volunteers?

Mr. LANE. He, as I understand, gets the highest brevet rank conferred upon him.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The highest brevet rank conferred upon him in the volunteer service?

Mr. LANE. That is my understanding.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then if he does it is manifestly just that the volunteer should have the same thing.

Mr. WILSON. I am sorry to say that there is a mistake in that statement. As I understand it it stands in this way: take a major in the regular Army who has been a major general of volunteers; he is still a major in the regular Army. What he has gained as a volunteer officer goes for nothing.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Does not the brevet he has got in the volunteer service count?

Mr. WILSON. It does not. A volunteer brevet does not count in the regular Army. Volunteer service does not count at all, whether it be by a regular officer or a volunteer officer going into the regular Army. This proposition was intended to do something for the men, whether they were of the regular Army or volunteers, who had won brevets or regular promotion in the volunteer service. Many officers of the Army, lieutenant colonels, majors, and captains, have been brigadier and major generals in the volunteer forces. They go back to their commands, and all their great reputation, all their services, count for nothing. If a man has been in the volunteer service and commanded a corps in the war, and goes into the regular Army, all his services count for nothing, and he is outranked by an officer of the regular Army who has remained there and done nothing throughout the war. Take a captain in one of these new regiments who has been a first lieutenant for the last three or four years; he is made a captain in one of these new regiments. You take another officer who has been a major general, whether he is a regular officer or a volunteer, and you make him a captain; say he was a lieutenant in the regular Army; he goes into the volunteers, becomes distinguished, connects his name with the history of the country. If he goes as a captain into one of these regiments he is outranked by the lieutenant of the regular Army; all his services count for nothing. That is the way the matter stands to-day. It was intended to correct this injustice, and give the men who have won positions in the volunteer service of the country brevet rank in the regular Army, which would make them outrank these other officers.

Mr. BROWN. I suggest whether the difficulty is not of a somewhat different character from that which has been suggested. If I understand it correctly, officers in the regular Army have been brevetted for their services, and they take rank accordingly. Now, the trouble is that there is no authority by which the War Department can brevet those who have been appointed from the volunteer forces for their services heretofore in the volunteer service. They cannot give them brevet rank on the strength of their service in the volunteer forces. I think it probable the difficulty would be obviated if authority were given to the Secretary of War, or the President, to confer brevet rank on those who have been appointed in the regular Army for their past services in the volunteer service. I do not believe we can get at it in any other way.

Mr. LANE. The question asked me by the Senator from Illinois was, whether the regular Army officers who held their commissions in the volunteer service were brevetted and held a grade according to their highest commission; and he said if that were true the same rule ought to be applied to volunteer officers. That is not so, as has been stated; but the truth is, that the subalterns in the regular Army have been brevetted again and again until they outrank the appointments from the volunteer forces, and no brevet is allowed to volunteer officers on account of their services in the volunteer army. That is the injustice of it as it seems to me.

Mr. CONNESS. As I understand this proposition, its difficulty consists in this: that it gives indiscriminate brevets by an act of Congress, according to the commission that may have been issued to officers by the Governors of States. The conferring of a brevet upon the record of an officer, whether he be a volunteer or a regular, is an honor due when earned; but in this case, if you confer brevets upon volunteers by an act of this kind, which shall apply according to the commission held by the officer, you will be conferring brevets, in all probability, upon men who received in the early stages of the war high commissions, and who, in many instances, led our men to slaughter and not to victory. If you desire to advance by brevet rank meritorious volunteer officers, make a provision by which it may be done upon the record of each officer; but do not do it indiscriminately, so that those who are deserving and those who are undeserving will receive the honor alike.

Mr. NESMITH. If it is in order I should like to offer this amendment to the first section:

And the President is hereby authorized to confer brevet rank on officers of the regular Army who have served in the volunteers.

Several SENATORS. That is right.

Mr. NESMITH. My objection to the proposition in the amendment reported is—and the question will arise—whether by this act these officers can actually take the brevet rank without their being nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate. I do not think they can. I think it is necessary that they should be nominated and confirmed under the present existing laws. I think the amendment which I propose will obviate the difficulty.

Mr. WILSON. Do you make that motion?

Mr. NESMITH. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think the Senate ought to give some attention to this second section.

Mr. GRIMES. Let us dispose of the other question.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is perfectly impossible to understand this second section, and I will ask the attention of the chairman of the committee to it. It reads:

That in all matters relating to pay, allowances, rank, duties, privileges, and rights of officers and soldiers of the Army of the United States, the same rules and regulations shall apply, without distinction, for such time as they may be or have been in the service, alike to those who belong permanently to that service and to those who, as volunteers, may be or have been commissioned or mustered into the military service under the laws of the United States for a limited period.

Mr. CONNESS. That is a very long sentence.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is so long that I cannot understand it. Laws ought to be expressed clearly, in plain words, that a man not skilled particularly in the business might comprehend them; but I confess my inability to comprehend this second section, and unless it can be explained, I shall move to strike it out.

Mr. WILSON. I do not know that I can explain it so that the Senator will understand it, but I will endeavor to state what I understand it to mean and what the purpose of it is. It provides—

That in all matters relating to pay, allowances, rank, duties, privileges, and rights of officers and soldiers of the Army of the United States, the same rules and regulations shall apply without distinction for such time as they may be or have been in the service, alike to those who belong permanently to that service and to those who as volunteers may be or have been commissioned or mustered into the military service under the laws of the United States for a limited period.

Now, I understand this to be that so far as pay is concerned, so far as allowances are concerned, so far as duties, rights, and privileges are concerned, it puts on precisely the same footing the men who have been in the regular Army during the war and the men who were in the volunteers and have since been put into the regular Army. They are put on an equality in every respect in regard to allowances and privileges. For instance, if a man has served four years in the volunteers, and that were counted, by serving one year more would make five years, which would entitle him to a service ration, which would be $108 per year added to his pay. The man in the regular Army entering the service, perhaps on the same day, receives that.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is provided for in the first section.

Mr. WILSON. That is the meaning here also. The object was to put them on a perfect equality. As the law now stands, the four years' service performed by a volunteer officer does not count anything toward his allowances, and it does not count according to his rank. This will put them on a perfect equality, and I think it ought to stand.

Mr. NESMITH. I have made a little modification of my amendment. It is to insert at the end of the first section, where the committee proposed to insert their amendment, these words:

And the President is hereby authorized to confer brevet rank upon officers in the regular Army for their services in the volunteer forces.

Mr. WILSON. I will accept that amendment. But I will tell you what I think will be the result under it. Those who can gain the Executive ear and influence will receive the brevets; and those who cannot will not.

Mr. NESMITH. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee this question: if he thinks brevet rank can be conferred in the manner proposed by the amendment reported by the committee, without nomination and confirmation by the Senate? It cannot under the present law.

Mr. WILSON. It provides who on certain occasions shall be these officers, and then the officers are nominated, and we can confirm them.

Mr. LANE. I have no objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon, except this: that I see no possible necessity for it, because under the general law and the regulations of the Army the President has the perfect right to confer brevet rank upon every officer in the regular Army, just precisely as much as he would have if this bill passes. I see no objection to it, however.

Mr. NESMITH. I beg the Senator's pardon. He has not a right to confer brevet rank on every officer in the Army except for distinguished services in the field.

Mr. LANE. The President has now precisely the same right to confer brevet rank on every officer in the regular Army that he would have after the passage of this bill. For distinguished services in the field he may confer brevet rank on volunteer officers. I do not think there is anything wrong in the amendment, for it is precisely a reaffirmance of the law which has existed for seventy-five years; nothing more, nothing less.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

DRAFTED MEN.

Mr. WILSON. I now move to take up House bill No. 811.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 811) for the relief of certain drafted men.

Mr. WILSON. The Committee on Military Affairs have reported an amendment, striking out the whole of the preamble and the original bill itself and inserting a simple section as a substitute. I do not think, therefore, it will be necessary to read the whole bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Only the section proposed to be inserted will be read, unless the reading of the original bill is called for by some Senator.

The Secretary read the substitute of the committee, as follows:

That the Secretary of War be authorized and directed to refund to each person drafted into the military service, who, having paid for exemption from said draft, was again drafted into and actually entered the military service within one year from the date at which payment for exemption from a prior draft had been made, or who, having furnished a substitute, was again drafted and rendered service within one year, the sum of $100, which shall be a full and final settlement of such claim, and shall only be paid by the Secretary of War upon condition that the said amount is accepted as a final settlement, and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum sufficient to make such payments.

Mr. WILSON. I will explain this bill, which comes from the House of Representatives. In one of the districts of Pennsylvania, I think the sixteenth congressional district, the district represented in the last Congress by Mr. Coffroth, there were about one hundred and fifty men who were drafted in the summer of 1864 under a call, and in the February following were drafted again. They had paid the commutation of $300 the first time, but were drafted again. Some of them hired substitutes; others entered the service in the month of March, 1865, and were discharged in the latter part of April of that year. On application to the Department here it was ruled that the Government could not hold them. They now come here and ask us to pay them back the commutation money which they paid in June and July, 1864, and the House have passed this bill giving these persons—there are about one hundred and fifty of them—the $300. The amendment of the committee gives them $100 instead of $300, on the ground that they owed service to the Government of the United States in June, 1864, when they paid their commutations. They entered the service in March following, eight or nine months afterward, and we considered that we had a claim on their services during that time, and to pay them back the $300 would not be just to the Government. They were in the service some three or four weeks, and were discharged on the ground that the Government had not the right to hold them. They had their pay, clothing, and transportation. We now propose to give them $100 instead of $300. We consider that we had a claim on their services for eight or nine months, and should not give up this $300; but we propose to give them $100 for the few weeks that they served or hired substitutes, and the amendment provides that this shall be a final settlement, that there shall never be any future claim. It turns out that here and there a similar case has occurred in the country. Perhaps there may be two hundred or three hundred in the whole United States. We propose to settle them on this basis.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not like to dispute this claim; but I wish to remind the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that I have not been able to get the ear of that committee on a claim entirely similar, much less the action of the committee. There was a draft ordered in the State that I have the honor in part to represent in 1864. I thought at the time there was nothing due from the State of Kansas, because I knew our quota must be full; but according to the showing of the War Department at that time, we did owe some men upon the quota as made out, and they ordered the draft enforced, and the provost marshals commenced drafting. It was ascertained in the course of two or three weeks that not only was there nothing due, but we were three or four thousand men ahead of all calls. In the mean time they had drafted about one hundred men—about the same number provided for in this bill. Some of them were held; others paid their commutation money and were discharged. Now, I should like to have a bill brought in that would cover all cases of this character.

Mr. WILSON. This is a general bill, applying to everything of the kind.

Mr. POMEROY. If it will meet the cases of the character I speak of it will be very gratifying to me; but I do not think it will. The Department at first claimed that the State of Kansas was indebted to the Government some three thousand men. When they corrected their account, and gave us the official report on the subject, it was ascertained that we were three thousand and some hundred ahead of all calls. Now, I ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether he has got any provision here that will make a settlement with the one hundred men who were drafted when there was nothing due from my State? Have you got anything in the bill that will meet that case?

Mr. WILSON. No, sir, I think we have nothing of that kind. This is a bill that applies to men who were drafted when we had no right to draft them by law.

Mr. POMEROY. That is precisely the case in my State.

Mr. WILSON. As for calling for more troops from Kansas than they thought were due, that is a mistake of the Department, which they must settle with the State of Kansas. I hope the Senator from Kansas will not arrest the passage of this bill by a discussion of that question. I suggest to him that Kansas has the glory, and it is a glory and an honor forever, of furnishing her full quota and a few over.

Mr. POMEROY. I did not expect to arrest the passage of this bill. I thought if I could arrest the attention of the committee it would be all I should aspire to.

Mr. WILSON. Well, the committee have had their attention arrested.

Mr. POMEROY. In the next place, I say glory is not as valuable always as to have something in a man's pocket. A man cannot live on glory always. Some of our men who have served all through the war are entirely destitute, having served when there was not a man due from the State, and we could not get them discharged. There was never a day, from the time the war began until its close that our State was not thousands ahead of all calls.

Mr. WILSON. I will say to the Senator that some States were ahead at times on special drafts; but the Administration in making their calls intended to equalize them: and if the war had continued a year longer Kansas perhaps might not have had any surplus. The Senator says glory does not amount to much. I think it does. We read that Garibaldi's volunteers followed his flag and fought through the war in which they were engaged, and when the time for their discharge came they would not take any pay whatever; gave their time and their services to their country.

Mr. POMEROY. That is very creditable, and I do not wish to speak lightly of any military glory; but glory is a great deal better with a full stomach than it is with an empty one.

Mr. WILSON. I agree to that, and I hope we shall put the bill on its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN C. M'FERRAN.

Mr. LANE. I move to take up House bill No. 474, which has been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 474) for the relief of John C. McFerran, of the United States Army, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to credit John C. McFerran, of the United States Army, with $1,265, being the amount for which, as assistant commissary of subsistence, he erroneously receipted to Francis F. Thomas, also an assistant commissary, in excess of the amount of money actually paid over to him by Thomas at Santa Fé, in New Mexico, in November, 1850.

Mr. POMEROY. This seems to be an old stager, a claim for something that occurred in 1850. I should like some explanation of it. I can see how such a thing might happen during a war when our armies were being moved with great rapidity; but I do not see how it could have happened in 1850, in a time of peace, when everything was done with great deliberation and care.

Mr. LANE. I think I can explain the case in a few words: I do not wish to take up time. Mr. McFerran was a lieutenant in the regular Army, appointed a commissary of subsistence to take charge of property in New Mexico. There were certain packages of money marked as containing certain amounts; and when the property was turned over to him he receipted for the packages according to the amount marked on the outside. It turned out on counting the packages—two witnesses swear to the fact—that one of them was $1,265 short. He made up the amount and paid it sixteen years ago, and now he simply asks that the amount shall be reimbursed to him without interest. He is recommended by General Canby and all the Army officers who have served with him, and the committee thought it perfectly fair to make this allowance. The bill was passed by the House of Representatives during the last session, and I tried to get it up at the close of the session, but did not succeed in the effort. I think there can be no doubt as to the justice of the claim. There was a court of inquiry called the next day after the packages were counted, and the testimony of the two clerks was taken. There is no doubt there was either a miscount in the Treasury Department here or unfaithfulness on the part of the officer who had charge of the funds before they came into Lieutenant McFerran's hands.

Mr. POMEROY. I was about to inquire if there was no remedy against the man from whom he got the money.

Mr. LANE. The man from whom he received the money is now out of the service, and Lieutenant McFerran has no remedy unless we pay the money.

Mr. POMEROY. Do you allow him interest for all this time?

Mr. LANE. No interest at all.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAY OF ARMY OFFICERS, ETC.

Mr. WILSON. I now move to take up Senate bill No. 592.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 592) to provide for a temporary increase of the pay of officers in the Army of the United States, and for other purposes, was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first section provides that for two years from July 1, 1867, all officers of the Army below the rank of major general shall be paid an addition of thirty-three and one third per cent. to their present pay proper; and that the pay of all field and other mounted officers shall hereafter be the same as is now provided by law for cavalry officers of like grades.

The second section provides that section one of the act to increase the pay of soldiers in the United States Army, and for other purposes, approved June 20, 1864, shall be continued in full force and effect for three years from and after the close of the rebellion, as announced by the President of the United States by proclamation dated August 20, 1866.

By the third section, commutation of rations will be allowed in the settlement of the accounts of all enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and Marine corps, who have died while held as prisoners of war, or who, having been prisoners of war, have died subsequent to release; this allowance to be made for the period covered by such imprisonment.

Section four repeals so much of section seven of the act to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States, approved July 28, 1866, as provides for the creation of fifteen bands for brigade or military posts; but the band at the Military Academy is to remain as now established by law.

Section five repeals section one of the act providing for the better organization of the military establishment, approved August 3, 1861, authorizing the President to appoint an Assistant Secretary of War.

Section six amends so much of the act to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States, approved July 28, 1866, as relates to the promotion of assistant surgeons after three years' service, so as to read "and persons who have served as surgeons or assistant surgeons three years in the volunteer force shall be eligible for promotion to the grade of captain."

Section seven authorizes the accounting officers of the Treasury charged with the settlement of the accounts of paymasters and additional paymasters of the Army to place to the credit of the paymasters or additional paymasters all sums and amounts of money paid by them in good faith to any officer, soldier, or employé connected with the military service of the United States during the late war; but no credit or allowance is to be made for any erroneous payments which shall prove to have been made through negligence or carelessness, or in violation of orders or regulations.

Section eight proposes to amend the act more effectually to provide for the national defense by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States, approved May 8, 1792, and the several acts amendatory thereof, by striking out the word "white."

Section nine proposes to amend section twelve of the act to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States, approved July 28, 1866, by striking out the words "or until the Secretary of War shall decide that their services can be dispensed with," and to place the ten judge advocates, whose selection and retention in office is thereby authorized, on the same footing in all respects as other officers of the Army of the United States.

Section ten proposes to authorize the Secretary of War to sell, upon such terms and conditions as he shall prescribe, all the lands and tenements, and the rights and privileges thereto belonging, of the United States at and near Harper's Ferry, West Virginia. In making the sale the Secretary of War is to sell the whole of the lands and tenements, rights and privileges, together, or in parcels, as shall appear to him most expedient; to execute and deliver to the purchaser or purchasers a proper deed or deeds therefor, and to receive and collect the purchase money, which, when received, he shall pay into the Treasury of the United States.

Section eleven makes it the duty of the officers of the Army and Navy, and of the Freedmen's Bureau, to prohibit and prevent whipping or maiming of the person, as a punishment for any crime, misdemeanor, or offense, by any pretended civil authority in any State lately in rebellion, until the civil government of such State shall have been restored, and shall have been recognized by the Congress of the United States.

Sections twelve and thirteen are aimed at peonage in the Territory of New Mexico, or in any other Territory or State of the United States; and are in the same language as the bill on that subject passed during the evening.

Section fourteen directs all militia forces now organized or in service in Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Texas, to be forthwith disbanded and disbanded, and to prohibit the further organization, arming, or calling into service of these militia forces, or any part thereof, under any circumstances, until it shall be authorized by Congress.

Mr. WILSON. I move to strike out sections twelve and thirteen. We have already passed those provisions to-night in a separate bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I move also to strike out sections seven, nine, and ten. Since this bill was prepared bills have come from the House covering the same ground, and we have acted on them this evening.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend the bill by inserting after "general," in line five of section one, the words "including the professors at West Point."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend by inserting between "or" and "who" in line four of section three, the words "the legal representatives of those;" so as to read:

Or the legal representatives of those who having been prisoners of war have died subsequent to release.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I move to add as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That the medical storekeepers of the Army shall hereafter have the rank, pay, and emoluments of captains of infantry; and the post chaplains now in service or hereafter to be appointed shall be commissioned by the President; and all vacancies occurring in the grade of chaplain, which is hereby established to rank next after major, shall be filled by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and all Army chaplains shall hereafter be on the same footing as to tenure of office, retirement, allowances for service, and pensions as now provided by law for other officers of the Army.

This puts the storekeepers of the medical department, of whom there are I believe five, who have vast responsibilities, on the same footing with storekeepers of the commissary and quartermaster's departments.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That section eight of the act to continue in force and to amend an act to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees, and for other purposes, passed July 16, 1866, be amended so as to extend the time for the public sale of certain lands therein specified to the 1st day of January, 1868: Provided, That the farms numbered twelve, thirteen, fourteen, sixteen, seventeen, twenty-three, twenty-five, twenty-eight, and thirty-one may be sold at private sale at not less than five dollars per acre; and until such sales be effected the said farms may be leased as heretofore, either for money or on shares of the crops: And provided further, That the lots running down to the bed of Port Royal river, or immediately facing thereon, shall not be sold for less than $100 per lot.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I would ask the distinguished Senator if he expects to consider this bill to-night and have that passed?

Mr. WILSON. I want to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I supposed this evening was to be devoted to the consideration of matters properly belonging to the Army. If he wants to stop right here, he can offer such amendments as this.

Mr. WILSON. I will withdraw the amendment if the Senator objects to it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Of course we cannot investigate a question of that sort now. I do not understand it.

Mr. WILSON. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. NESMITH. I understood the amendment which was adopted on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to provide that chaplains should rank next after majors. I should like to know what their rank will be.

Mr. WILSON. By the existing law chaplain is made a rank in the volunteer service next after major.

Mr. NESMITH. A captain is next to a major.

Mr. WILSON. This puts Army chaplains on the same footing as the chaplains in the volunteer service.

Mr. NESMITH. Is it intended to create an intervening rank between captain and major?

Mr. WILSON. If the Senator thinks the rank proposed is too high I have no objection to putting it between captain and lieutenant.

Mr. NESMITH. I prefer simply to provide that chaplains shall rank with captains.

Mr. WILSON. Very well, I have no objection. Chaplain is a rank now in the volunteer service by law; but I am willing to take the Senator's amendment.

Mr. NESMITH. I do not think it is necessary to propose any amendment. I think the law now establishes the rank of chaplains with captains. I think the part of the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts which relates to that matter should be struck out.

Mr. WILSON. Very well; let it be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY.) That modification will be made, no objection being interposed.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask the chairman what is the meaning of the second section? From the reading of the section itself, without turning to the statute referred to in it, it is impossible to tell.

Mr. WILSON. During the war we fixed the pay of the soldiers at sixteen dollars per month, but that increase was to continue only till the close of the rebellion. Last summer the President declared peace to exist, and we have been paying the Army sixteen dollars per month from that time to this without law. This proposes to extend that law for three years, beginning back at the period of the proclamation.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That statement is satisfactory to me.

Mr. HARRIS. On the fourth line, first section of the bill, I move to strike out the word "seven" and insert the word "six;" so as to read:

For two years from the 1st day of July, 1866.

In July last Congress passed a bill containing a provision reducing the price of rations from fifty cents to thirty cents. In my judgment (although I concurred in it at the time, for I was upon the committee that reported the bill) it was wrong, and has operated oppressively upon the Army.

Mr. WILSON. Allow me to say to the Senator that we did not reduce the price of the ration last summer. During the war we passed an act, to end at the close of the war, making the commutation price of the ration fifty cents instead of thirty. If we had taken no action it would have expired, and these men would be getting thirty cents instead of fifty. But last summer we extended that provision for one year longer, and it expires on the 28th of next July; so that now a large portion of the officers of the Army—probably eight tenths of them—receive commutation of rations at fifty cents. I will say to the Senator that we intended to help the officers of the Army last year, instead of hurting them; and if we had not adopted any legislation they would not now be getting fifty cents commutation of rations.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Massachusetts may be partially right in his statement, but as I understand it still a large portion of the Army from the time of the passage of that law in July last have received commutation of rations at thirty cents instead of fifty. The effect of this has been very severe on many officers. I suppose there is scarcely a Senator who has not received letters from officers complaining that the amount of their pay was not equal to their expenses. Certainly I have received a great many. It has operated very severely upon the Army—too severely, and I think unjustly. It is proposed by this first section of the bill to give them an additional compensation of one third the amount of their pay proper, which is very small, for two years. I do not propose to increase the amount of the allowance; I only ask that it may be anticipated a little, so that these officers may now be able to pay their debts without waiting until next July before they begin to receive this gratuity that the Military Committee proposes to allow them. I propose that their two years additional pay allowed by the first section of this bill shall begin last July instead of next July. It does not add a cent to the expenses of the Government, but it allows them to anticipate and be able to pay off their debts now instead of waiting and suffering with this incumbrance upon them until this bill begins to operate. I simply ask that it may be commenced last July instead of next July.

Mr. WILSON. I have not the slightest objection to that. The only objection that can be made is that it will require the pay department to open a large number of accounts and involve a great deal of labor.

Mr. HARRIS. That cannot amount to much.

Mr. WILSON. I make no objection to the amendment.

Mr. NESMITH. I concur in the amendment offered by the Senator from New York. I believe this should be done, and I believe it should have been done a year ago. The trouble of adjusting the pay accounts amounts to very little.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Military Committee why in section four it is proposed to repeal the law allowing bands at certain military establishments of the United States. Unless the cost is very large, I should like to see them continued.

Mr. WILSON. I will say to the Senator that the effect of that section will be that, instead of having fifteen bands, we shall have regimental bands that will cost the Government nothing, and will be of great service to the military establishment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is satisfactory.

Mr. WILSON. The provision which is proposed to be repealed was put into the Army bill last year contrary to my wishes and contrary, I think, to the wishes of the Senate; but we could not help ourselves. It was a great mistake, and I want to correct it at the earliest moment. The officers of the Army maintain that a band has a most excellent influence in a regiment or at a post, and it costs the Government nothing to have it.

Mr. NESMITH. If these bands have the excellent influence the Senator from Massachusetts attributes to them, I think the Government ought to pay for them. As I understand it, the officers support the bands.

Mr. WILSON. We simply propose in this section to repeal the present law on this point and leave the matter as it was before that law was passed. Officers of the Army are writing continuously asking that this shall be so.

Mr. NESMITH. Very well, let it go.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to strike out the eleventh section of the bill.

Mr. WILSON. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That section is in a bill now pending before the Committee on the Judiciary; and as the chairman of that committee is not here, I feel it to be my duty to make this motion. That committee has considered that bill somewhat and given a good deal of attention to the proper frame of a bill on that subject. What the committee will finally report of course it is impossible for me to tell.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator will allow me to say that I introduced the bill which was sent to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that committee reported it with amendments. The chairman of that committee has tried two or three times to get it up, but he has not been able to do so, and therefore I proposed to add it to this bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I did not know that it had been reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. I knew that the committee had considered it somewhat.

Mr. WILSON. It has been reported, and I have put it in this bill in their language.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Does the Senator say he has adopted the language of the report of the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. WILSON. I have taken the exact language of the Committee on the Judiciary. I have taken the bill precisely as it was reported by that committee.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I did not know that the Judiciary Committee had really come to a conclusion on the subject; but so far I have not been able to see how we could control punishments under State laws, as this section proposes. Whipping is a most offensive mode of punishment to my sensibilities; but when it is prescribed by State laws as a punishment for offenses against the State laws, I cannot see how Congress can control it, unless it be upon the broad principle that the States are abolished, and therefore it is proper to establish here a system of government for the whole country.

Mr. WILSON. I hope it will be allowed to pass.

Mr. HENDRICKS. As this section does not properly belong to the bill, and it is a subject which ought to be discussed before the Senate, I suggest to the Senator that he had better let it go out of the bill.

Mr. WILSON. I would rather make a sure thing of it, and therefore I put it in this bill; but we may possibly be able to get through the separate bill containing the same provision. I will call that bill up in a few days, and I hope the Senator from Indiana will not make any fight on it. I will accommodate him on this occasion, and, to save time, agree to have the bill amended by striking out that section.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to amend the bill by striking out the eleventh section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The last section of the printed bill raises a very important subject. I have heard no explanation of it at this session from any quarter. I mean the clause which abolishes all militia organizations in the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Texas. I should like to hear some explanation before I feel justified in voting to abolish all local police or militia organization, all discipline for the purpose of preserving order in a large part of the country.

Mr. WILSON. This section of the bill provides that the militia organizations existing in those States shall be disarmed and disbanded, and that no further organizations of this class shall be permitted till those States are represented in Congress. Such organizations have been made in some of the States, and in others they have been prevented by military orders. General Sickles told me the other day that he had prevented the organization, he thought, of fifty regiments in his department. He will not allow one to be organized; and in some of the other departments the military commanders have exercised authority to prevent their organization because they are dangerous. They ought not to exist in these States in their present condition. There ought not to be any organization there hostile to the country; certainly no armed bands of men of this kind. We have evidence of great wrongs perpetrated by them in some of the States. I have testimony of that kind from Mississippi and other States. I know this provision of the bill will tend to peace and harmony. It has nothing to do with ordinary officers, constables, sheriffs, or anything of that kind.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I believe all these States are included within military districts over which commanders are placed who report regularly to the General at the city of Washington. This is a question which relates to military administration in that part of the country, and it is very surprising, indeed, that a law should be introduced upon this subject without a formal application from the War Department.

Mr. WILSON. I will say to the Senator, and I have pleasure in saying, that the head of the War Department would be very glad to see these militia organizations entirely disbanded; they are local State militia, and in nearly all cases are rebels. They do not carry the American flag, and some of them will not; others have worn the gray. They are hostile organizations, officered generally by men who have been in the rebellion. They ought not to exist in the present state of things. We have a military force of our own in that country, and these militia organizations ought not to be allowed there, as a matter of safety to the country, until those States are represented in these Halls.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I make no objection whatever to any measure which may be thought necessary for the public safety, for our safety against renewed revolt, or even against such extensive local disturbances as would affect the interests of this Government within those military districts which are established in the southern portion of the country. What I object to is this general, sweeping, unlimited provision extending all over that portion of the Union, without any application to us, without any official report from the proper Department of the Government upon the subject. This is striking in the dark. The organization of local forces for the preservation of order and for defense is one of those ordinary and common rights and privileges, which ought not to be curtailed, unless some public reason of necessity compels.

From the reply the Senator gives me, I understand that there is no official report, there is no official application to us for a measure of this sort; it must therefore be dictated by some vague impressions that have never taken any definite form; which have no foundation sufficient to attract our respect and confidence. If this is put upon the ground that it belongs to the general mass of legislation dictated by hostility and by distrust, falls within the class of political questions at the present time, I can understand it; but if it be, as it ought to be, when it comes from the Military Committee, when it relates to a question of pure military administration, a business question, and if it be one subject to investigation by us in that point of view alone, all I have to say is that I have heard no sufficient reason for the enactment of any such measure.

Mr. LANE. All necessity, as I understand, for dissolving these local militia organizations in the rebel States is, that we do not believe they are in harmony with Government or with the Union sentiment of the country, or likely to promote the peace of those communities. We have divided those States into military districts. We are sending troops every day there to keep the peace, national troops under national authority, and we do not think in this state of the case it is right to allow local militia to be organized and armed there to thwart the very purpose for which you send your own troops there.

Mr. HENDRICKS. This was a curious bill when it commenced; it was a medley.

Mr. BUCKALEW. An omnibus bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It was more than an omnibus.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator will pardon me for saying that I acknowledge that fact. We massed several measures together because we could not get them through separately. We had not time. Senators about me advised the massing together of several bills in order to facilitate their passage.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is a pretty good way; but omnibuses run slowly. I think you had better leave off this fourteenth section to-night. I want to raise the pay of officers of the Army.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator ought not to object to that section.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is fundamental. The bill commences with increasing the pay of the Army, and closes with repealing a clause of the Constitution. I was going to move to strike out the eighth section; but if the Senator will allow this fourteenth section to go out, I shall waive that.

Mr. GRIMES. I object to bargains as unparliamentary.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am willing that the Senator from Massachusetts should have one odd section to ornament the bill. The eighth section is ornamental and I leave that. I was going to move to strike it out; but this is of some importance, and it should be discussed and ought to be considered fully. When we strike down the militia system of a part of the States I do not for my part know enough about it to vote upon it, even if I thought there was no constitutional trouble in the way. If the Senator from Massachusetts wants to raise the pay of the Army he had better do it, and got put everything on this bill.

Mr. WILSON. I will say to the Senator that I have the same provision which is contained in this fourteenth section in a bill by itself, and at the earliest moment I shall press that bill, and I will take out this particular provision rather than have a division at this particular moment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Very well.

Mr. WILSON. Now, I hope the Senator will not interfere further. I want to have an amendment made in the first section. After the word "pay" in the seventh line, I move to insert the words "and emoluments;" so as to make the clause read:

The pay and emoluments of field and other mounted officers shall hereafter be the same as is now provided by law for cavalry officers of like grade.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. As the Senator from Massachusetts agrees to let the fourteenth section go out, I move to amend the bill by striking it out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee why July is fixed for the time of the first section of the act taking effect.

Mr. WILSON. It is now fixed at July last on the motion of the Senator from New York.

Mr. BUCKALEW. But why is the month of July fixed instead of the time when the bill is passed?

Mr. WILSON. That is the beginning of the fiscal year.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I supposed that was the reason.

PUBLIC PARK.

Mr. BROWN. It was agreed last evening, when to-night was assigned for business of the Military Committee, that I should have a little time to call up the Senate bill No. 549. I move now to take up that bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 549) for the establishment and maintenance of a public park in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BROWN. The original bill need not be read. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds reported an amendment, striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting a substitute.

The Secretary read the words proposed to be inserted, as follows:

That a tract of land, in the District of Columbia, along and adjacent to Rock creek, embraced within the limits and designations of the survey made by Brigadier General N. Michler, under the order of the Secretary of War, in pursuance of Senate resolution of July 18, 1866, and conforming in its boundaries as near as may be deemed expedient by the commission hereinafter established to the projected boundary lines of the park designated in said survey, (which survey and plat, approved by the Committees on Public Buildings of the Senate and House of Representatives, and so indorsed, is hereby directed to be deposited in the custody of the Secretary of the Interior,) shall be purchased by the United States for the purposes of a public park, free to all persons under such regulations as to police and government as may by proper authority be established.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That for the purpose of effecting such purchase of the ground inclosed within the designated survey, a commission is hereby constituted consisting of Brevet Major General M. C. Meigs, Brigadier General N. Michler, and ———, whose duty it shall be to negotiate with the owners and receive written proposals for the sale to the United States of their respective tracts of land, or of so many of such tracts or such parts of the same as said commissioners find can be had upon reasonable terms, and as they may deem necessary or desirable for the purposes of a public park.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That said commissioners, any two of whom shall be competent to act, shall make report to the next Congress, as soon as practicable after its commencement, of their action in carrying out the provisions of this act, setting forth in detail all the agreements for purchase entered into by them, the boundaries and estimated value of all tracts that may be necessary to condemn in consequence of the failure to come to any agreements, and what portions, if any, may be omitted from such survey for a park without detracting materially from its advantages.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That all agreements and negotiations herein provided for or authorized on the part of said commissioners, in the name and behalf of the United States, shall be made subject to the approval of Congress, and shall in no wise bind the United States unless so approved.

Mr. BROWN. I move to amend the amendment by filling the blank in the second section, fifth line, with the name of "Brevet Major General H. G. Wright."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, the bill which I have just called up is one to establish a public park in the vicinity of Washington city. It is reported from the committee as a substitute for a similar bill offered by myself at an early stage of the session, and differs from that chiefly in the modes designated for acquiring ownership of the designated grounds. The locality is the same, the general area contemplated the same, and the purpose of procuring and ornamenting such a public place of resort at the expense of the United States and not of the corporations of this District is the same.

It will be remembered, Mr. President, that at the last session of Congress, when this matter was first mooted, objection was taken to the lack of definite information on which to proceed in making selection of grounds; and to obviate that difficulty as far as possible a resolution was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which I have the honor to be chairman, instructing them to have surveys made of various eligible sites around the city of Washington adapted to the purposes of a public park. In pursuance of that resolution of the Senate an application was made to the Secretary of War which secured a detail of Engineer officers, who during the recess of Congress proceeded to make the surveys desired. I hold in my hand an elaborate map containing the result of those surveys, accompanied by an admirable report from the officer in charge of the work, which report has been printed and laid on our tables. I have before me also a minor plat illustrative of the surveys, which it may be well for Senators to scrutinize. It was found, on making these examinations, that there was but one location in the neighborhood of this city eminently adapted to the purposes of a public park. I suppose all members of the Senate are familiar enough with the environs of the city to know the beautiful and romantic valleys of Rock creek. The character of the ground around and adjacent to that stream is exactly suited to the purposes we desire. It has running water; it has rugged hills; it has picturesque scenery; it has abundance of varied forest timber; it has a native undergrowth blushing with beauty. It has the tangled vine and the clustering wild-flower, and the quiet mosses gray with age, and indeed a thousand imprints of native adornment that no hand of art could ever equal in its most imitative mood. Moreover, with so much of attractiveness in its present uncultured state, it has likewise every capacity for adornment and development, and can be made with less expense than almost any spot of equal area I have ever seen within reach of a great city one of the most beautiful resorts in the world. The amount of ground which was surveyed embraced twenty-seven hundred acres. It will not be necessary, however, to take in all of that ground in order to secure what is desired for the purposes of a park in the shape of drives, alcoves, recesses, and places capable of adornment. Fortunately the amount to be embraced is almost entirely optional, as the situation is such that large omissions may be made without abating much the extent of the drives or the beautiful diversity of views.

The committee, after having made a very careful examination of the plans and surveys submitted by Brigadier General Michler—and by the way, I must be permitted here to compliment him in the highest terms for the zeal he has manifested in this work and the admirable manner of its execution—the committee, I say, finding that the number of owners was so great as to preclude any joint offer for sale to the United States, thought it best to establish a commission authorized to negotiate in behalf of the Government, and subjecting their action to the approval of the next Congress. It was believed that if we were to order a condemnation of the ground there might be improper combinations to secure a verdict, and the interest of the Government might be sacrificed in the premises. It was believed, furthermore, that if an opportunity was had for conferring authoritatively with those who owned the ground, and if it was known that the purchase would depend in a great measure upon the reasonable character of the offers that were presented, there would be an opportunity of getting what was needed at a fairer price, and probably of making a better selection of that which was desired than by any other mode.

For this reason the committee have reported a bill which simply provides a commission, and that commission embraces the officers who have had charge so far of the surveys, together with General Meigs, who is placed at the head of it, and authorizes them to confer with the owners of the property to see what terms can be had, what grounds may be held by minor heirs or others that it will be necessary to condemn, and to find what portions may be left out and still not impair the desirability of the grounds for the purposes of a public park, and report the whole of their investigations and all their propositions at as early a day as may be found practicable.

I do not think there is anything in the bill that can be objected to, if it is desirable to enter upon the work of securing for the city of Washington a public park. I think it is of such a character that will probably conduce more to the security of the Government than any other which can be drawn. As to the necessity and the desirability of initiating such a proposition and obtaining the necessary location now while ground can be had on reasonable terms I do not think there is much room for question. The ground in the vicinity of this must soon become immensely valuable, now that the uncertainty with which sectional discord and disunion so long threatened the stability of the capital has passed away. At the present time Rock creek and its adjacent heights has few residences upon it, and those of comparatively trifling value, and the whole area surveyed can be had, as is estimated by General Michler in the report he has submitted, at an average price of perhaps less than $200 an acre. This would make a total cost of less than half a million dollars, a mere trifle of expenditure for "a thing of beauty" which will prove "a joy forever."

Mr. President, I had intended, when presenting this subject to the consideration of the Senate, to have remarked somewhat freely upon the influence such surroundings are calculated to exert upon those who come hither from all parts of this great nation to bend their minds to the dismal science of law-making and of government. Those who, for any length of time, have undergone the wear and tear of such life as this, who have all their energies run to brain, and all their souls fused into politics, need not be told that anything which holds out hope of either mental or passion relief is seized upon with avidity. How necessary, then, that all the ennobling influences of nature—the scenic splendor of shifting views, the life and animation of gay concourse, the uprisen majesty of the forest, the intoxicating gladness of spring flowers, the laugh of the heavens through playing branches, the shimmer of the waters, the song of birds, graceful forms, inspirations—should be so abundantly grouped around this nation's capital. There is no expenditure that can be made which shall add to the grandeur or adornment of the public buildings that fill so largely the eye of admiration of the world, or of the vast libraries that are accumulating so rapidly the treasures of all languages within your reach, or of the conservatories and gardens and cabinets that minister to your tastes, that will not freely be sanctioned by the people; for such in itself is the establishment of a nation's university, whither all may come to wonder and to learn, and in which all may feel a rightful patriotic pride. Only let it be worthy. Let your doing be on a scale commensurate with the pride to which you minister and the people you are sent hither to represent. And it is in the same spirit that I would have you, Senators, inaugurate a public park that shall have no rival anywhere for beauty or extent or ornamentation, as it will have none for the illustrious character gathered from a whole continent in the after time to wisely rule our Republic from this center of its power.

Mr. President, the experience of foreign nations has been worth much on this subject of the extent of their places of public resort, and I do not think it would be wise in us altogether to disregard it. There it has been found that size was an invaluable feature, and even in the present continued effort is being made to enlarge those now in existence. The latest data I have been able to lay my hands upon gives the dimensions of the more celebrated European parks as follows: Hyde Park, 380 acres; Regent's Park, 372 acres; Windsor Little Park, 300 acres; Windsor Great Park, 3,500 acres; Richmond Park, 2,250 acres; Phoenix Park, at Dublin, 2,000 acres; Garden of Versailles, 3,000 acres; Bois de Boulogne, 2,158 acres; Englische Garten, at Munich, 500 acres; and the Prater, at Vienna, 1,500 acres. The Central Park, in New York city, contains 840 acres, and authority has just been granted for the laying out a park at Chicago of 2,000 acres. It will thus be made to appear that the amount of territory embraced in the present survey, 2,700 acres, does not exceed many of the more famous of those I have cited. And yet what would be thought of the proposition to reduce the area of either Windsor Park or Phoenix Park or the Garden at Versailles? It would be simply set down, sir, as a barbarism. Let us, then, profit by the accumulated experience of so many metropolitan cities and so many great nations, and secure, while we may, here at the city of Washington ample scope for a national park worthy of our people and our country.

But I perceive it is unnecessary to prolong any speech in behalf of what the Senate is evidently so willing to concur in voting. I will close, therefore, with expressing the hope that no delays attendant upon the close of the session may cause this measure to fail in the other branch of Congress, and that, if it shall become a law, the commission organized under it will not be too contracted in their views as to the extent of ground that should be embraced in this national park.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I want to ask one question. I think it is provided that this report shall be made at the next session of Congress. That means the session beginning on the 4th of March?

Mr. BROWN. Probably at some time during that session the report can be made.

Mr. BUCKALEW. It would be better to provide that the report should be made to the next Congress.

Mr. BROWN. If gentlemen will look at the third section they will see that it now says, "shall make report to the next Congress."

Mr. BUCKALEW. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. GRIMES. I have not had an opportunity to read this bill; but I desire to inquire of the Senator from Missouri if there is anything in it that commits the Congress of the United States to accept the selection that may be made by these commissioners, or that commits us to any appropriations in the future?

Mr. BROWN. Nothing. It expressly reserves all that.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I have but a word to say about the passage of this bill. In answer to a question put by my colleague it was stated that the bill does not now provide for any expenditure of money; it is but to ascertain how much this project will cost, and have a report made to the next Congress. It seems to me that if it be the opinion of the Senate that the project ought not to be entered upon, it is as well to stop it now as then.

The Senator from Missouri tells us that the proposition is to take some twenty-seven hundred acres of land that he thinks can be had at $200 an acre. That will amount to something over half a million dollars. We know very well how much below the actual cost of lands that the Government proposes to buy are the estimates that are made beforehand of what they will cost. If we double the estimate I think we shall come much nearer the truth. I think these lands will not cost us much less than a million dollars to begin with, and God knows how many millions it will cost to improve them. It seems to me the Senate might just as well consider now as at any other time the question whether or not the Government is in a condition to embark in a project of this kind; whether, when we are being taxed as heavily as we are, when the ingenuity of our Secretary of the Treasury and of our Financial Committees is taxed to the utmost to devise ways and means to raise money to pay what we must pay, it is best to go any further in this direction.

The Senator from Missouri and myself will ask the Senate before it adjourns to make an appropriation to improve the rapids of the Mississippi river, on which we both live. We may have difficulty with the present condition of the Treasury in getting a sufficient appropriation for that purpose. Certainly the difficulty will be increased if we take a step now that will involve the expenditure of as much money as it will take to improve the rapids of the Mississippi river, because this park will cost the Government more money than will make that river navigable for large boats from St. Paul to its mouth. If we embark in this enterprise, if we commence to purchase these twenty-seven hundred acres of land, and begin expending money by the hundred thousand every year to improve them, it will involve us in double the expenditure that will make our great river navigable. I do not think it is best to go any further in this direction at this time. Let us wait till the country is in a more flourishing condition before we do it. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOWARD. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Missouri whether the bill on which we are about to act requires an appropriation of any money?

Mr. BROWN. No, sir; it does not.

Mr. HOWARD. Or does it contemplate in the end a costly park, costing millions?

Mr. BROWN. It will be for the next Congress to pass upon how much it will cost, or whether they will take it at all or not.

Mr. RAMSEY. I suggest to the honorable Senator from Missouri that he let the bill be passed over informally to-night. There is hardly a quorum present, and there is some other business we can do to which there is no objection.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move that this bill be informally passed over, so that it shall be the business in order to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is not in order to make a motion to lay a bill aside informally. It can be laid aside by unanimous consent, not by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until to-morrow at one o'clock.

Mr. BROWN. I agree to that motion, with the understanding that a vote shall be had on the bill at that time. ["Yes."]

The motion was agreed to.

DYER B. PETTIJOHN.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, the joint resolution (S. R. No. 175) for the relief of Dyer B. Pettijohn was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It is a direction to the Secretary of War to cause to be paid to Dyer B. Pettijohn the full pay and emoluments of a second lieutenant of infantry, of the second regiment of sharpshooters, Minnesota volunteers, from the 30th day of May, 1863, to the 20th day of May, 1865, deducting therefrom any amount he may have received as an enlisted man during the time specified.

Mr. RAMSEY. I propose to amend this resolution by striking out in the fifth line "second regiment" and inserting "first company." This man, Dyer B. Pettijohn, was a private soldier in the first company of Minnesota sharpshooters, and then a sergeant; and was in the front upon the Potomac through several years; and he received a promotion from the rank of sergeant to that of second lieutenant; but when his commission was received he was not in a position to get to a mustering officer, and before he could do so he was taken prisoner, carried to the military prisons of the South, and detained there through several years; and when he returned it was impossible to muster him in as second lieutenant, the company in the mean time having fallen below the minimum. He was a brave and good soldier, who deserved well of his country. This resolution for his relief, which has been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, provides for giving him the pay of a second lieutenant from the time when he should have been mustered in.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; was read the third time, and passed.

STEPHEN E. JONES.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 261) for the relief of Stephen E. Jones, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It is a direction to the Paymaster General to pay to Stephen E. Jones the full pay and allowances of a first lieutenant of cavalry for the period during which he actually served as aide-camp on the staff of General Nelson and General George H. Thomas, prior to his muster into the United States service.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading; read the third time, and passed.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

Mr. POLAND. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 563) supplementary to the several acts of Congress abolishing imprisonment for debt. It will not take long.

Mr. CONNESS. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business. That will leave the bill of the Senator from Vermont as the unfinished business.

Mr. POLAND. I hope we shall not proceed to the consideration of executive business when the Senate is so very thin. We can pass several bills, in relation to which there is no controversy.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is a bill to which nobody can object.

Mr. CONNESS. A Senator near me [Mr. HOWARD] says it will be debated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California.

A division being called for, there were—twelve yeas.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is evident that we shall not transact any more business to-night. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CONNESS. If the Senator from Indiana will withdraw his motion I propose to withdraw mine by unanimous consent and let the Senator from Vermont have his bill disposed of.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion made by the Senator from California can be withdrawn by unanimous consent, the yeas and nays having been ordered. The Chair hears no objection, and the motion is withdrawn.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that the Senate adjourn. Let us see whether we are in a condition to transact business; I am not willing to transact business unless there is a constitutional quorum present. I move that the Senate adjourn, and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and being taken, resulted—yeas 9, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Foster, Grimes, Hendricks, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—9.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Conness, Cresswell, Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fowler, Harris, Howard, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Saulsbury, and Sumner—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Cowan, Cragin, Davis, Doolittle, Fogg, Frelinghuysen, Guthrie, Henderson, Howe, Johnson, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Patterson, Riddle, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Trumbull, and Yates—24.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The motion of Mr. POLAND was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 563) supplementary to the several acts of Congress abolishing imprisonment for debt, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that whenever, upon mesne process or execution issuing out of any of the courts of the United States, any defendant therein is arrested or imprisoned, he shall be entitled to discharge from such arrest or imprisonment in the same manner as if he were so arrested or imprisoned on like process of the State courts in the same district; and the same oath may be taken, and the same length of notice thereof shall be required, as is provided by the State laws; and that all modifications, conditions, and restrictions upon imprisonment for debt now existing or which may hereafter be adopted by the laws of any State, shall be applicable to process issuing out of the courts of the United States therein, and the same course of proceedings shall be adopted as now are or hereafter may be in the courts of such States. But all such proceedings shall be had before some one of the commissioners appointed by the United States circuit court to take bail and affidavits.

The Committee on the Judiciary proposed to amend the bill by striking out in line twelve the words "or which may hereafter be adopted," and in line fifteen "hereafter."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I can state in a word the necessity for this legislation. Many years ago Congress passed a law providing that in States where imprisonment for debt had been abolished, or in States where it should thereafter be abolished, it should be abolished also in reference to process out of the courts of the United States. Under this law it was decided by Judge Curtis in the circuit court in Massachusetts that, in States where imprisonment for debt had not been entirely abolished, had only been modified, so that by filing an affidavit of a certain character a debtor might still be imprisoned, the law of Congress did not apply; and that in Massachusetts, although imprisonment for debt generally had been abolished, as it was allowed in a modified form of filing an affidavit the law did not apply. This bill is intended merely to make the law conform to the laws of the States where imprisonment for debt is only allowed in a qualified form, as well as to those where it is entirely abolished. We have struck out the word "hereafter" because we thought it was not in the power of Congress to adopt future legislation of the States.

Mr. HOWARD. I wish to inquire of the honorable Senator from Vermont whether the bill is mandatory in its character and terms upon the court, and whether it establishes positively the rules that prevail in the various States in reference to imprisonment for debt, or whether it is left discretionary with the Federal courts in any or in all cases?

Mr. POLAND. It adopts the laws of the States upon that subject.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the Secretary be good enough to read the bill as it stands?

The SECRETARY.

That whenever upon mesne process or execution issuing out of any of the courts of the United States, any defendant therein is arrested or imprisoned, he shall be entitled to discharge from such arrest or imprisonment in the same manner as if he were so arrested or imprisoned on like process of the State courts in the same district, &c.

Mr. HOWARD. So that the proceedings under this bill will vary in the Federal courts in each State as the State legislation varies on the subject of imprisonment for debt. Is that it?

Mr. POLAND. We adopt the present legislation of the States on that subject.

Mr. HOWARD. And all future legislation?

Mr. POLAND. No, sir. We struck out the word "hereafter," because we thought it was not in the power of Congress to adopt future legislation of the States. We adopt all the laws of the States now in force concerning imprisonment for debt, and apply them to process in the United States courts. What the States may do hereafter we do not provide for.

Mr. HOWARD. That was the very point to which I wished to call the attention of the Senate. I gathered from the reading of the bill that it was the purpose of the committee to have the rule vary in the Federal courts in the various States according to the provisions of the State laws, which I should think an anomaly.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CONNESS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at ten o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 26, 1867.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ALLEGED CORRUPTION OF MEMBERS.

Mr. WENTWORTH, from the special Committee on the rumored arrangement of Members with the President, under the order of the House of yesterday, submitted the following report:

The committee were in session when the resolutions instructing them to report to-day were adopted, and so no member had an opportunity to explain at that time the progress the committee had made.

The organization of the committee was delayed in consequence of one of the original appointees having been excused. But since their organization they have been as diligent in the prosecution of their duties as their interest in the questions pending before the House would permit. They have had frequent meetings during the session of the House. Indeed, they have examined witnesses as fast as the short-hand reporter could write out the testimony.

With a large number of slips from newspapers before them, purporting to come from reporters in this city, the committee called several of such reporters before them with reference to the authority for their statements touching the matter referred to them by the House. Although those reports were as widely variant as reports sent from the capital generally are, yet they all, when traced back, derived their origin substantially as follows:

Persons not members of Congress, after the southern delegations (so called) had paid their recent visit to this city, had been free in intimations that Congress and the President were about to become reconciled. The reporters from their gallery noticed two of those persons occupying the most friendly relations to the President, while the recent reconstruction bills were pending, sitting at times inside the bar of the House when they were not thus entitled. They saw them at other times call several members into the cloak-room and other places hold private conversations with them. This attracted their curiosity to such an extent that they resolved to ascertain what it meant; and they learned that a private meeting was being called to hear a proposition from certain friends of the President, which was likely to eventuate in restoring former friendly relations between him and the majority of Congress; and, based on this fact, conjecture sent out various reports touching the reconstruction not only of the President, but also of his Cabinet, the suppression of the impeachment, and the appointment of members of this House, hitherto hostile to the President, to office. The two persons heretofore alluded to were called before the committee. One of them testified that he had seen the President as often as three times per week during the session in consequence of his position as reporter; and that his relations were of the most friendly nature. His visits were principally in the evening. The other testified to his own friendly and intimate relations with the President and to his cooperation with the person before alluded to. They had come upon the floor of the House and arranged for a private meeting at the Metropolitan Club-Room. They wanted and considered they had found from sixty to seventy conservative members who could through concert of action numerically control the organization of the party opposed to the President.

They invited no Democrats to attend the meeting, and no Radical, as they construed party divisions. The meeting was held, but many invited did not attend, and those in attendance were unwilling to act unless they were assured that the persons calling the meeting were speaking by the authority of the President. This they could not then do, and the meeting adjourned with the understanding that they should see the President, and if he approved of their conduct, certain members of Congress were to call upon him and report at a future meeting to be called for the purpose of hearing their report. These persons called upon the President and reported that he expressed a willingness to confer with such gentlemen as might see fit to call upon him. Members of Congress then called upon him and a meeting was called at another place to hear their report. This meeting was on the evening prior to the introduction of the resolution authorizing the creation of this committee. That report was that the parties who had represented the President as desirous of findings some common ground which he and Congress might occupy on the subject of reconstruction were more than justified by his position as communicated to them. The precipitation of events in Congress prevented other meetings. Members attended each of the meetings who did not attend the other: members invited to each attended neither. Such is substantially the testimony of the two persons who claim that they originated this movement. They declined to give names, and the committee did not insist upon it, because they could be recalled should further developments render it necessary. The committee had proceeded no further when called upon to report; and as the witnesses have had no opportunity to revise their testimony since written out by the short-hand reporter, and as there are some portions of it that ought to be suppressed, if the examination is to go no further, the committee have deemed it prudent not to bring the testimony before the House. Indeed, some of it is not yet written out.

Up to this time the committee have not been able to obtain the least knowledge of the reported propositions for reconciliation to be discussed between the President and members of Congress attending the meeting, nor have they reliable expectations of obtaining such knowledge from other witnesses, as it appears that only the disposition of the parties to reconciliation was ascertained at the last meeting; and that was but the Friday evening before the last measure for reconstruction was so unanimously supported by the opponents of the President's policy in the House.

No testimony has been given reflecting in the least upon the integrity of the President; nor has there been the least testimony reflecting upon the integrity of any member of this House. The harmonious vote of the majority upon the last reconstruction bill, compared with their earliest vote upon matters of difference with the President, show no inroads upon their ranks; while the fact that no member of the Democratic minority was invited to these private meetings by the professed friends of the President outside of Congress is a testimonial to their firmness of purpose and principle. Regretting their inability to make a more elaborate report in the short space of time allotted them, and feeling confident that whatever were originally the arrangements for bringing the House to more harmonious action with the President they are now effectually interrupted, the committee ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

JOHN WENTWORTH, Chairman.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Under the rule of the House I have been instructed to make this report. But I am reminded by gentlemen on all sides that after the reading of this report their interest in the subject ceases, and that they have measures to bring before Congress to-day which demand immediate attention. I therefore will forego any remarks of my own. If, however, my colleague on the committee [Mr. GLOSSBRENNER] on the Democratic side wishes to address the House I will yield the floor for five minutes to him.

Mr. GLOSSBRENNER. The House will perceive, Mr. Speaker, by the authorized statement just made by the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the committee, that the committee has utterly failed to discover a single fact to bear out the preamble to the resolution under which the investigation was instituted. As a member of the committee, there can be no impropriety after what has passed, in my saying that we have examined patiently and thoroughly every witness who professes to have any positive knowledge of the origin and progress of the so-called "negotiations" between the President and certain members of Congress, and I aver that the result of that examination is, that the conduct of all concerned in the consultations and conferences, characterized in the preamble to the resolution under which we acted, as "corrupt bargaining," has not been proven to have been in the slightest degree corrupt or culpable, or open even to the suspicion of criminality; but, on the contrary, all the developments exhibit earnest and honorable efforts on their part to effect a patriotic purpose; and their conduct so far from being reprehensible, is worthy of all imitation.

The preamble to the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois is thus phrased:

Whereas the President of the United States has been impeached by a member of this House of high crimes and misdemeanors; and the Committee on the Judiciary has been instructed to examine into such high crimes and misdemeanors, with power to send for persons and papers, and to report to this House the result of such investigation; and whereas while the said Committee on the Judiciary are examining witnesses with relation to such high crimes and misdemeanors of which the President is charged, with a view of making a report for the action of the House, it has for some time been rumored, and it has been lately asserted in the public newspapers, that certain members of this House, who will be required to act impartially upon such report, are holding private meetings with a view to corruptly bargaining in violation of their oaths, and are pledging themselves in advance to act adversely upon said report if it should be unfavorable to the President, and also to act adversely to certain other measures now before this House, provided the President agrees to do certain things to which he has heretofore been opposed, and to refrain from doing certain things which he was in favor of doing.

Perhaps it may be thought, Mr. Speaker, that the committee owe some sort of apology to the House for having "toiled all night," and caught—nothing. [Laughter.] Perhaps the public expectation, after such "thundering in the index," would have been better met if the committee could have unfolded so horrible a tale of corruption and official perjury as would have made each particular hair on every patriotic head to stand on end. [Laughter.] Certainly, after so grand a flourish of trumpets as that with which lance was seized and poised for a magnificent charge against all who should dare to compromise the honor and purity and dignity of this House, (of all of which we are habitually very jealous, Mr. Speaker,) it is rather unsatisfactory to find that none of the parties so fearfully menaced have been doing any of the wicked things of which Madame Rumor had prejudged them guilty. But in sheer justice to the committee, Mr. Speaker, I must be permitted to say that for the paucity of trophies in this campaign against "corruption" the committee are by no means responsible. They spared no pains to find ugly facts, if ugly facts there should chance to be. The witnesses were given abundant opportunities for divulging all that might go to criminate either the President or "certain members of this House." They were searchingly cross-examined and wearied by iteration and reiteration of questions; but they could not be brought up to the mark of seeing or suspecting any other than honorable motive or patriotic object in those whose proceedings they detailed. With the formidable preamble before their eyes they could tell us nothing of "corrupt bargains" or "violations of oaths;" and in answer to direct inquiries propounded by myself they testified that the subject of "impeachment of the President" was not discussed or mentioned "in any shape or form" at any time by those who were in conference and consultation with the sole view and hope of devising some plan upon which Congress and the President could agree for the restoration of the Union. They were pressed sorely upon all these points, but they contumaciously failed to make their testimony conform to the indictment. The witnesses were all gentlemen of intelligence, and some of them I know to be gentlemen of high character; but they were, unfortunately for the "facts" in the preamble, dreadfully destitute of imagination and sadly deficient in the faculty of invention. [Laughter.] I think, Mr. Speaker, that with a different style of witnesses we could have succeeded better, and made things pleasant generally. There is a gentleman now in this city, the guest of a Government official, who, if the House shall determine to proceed with this investigation, might be summoned by the committee. He is a modest gentleman, and lately of very retiring habits; but I believe that if his host could be induced for a short time to forego the pleasure of his society he would gladly come out on this occasion, and prove anything desired against members of this House or the President. His name I will give you confidentially—it is Sanford Conover. [Laughter.] He would be found facile and "conformable."

Now, Mr. Speaker, as the committee charged with this investigation have examined the parties by whom the late interviews between the President and Congress were originated and brought about, and have failed to discover aught in the inception or progress of those conferences inconsistent with the purest impulses and most honorable and patriotic objects, I hope the resolution reported by the chairman will be adopted, and that the House will discharge the committee from the further consideration of the subject.

The question was taken on the motion to discharge the select committee from the further consideration of the subject; and it was agreed to.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. [Laughter.]

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. NIBLACK. Is it competent for the House to make any further disposition of the subject?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The motion to reconsider has been laid on the table.

PICTURE FOR THE CAPITOL.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following joint resolution:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the joint Committee on the Library be, and they are hereby, directed to enter into a contract with Thomas P. Rossiter, of the State of New York, to paint a picture for the United States, to be placed at the head of one of the grand staircases in the Capitol, illustrative of the signing of the Constitution: Provided, That the entire expense of said picture shall not exceed $25,000; and $2,000 shall be paid to said Thomas P. Rossiter in advance, to enable him to prepare for the work; the remainder of said installments at intervals of not less than one year, the last installment to be retained until the picture is completed and put up.

Several members objected.

ALLEGED CORRUPTION OF MEMBERS—AGAIN.

Mr. HILL. I rise to a question of privilege. The resolution that was introduced yesterday requested the chairman of the select Committee on the alleged Corruption of Members to furnish to this House a statement of the rumors and copies of the newspaper paragraphs upon which the original resolution which was introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WENTWORTH] was based. I ask whether the gentleman now desires to furnish these statements and paragraphs from the newspapers?

The SPEAKER. The point of order comes too late; it should have been made when the report was submitted.

Mr. HILL. I tried to get attention of the Chair, but did not succeed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman could have interrupted any member on the floor for that purpose.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. CULLOM asked and obtained indefinite leave of absence for his colleague, Mr. INGERSOLL, who was detained from the House by sickness.

PAYMENT OF DISLOYAL CLAIMANTS.

Mr. DELANO. I ask unanimous consent to take up from the Speaker's table House joint resolution No. 222, prohibiting the payment by any officers of the Government to any person not known to have been opposed to the rebellion and in favor of its suppression, for the purpose of acting upon the Senate amendments.

No objection was made, and the bill was accordingly taken from the Speaker's table.

The second amendment of the Senate was reported, to add at the end of the resolution the following proviso:

Provided, That this resolution shall not be construed to prohibit the payment of claims founded upon contracts made by any Department where such claims were assigned or contracted to be assigned prior to April 1, 1861, to creditors of said contractors, loyal citizens of loyal States, in payment of debts incurred prior to March 1, 1861.

Mr. DELANO. The Committee of Claims recommend concurrence in this amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The first amendment of the Senate was reported as follows:

Strike out all after "rebellion" in line seven to the end of line nine and insert in lieu thereof the words "or in favor of any person who does not prove to the satisfaction of the proper accounting officer that he was opposed to the rebellion and distinctly in favor of its suppression."

Mr. DELANO. The committee recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. DELANO. I move a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to and a committee on conference was accordingly appointed; and Messrs. DELANO, ALLEY, and THORNTON were appointed conferees on the part of the House.

INCREASED COMPENSATION OF CLERKS.

Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back the amendments of the Senate to House joint resolution No. 224, giving additional compensation to certain employes in the civil service at Washington, with amendments thereto.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the House now proceed to the consideration of the report of the committee.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I object.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to suspend the rules, in order that the report may be considered now.

The question was taken upon Mr. GARFIELD's motion, and there were—ayes 86, noes 16.

So (two thirds voting in the affirmative) the rules were suspended, and the House proceeded to the consideration of the amendments.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now demand the previous question upon the adoption of the amendments recommended in the report of the committee.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The Clerk read the first amendment, as follows:

On page 1, line four, after the word "service" insert the words "of the United States," so that it will read, "employed in the civil service of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the second amendment, as follows:

At the end of line eight add the words, "in the Executive Mansion and;" so that it will read "male and female in the Executive Mansion, and in any of the following-named Departments," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the third amendment, as follows:

On page 2, line one, after the word "meters" insert the words "and to lamp-lighters under the Commissioner of Public Buildings."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the fourth amendment, as follows:

Strike out lines twenty-two, twenty-three, and twenty-four, as follows:

And after the passage of this resolution no money shall be paid to any officer, clerk, or employe of the Treasury Department, except such as may be fixed by law.

Mr. SLOAN. I desire to know why the committee recommend the striking out of that provision. It is calculated to prevent abuses in paying out this money.

Mr. GARFIELD. As the bill stood it would make it impossible to pay any persons employed in the Department by the day or week. The committee recommend that that provision be stricken out, so as not to exclude those persons from the benefits of the bill; and as in the first paragraph of the same section the Secretary is prohibited from paying out any money hereafter merely upon his own discretion, the gentleman's point is entirely covered.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether laborers in the navy-yard are included in the resolution.

Mr. GARFIELD. The committee have examined that matter very fully. The wages of laborers in the navy-yard, on the Capitol extension, and on the Treasury extension, are readjusted every two months, according to law, to prices for the same kind of work outside; so that their pay has been raised every two months during the war in proportion to the increase in the prices of labor all over the country during the same time.

I submit a table showing the laws under which their wages are regulated, and the prices paid since 1860:

Wages of Employes in the Navy-Yards.

An act approved July 16, 1862, (volume twelve, page 587,) declares that "The hours of labor and the rate of wages of the employes in the navy-yards shall conform, as nearly as is consistent with the public interest, with those of private establishments in the immediate vicinity of the respective yards, to be determined by the commandants of the navy-yards, subject to the approval and revision of the Secretary of the Navy."

In conformity with this law, it has been the practice for the commandants of the yards to appoint, every two months, a board of officers to visit and ascertain from the private establishments the wages paid to the mechanics, &c., in such establishments. Upon their report the wages in the yard were fixed to conform to those outside. In this way the wages of the mechanics have increased gradually from the date of the passage of the law, until, in some instances, they have become one hundred per cent. higher than they were before the war. The accompanying table exhibits this fact, and shows the rates paid in the Washington navy-yard in the years 1860, 1861, 1862, 1863, 1864, 1865, and 1866.

While the cost of living and all necessities of life has increased since the passage of the law, the pay of workmen has been increased in proportion. Not so with the salaried officer.

If the pay of a carpenter should go up as high as eight dollars a day outside of the yard, the carpenter in the yard would be entitled to and would receive the same. The law protects him. Salaried officers were not thus protected and benefited.

The mechanic in the yard at all times receives as much as the mechanic in the private establishment.

Act of July 23, 1866, (pamphlet edition,) increased pay of clerks of navy-yards twenty-five per cent.

By act of July 13, 1866, No. 111, second provision, and by decision of the Fourth Auditor, no tax is deducted from the wages of workmen in the yard.—(Pamphlet edition, page 140, near the top.)

The foregoing is a correct statement of the average wages paid to hired men at the Washington Arsenal during the period stated. The regulations of the Ordnance Department require commanding officers of arsenals to pay to their employees the same wages that similar services command at private establishments in the vicinity.

J. P. KELLER,
Chief Clerk Ordnance Office.

February 25, 1867.

Now, it should be remembered that the persons whose pay is increased by this resolution are receiving salaries fixed by law years ago, and they have suffered the increased burdens in the prices of all the necessities of life with no corresponding change in their pay. I hope no one will propose to increase the amount of expenditure provided in this resolution.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to ask whether this increase—

Mr. THAYER. I object to debate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the votes by which the several amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to suspend the rules, so as to postpone the morning hour until after the fortification bill has been disposed of.

The question was taken; and (two thirds voting in favor thereof) Mr. STEVENS's motion was agreed to.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended, and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DONNELLY in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 1184, making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868.

The CHAIRMAN stated that when the committee last rose the following clause, beginning at line five, on page 3, was under consideration:

For survey of the northern and northwestern lakes, $155,000.

Mr. PAINE. I wish to know how it happens that that item comes up for consideration again this morning?

The CHAIRMAN. This is the clause that was under consideration when the committee last rose.

Mr. PAINE. I do not propose to debate it, but I rise to a point of order. I do not know that I understand exactly the nature of these proceedings, but in reference to this appropriation for the survey of the northern and northwestern lakes I do know that it was considered at the last session of the committee, that tellers were ordered upon it, and that it was passed by the House; so that I do not see how it can again come up at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is in order.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of line fifty-two:

To enable the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States to fire a grand salute of one hundred guns in honor of the victory of Georgetown, $1,000, and more if necessary. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. This section of the bill was under discussion, and an amendment was pending at the time the committee rose. The amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENJAMIN] is not in order.

Mr. NIBLACK. I would ask the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BENJAMIN,] if he intends to be witty or only sarcastic? We do not understand on this side of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is in order.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend by inserting after line fifty-two, the following:

For Fort Montgomery, at the outlet of Lake Champlain, $25,000.

I think this amendment will receive the assent of the Committee on Appropriations, and I trust it will be adopted. This point is the most important point on our northern frontier. The route by way of the Hudson river and Lake Champlain through the eastern section of the State of New York is known to every gentleman as having been the great highway of all contests between the power in possession of the Canadas and the power in possession of this country from the time of the earliest Indian wars down to the last Fenian raid. And this fort is deemed by the War Department as one of great importance. The appropriation I ask for is a very small one, and I certainly hope my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. ROSS. I have no doubt that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE] is as proper as many of the other items in the bill. And I suppose about the same kind of an estimate has been made for this appropriation as for the others.

I notice that there are in the bill some sixteen items of appropriations for repairs of forts at the rate of $50,000 each. Now, it seems to me that it would be only proper for the Committee on Appropriations to present the estimates of some person who has examined this subject, so as to show what is the difficulty with these forts. It should be shown whether the foundations are giving way, whether the roofs are falling in, or the floors are decaying, so that we may be able to determine with accuracy what amount of appropriations are necessary to put the improvements upon these forts which they need.

Mr. HALE. Will the gentleman allow me a word of explanation of the point which he is now discussing?

Mr. ROSS. Not at present. It appears to me that we are acting entirely in the dark, and that we need light upon the subject. There should be an estimate by an architect, or some competent person, showing what repairs upon these forts are necessary, so that we may act advisedly and with some degree of intelligence upon this subject.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] attempted last night to be a little sarcastical upon this subject because we proposed to strike out these appropriations. For one, I am not disposed to run longer in this old rut in which we have been running so long, appropriating hundreds of thousands and even millions of dollars every year to keep up these forts. Although we have been making these appropriations annually for the last fifty years, not one of these forts has ever been fired at during that time except by ourselves; and we have lost thousands of men at least by reason of having these fortifications upon our coasts. And you may go on for fifty years longer making appropriations and taxing the resources of the country for the purpose of keeping up these forts; and I will venture the prediction that there will not be a gun fired at them during all that time.

Now, I want to get out of this old rut; there is no necessity whatever for our continuing in it longer. I think the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] mistakes the views of his own constituency upon this subject. They certainly have no desire to continue this squandering of money upon the sea-board. If I am not mistaken in the antecedents of my young and able friend from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] who by his intelligence and the cogeny of his logic always commands the indulgence and attention of the House, it has been but very recently that he has been ruthlessly torn from the breast of his New England mother; and he has hardly cut loose from the apron-strings of New England. The time has come when the great Northwest should make her voice heard in regard to these extraordinary expenditures upon the sea-coast. And I trust that my distinguished young friend, after he has breathed the pure air of the West a few years longer, will imbibe the true sentiments of that section of the country which he is so capable of representing efficiently and faithfully upon this floor.

Now, Mr. Chairman, for my part, I desire that we shall cease all these unnecessary expenditures. Why should we persist in them? These appropriations have been of no benefit to us in the past, and there is no reasonable prospect that they will be in the future. Our people are already heavily burdened with extraordinary taxation; and we may at length put the last feather upon the camel's back and break it. It is time that we should cease these unnecessary expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted upon the pending amendment.

Mr. KASSON. I move pro forma to amend the amendment by striking out $25,000 and inserting $24,000. I wish to reply to my excellent and venerable friend from Illinois [Mr. ROSS] by referring him to the title of this bill, by which he will find that these appropriations are not for the purpose of making repairs alone, but "for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense." In some cases it is necessary, in order even to preserve these fortifications in proper condition, to go on with the work of construction to a certain point, just as in constructing a house, as the gentleman knows, it is frequently necessary, in order to preserve unfinished walls, that they shall be carried to a certain point where they can be protected by roofing or some other means known to architecture. Thus in the case of these forts, it is necessary to go on with the construction to a certain point in connection with the casemates and other portions of them, in order to protect them from deterioration and destruction.

The point which I made against my friend last evening was that he was positively ignorant of these details, as I also admit myself to be; but I do what he does not; I take information from those who know the facts; and I submit that in this respect my logic is better than that of my friend from Illinois.

A single word now as to the statement of the gentleman that within the last fifty years no shots have been fired at any of these fortifications except by "our own men." I want my friend distinctly to confine the signification of that "our" to himself and the men who politically agree with him. I must expressly disavow the idea that the rebel shots fired at these fortifications were fired by "our own men." Let the gentleman take to himself and his friends all the credit that may be due for the firing of those rebel shots, if he chooses to identify those who fired them with those in whose ranks he serves. It is enough for me that those whom I call "our men," captured after enormous struggles these very forts from those whom the gentleman styles "our own men," and that the possession of those forts by the the latter prolonged, I may say for at least three years, the life of the rebellion.

So in the case of a foreign war, these fortifications at the mouths of our rivers and harbors protect our cities and the whole interior country from ravage and destruction until our military forces can be concentrated to resist any army that may be landed.

Now, sir, I am requested by the chairman of the committee to move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Before the gentleman submits that motion I desire to call his attention to a single fact. The bill as now reported by the committee embraces no fortifications for the lakes, but is confined to sea-coast fortifications. If we open the door by the adoption of the pending amendment, how can we resist the insertion of all the lake fortifications?

Mr. KASSON. In answer to that remark, I will say that I know something of this particular fort, having seen it. I know that it is incomplete, and that it commands an entrance of foreign armies to this country—one that has been used when we have had war with Great Britain. In the time of the Revolution it was by means of this entrance that the British brought large armies to bear against the American forces; and through the same entrance the British, in the war of 1812, brought their forces upon Lake Champlain. I know this to be an important defensive position.

Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from California. [Mr. BIDWELL.]

Mr. BIDWELL. I do not profess to be informed as to the necessity for these appropriations upon the Atlantic sea-board; but so far as regards the Pacific coast I can state with confidence, from own knowledge, that it would be bad policy not to complete the fortifications at the harbor of San Francisco. There you have a harbor two miles in width with a fortification upon one side only, though the fogs are so dense at times that you cannot see one hundred yards from the shore.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I rise to a question of order. California fortifications are not under consideration, but fortifications upon the lakes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must confine himself to the amendment.

Mr. BIDWELL. I am speaking of the necessity of completing the fortifications already begun and of making others where none now exist. The title of the bill is, "A bill making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868." I say it is necessary and reasonable something should be appropriated for that very purpose upon the Pacific coast. It seems to be the intention of Congress almost to abnegate the right to govern the Pacific coast. The harbor of San Francisco is perhaps the most important in the country, and upon its security depends—

Mr. SCOFIELD. I rise to a point of order, that the gentleman must confine himself to the pending amendment.

Mr. KASSON. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. BIDWELL. The trade of the East Indies as every one knows is gravitating to our western shores.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I rise to a point of order. The pending amendment is for an appropriation for one of the lake fortifications and has nothing to do with the Pacific coast.

Mr. BIDWELL. The amendment of the gentleman from Iowa has been withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman from California is in order, as he is arguing the amendment of the gentleman from New York should not be adopted, but that one should be made for the Pacific coast.

Mr. SCOFIELD. When the gentleman was last interrupted he was on the East Indies.

Mr. BIDWELL. I will move an amendment to save myself from further interruption.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope the gentleman will yield to me to move the committee rise to close this debate.

Mr. BIDWELL. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. STEVENS moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DONNELLY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill, No. 1184, making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. STEVENS moved that all further debate on the bill be closed within five minutes after its consideration shall have been resumed.

The motion was agreed to.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. STEVENS moved that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

So the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DONNELLY in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 1184, making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate by order of the House has been closed in five minutes.

Mr. HALE. My amendment is pending, and I wish to say a single word in response to the objection taken by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSS] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOFIELD.] It is objected that it is a lake appropriation. In my judgment it stands upon a different footing from any other lake appropriation. This fort is at the outlet of Lake Champlain, immediately contiguous to the Canada line, on the forty-fifth parallel, and covers the whole entrance to the line of Lake Champlain and the Hudson river. It is from its very position more important than any other single point on our whole northern frontier.

The gentleman from Illinois inquires how these estimates have been made up. I am happy to inform him the estimates were forwarded from the Bureau of Engineers. The estimates were for $60,000, which were reduced by the Committee on Appropriations to $40,000 in their former bill, and at the suggestion of the chairman I have further reduced the appropriation to $25,000, which is the lowest possible amount they can get along with.

Mr. ALLEY. Has it the sanction of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. HALE. It has.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 14; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. HALE and Mr. SCOFIELD.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 73, noes 12.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase of sites now occupied and lands proposed to be occupied for permanent sea-coast defenses: Provided, That no such purchase shall be made except upon the approval of its expediency by the Secretary of War and of the validity of the title by the Attorney General, $50,000.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I move to strike out the clause just read.

Mr. STEVENS. There are sites which were occupied during the war, one I remember upon the Delaware, for which the Government was not able to pay, there being no appropriation for the purpose.

Mr. SCOFIELD. That on the Delaware is a dirt fortification and a nuisance to everybody there. There ought to be an appropriation to remove it altogether instead of making it permanent.

Mr. STEVENS. That is not the opinion of the Department.

Mr. SCOFIELD. It is the opinion of the people in the neighborhood. We never needed it before the war and there is no need of it now.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. MAYNARD. I beg to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this is merely a private matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been closed by order of the House.

The question being put on the amendment of Mr. SCOFIELD, no quorum voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. SCOFIELD and KASSON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes twenty-one, noes not counted.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase of sites now occupied by temporary sea-coast defenses: Provided, That no such purchase shall be made except upon the approval of its expediency by the Secretary of War and of the validity of the title by the Attorney General, $25,000.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I make the same motion in regard to this paragraph. It is of the same kind—to purchase new sites.

Mr. ROSS. I desire to move first to perfect the section by inserting after the words "Secretary of War" the words "Secretary of the Navy."

Mr. HALE. I suggest to my friend from Illinois that he had better put in "colonel of the horse marines." [Laughter.]

Mr. ROSS. Yes, or my friend from New York either. [Laughter.]

The amendment was disagreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. SCOFIELD, to strike out the paragraph; and it was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For construction and repair of barracks and quarters for the engineer at the depot of engineer supplies at Willett's Point, New York, $25,000.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I move to amend by striking out that paragraph. There is no necessity for it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the concluding paragraph.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Chairman, the Committee of the Whole decided yesterday to strike out the enacting clause, but it was reinserted by the House. I now renew the motion to strike out the enacting words of the bill.

Mr. HALE. I rise to a question of order: this motion has been negatived in the House, and is therefore not in order now.

The CHAIRMAN. The decision of the House was at a different stage, and the Chair thinks the motion is now in order.

The question being put, there were—ayes 45, noes 46; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MAYNARD and RAYMOND were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 67, noes 58.

So the enacting words were stricken out.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I move that the committee now rise and report the bill to the House with the action of the committee thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DONNELLY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1184, making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, and had directed him to report the same to the House with the enacting words stricken out.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 1166) to authorize the building of light-houses therein mentioned, and for other purposes; and

An act (H. R. No. 1154) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law, and for other purposes.

Also, without amendment, an act (H. R. No. 1062), relative to the port of Camden, New Jersey.

Also, Senate bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 609) allowing the duties on foreign merchandise imported into the port of Albany to be secured and paid at that place;

An act (S. No. 622) to repeal the provisions of law authorizing the introduction of foreign goods into the United States without inspection at the usual ports of entry; and

An act (S. No. 557) for the relief of James Fulton, paymaster United States Navy.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1184) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, the same having been reported to the House from the Committee of the Whole with the enacting words stricken out.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move the previous question on agreeing to the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole to strike out the enacting words.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. KASSON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 72, nays 79, not voting 39; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ames, Ancona, Arnell, Baker, Baldwin, Beaman, Benjamin, Bingham, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Campbell, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Delano, Deming, Eldridge, Farquhar, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Thomas, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Wentworth, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Windom—39.

So the House refused to strike out the enacting words of the bill, and the bill stood recommitted to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order, the fortification bill.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I rise to a point of order. I ask if the rule does not prevail here of "three times and out?" [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it does not.

Mr. STEVENS's motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DONNELLY in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 1184, making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer the following as an additional section to the bill:

Be it further enacted, That the sum of $300,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended, so far as required, by the Secretary of War, for the preservation and repair or maintenance of fortifications or other works of defense within the jurisdiction of the United States.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. LE BLOND. I offer the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That there shall not be over fifty per cent. of the foregoing appropriations expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, and the residue thereof shall not be expended till otherwise ordered.

Mr. MAYNARD.

"Times have been, That, when the brains were out, the man would die."

That does not seem to apply to this committee. I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. LE BLOND. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. LE BLOND. I think debate is in order. We have been out of the committee into the House, and no additional order closing debate has been made.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been closed on the bill and pending amendments.

The question was put; and there were—ayes 53, noes 40.

Mr. STEVENS demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. LE BLOND and DARLING were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 64, noes 53.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. I offer the following amendment:

Amend by inserting after line seventy-one, "$250,000 for completing the fortifications at Fort Stevens, at the mouth of the Columbia river, Washington Territory."

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the action of the committee thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DONNELLY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, according to order, had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the bill of the House No. 1184, making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. STEVENS. I call the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The first amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole was to strike out the following:

For construction of permanent platforms for modern cannon of large caliber in existing fortifications of important harbors, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert the following:

For Fort Montgomery, at the outlet of Lake Champlain, $25,000.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 51, noes 32; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HALE and Mr. HARDING, of Illinois, were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes sixty-four, noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following:

For construction and repair of barracks and quarters for engineer at the depot of engineer supplies at Willett's Point, New York, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The last amendment was to add the following section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That there shall not be over fifty per cent. of the foregoing appropriations expended during the fiscal year ending 30th of June, 1868; and the residue thereof shall not be expended until otherwise ordered.

Mr. LE BLOND. I call for the yeas and nays upon agreeing to this amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 86, nays 59, not voting 45; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Ancona, Anderson, Arnell, Baker, Baldwin, Beaman, Benjamin, Bingham, Boyer, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Campbell, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Cullom, Davis, Dawson, Defrees, Delano, Deming, Dodge, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Loan, Longyear, Marshall, Maynard, McCullough, Mercier, Moulton, Noell, Orth, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jones, Kelso, Latham, Leftwich, Marston, McClurg, Miller, Morrill, Newell, Phelps, Plants, John H. Rice, Rousseau, Shellabarger, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, John L. Thomas, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Wentworth, James F. Wilson, and Winfield—45.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The question was upon ordering the bill, as amended, to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to lay the bill upon the table; and upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was upon ordering the yeas and nays; and being taken, there were—ayes eight—een, noes not counted.

Mr. LYNCH. I call for tellers upon ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, and Mr. JENCKES were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes twenty-nine, noes not counted.

So (the affirmative being one fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken upon the motion to lay the bill upon the table; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 63, nays 84, not voting 43; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ames, Ancona, Baker, Baldwin, Beaman, Benjamin, Bingham, Boyer, Brandegee, Broomall, Broomall, Buckland, Campbell, Reader W. NAYS—Messrs. Washburn, Windom, Winfield, and Woodbridge,—84.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Blow, Cullom, Culver, Deftrees, Denison, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Hart, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jones, Kerr, Latham, Marston, McClurg, McKee, Miller, Newell, Orth, Plants, Price, Rogers, Rousseau, Stilwell, Nathaniel G. Taylor, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Robert T. Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Elisha B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, and Wright,—43.

So the motion to lay the bill on the table was not agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being on the passage of the bill, Mr. KASSON called for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

On the passage of the bill, there were—ayes 72, noes 35.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolutions and a bill of the House of the following titles:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 271) authorizing the Secretary of War to adjust and settle the claim of D. Randolph Martin, assignee of the Washington, Georgetown, and Alexandria Railroad Company;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 290) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to grant the use of guns for the trial of Rigdway's battery; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1051) for the relief of Henry P. Blanchard.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BANDEGEE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has now commenced.

Mr. MORRILL. I understand that we cannot reach the tariff bill until the expiration of the morning hour without a suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. MORRILL. I move, then, that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the tariff bill.

The motion was not agreed to.

NEW SITE FOR A NAVAL ACADEMY.

The SPEAKER. The House resumes, as the first business in order during the morning hour, the consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 299) concerning the Naval Academy at Annapolis, the pending question being upon the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK.]

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask that the joint resolution and the substitute be reported.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Be it resolved, &c. That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint a board of not less than three competent officers, whose duty it shall be to examine into all the facts connected with the location of the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland, with a view to the expediency of removing the same to a locality more advantageous to the Government of the United States; and also to make careful examination and survey of the harbor of New London, Connecticut, and of Newport, Rhode Island, with a view to the advantages presented by each for the location of said Naval Academy, and to report all the facts to the Fortieth Congress, together with such recommendation in the premises as they shall deem will best promote the public interest.

The Clerk also read Mr. SCHENCK's substitute, as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of this House be authorized and directed to appoint a committee, consisting of three members, whose duty it shall be to make careful examination at New London, Connecticut, and Newport, Rhode Island, with a view to the advantages presented by each of said sites for the permanent location of the United States Naval Academy, and with a view to the removal of that institution from Annapolis. That the said committee have power to send for persons and papers, and to call upon the Secretary of the Navy for the detail of any one or more officers of the Navy to assist in the investigation, and for such information as the files of his Department may afford; and that the said committee report all the facts, with their conclusions, to the House of Representatives of the Fortieth Congress, together with such recommendations in the premises as may best subserve the public interests.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio, that he may modify his amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. When this matter was last under consideration I had the floor at the expiration of the morning hour, but I do not know that I have anything to add to the remarks with which I then submitted the amendment. I was, however, at that time, expressing my disposition to modify this substitute so as to make it a little wider in its scope than it is now, because it indicates but two places where examinations are to be made, New London, Connecticut, and Newport, Rhode Island. I have been of opinion that perhaps there ought to be named some place on the North river, and some place in the neighborhood of Navesink, New Jersey. I leave it to gentlemen representing those parts of the country to say whether the resolution ought to have a wider scope given to it by indicating those points. Perhaps, however, some gentlemen may think that without the indication of particular points there ought to be some general provision authorizing the committee to examine any site which they may deem it advisable to look at. Before accepting any suggestion for a modification of the substitute in that respect I shall make another myself.

The original resolution provides for the survey of the harbors of the different points named. That is entirely unnecessary, as better surveys have already been made of all the points which could come within the province of this committee or commission than could be made under their direction, and these are the surveys of the Coast Survey. I add to my resolution the authority to call upon the Secretary of the Navy for information from his Department and for detail of officers, authority also to call upon the Superintendent of the Coast Survey for any information needed.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask leave to make a suggestion. I hope the gentleman will also modify his resolution by adding, "or any other site which in their judgment it may be advisable to examine."

Mr. SCHENCK. I do not want to make it too much of a roving commission, but perhaps the gentleman's modification had better be accepted, and I accept it.

Mr. ROLLINS. I want the harbor of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, also included.

Mr. SCHENCK. Wiscasset, in Maine, is also suggested, but the language of the gentleman from New York will include them all, which I have accepted as a modification.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. Speaker, I am admonished by the tremendous pressure of business crowded into the closing hours of the session, if I expect to get a vote on the joint resolution I have been instructed to report from the Committee on Naval Affairs, action must be taken within less than an hour; but as I deem it due to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. F. THOMAS,] and especially to my colleague on the committee, [Mr. PHELPS,] to give them an opportunity to express the views and feelings of their constituents, I will, after the previous question has been called, yield to them half of the hour to which I shall be entitled. I would prefer my colleague on the committee [Mr. PHELPS] would take half of my time and dispose of it as he pleases. I shall occupy only ten minutes, and devote the residue of the hour to taking a vote. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Connecticut whether this resolution is not reported to the House without a particle of proof to sustain a single charge made in the original resolution referred to them? Is there a particle of proof express or implied?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will yield thirty minutes of my time to the other side, reserving only ten to myself.

Mr. SCHENCK. I understand the proposition reported from the committee is a joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. SCHENCK. Then I further modify my substitute, making it a joint resolution and providing the committee shall be constituted of two members of the Senate and three members of this House, to be appointed by the Speaker of this House and the President of the Senate respectively.

Mr. F. THOMAS. I hope the previous question will not be seconded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 34; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers, and appointed Mr. BRANDEGEE and Mr. PHELPS.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 40.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered to be now put.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will yield thirty minutes of my time to my colleague on the committee, [Mr. PHELPS,] to dispose of as he pleases.

Mr. PHELPS. I will take fifteen minutes myself.

Mr. Speaker, in rising to oppose this proposition, which I can but characterize in advance as a most extraordinary one, I feel I am expressing the united voice of the entire population of Maryland without distinction of party, and I may add in the current phraseology of the day without distinction of race or sex. Why, sir, are gentlemen aware this movement comes into the House of Representatives absolutely destitute of any foundation in the shape of any evidence to sustain the charges in the resolution of inquiry referred to the committee? Are gentlemen aware the very proposition before the House at this moment is one against which this Congress is committed by a vote at the last session, after the subject had been brought in the most solemn manner before the Naval Committees of the two Houses, after it had been debated in both Houses, and after the visit of the two committees to Annapolis to investigate for themselves the allegations preferred against it as the proper location for the Naval Academy.

It has been said, sir, that the Naval Academy was originally established at Annapolis not in pursuance of any express legislation for that purpose. It was established there in the first instance by virtue of an arrangement between Mr. Marcy, Secretary of War, and George Bancroft, Secretary of the Navy, with the concurrence of the President of the United States, and sanctioned repeatedly by Congress, transferring Fort Severn, on Severn river, from the War Department to the Navy, for the purpose of affording a place for the proper instruction and education of midshipmen.

The action of the Department, as I said, has been recognized repeatedly by every Congress that has met since that day, with the exception of those to which I shall refer, by renewed appropriations of money for the support of the "Naval Academy at Annapolis." There has not been a Congress since its establishment at Annapolis, in 1845, which has not recognized and sanctioned its existence there, with the exception of the three or four years during which the Academy was removed to Newport, in order to secure a temporary location at a safer distance from the theater of civil war. That removal was made in 1861, and from that time until its return to Annapolis, in the month of May, 1865, there was one continuous series of protests and remonstrances on the part of the officers, professors, and superintendents in charge of this institution against the propriety of its continued location at that place.

Sir, these matters have all been gone into before. This is no longer an open question; it is res adjudicata both by the Thirty-Eighth and Thirty-Ninth Congresses. After an elaborate and exhaustive discussion in the Thirty-Eighth Congress, both in the Senate and House, upon the necessity of the immediate removal of that institution from the demoralizing influences with which it was connected in the town of Newport, arising from the fact of its being a fashionable watering-place and at the same time a manufacturing town, the evidence was overwhelming and conclusive upon the point that owing to these circumstances that place was altogether improper and unsuitable for the location of an institution contemplating the education of young men for the naval service.

I have here before me these testimonials. I have here a report of Admiral Davis, the head of the Bureau of Navigation and in charge of the Naval Academy, going over this matter in a most elaborate and detailed manner, examining it in all its bearings, and showing that in every point of view, in point of accommodation, health, climate, discipline, economy of living, and every other aspect in which the case could possibly be presented, there was no advantage in favor of its then existing location, but that its former site at Annapolis was better than Newport or any other place that could be named.

Why, sir, are gentlemen aware of the amount of money the Government has expended in the improvement of the locality at Annapolis and fitting it for the purpose for which it was designed? Are gentlemen aware that over one million dollars have been invested in land and permanent buildings, in dormitories, libraries, recitation-halls, lecture-rooms, chapel, engine-houses, and all the other appurtenances connected with that institution? Only at the last session of Congress the subject was reinvestigated, and after every charge that could be made had been presented and urged persistently and pertinaciously, after an actual personal inspection upon the spot by the Naval Committees of both Houses, assisted by nearly one hundred Senators and members, the result of the whole business was that the objections of the Secretary of the Navy and others were overruled by an additional appropriation of $100,000 to enlarge the area of the establishment. And in virtue of that appropriation the State of Maryland has ceded at a mere nominal sum the buildings and grounds that have from time immemorial been occupied as the Executive Mansion, for the better accommodation of that institution; the transfer has been made, and this Government now owns the property which is within the inclosure of the Academy grounds.

In point of health how does the present location compare with others? Are gentlemen aware that the records show that in point of health Annapolis stands above Newport as four to one; that during the whole period of the location of the Naval Academy at that place previous to its removal but two deaths occurred, while during the short period of its temporary sojourn at Newport epidemics prevailed among the young men at the sacrifice of health and of life?

In point of discipline it may be said that there is not a professor connected with the Academy, not an officer of the Navy who has been educated there, who does not know that a large manufacturing town like Newport, accompanied as it is with all the allurements and temptations of a fashionable watering-place, is altogether unsuited for the purpose of such an institution, while all of them agree in recommending Annapolis for the almost perfect isolation and seclusion that there secures the midshipmen from interruption and from distracting influences of every kind.

It is admitted that in point of climate Annapolis is unrivaled. Situated on the Chesapeake, it has one month more of spring and another of fall in which instruction in seamanship and naval gunnery can be given upon the open waters of the bay than can be afforded by any waters on Long Island sound or the Hudson river.

In point of economy how does the matter stand? Why, sir, complaints have come up to us from almost every officer of the Navy of the inadequacy of their present pay for their comfortable subsistence, and yet it is proposed to remove the Naval Academy, which contains a large corps of professors and instructors and a number of young men living upon small means, from a quiet country village, noted for the abundance and cheapness of its supplies, to a sea-side resort where the cost of living is made extravagant by the millions of money squandered there by the devotees of fashion, who pass their summers at its elegant villas.

I refer the House in addition to the report of Admiral Davis, to which I have already referred, to the report of the visitors to the Naval Academy in 1862. That board was composed of Commodores Stribling, Sands, Glynn, Hudson, Wilkes, and Harwood, and that board was of opinion, by the voice of every one of its members except one, and he only qualified his opinion, that of all the places that have been named Annapolis was the only one suited, in their judgment, for the purposes of the institution.

I refer the House also to the recorded opinion of Commodore Blake, who was Superintendent of the Naval Academy during the time it was at Newport, urging upon the Department and upon Congress its immediate removal to its former location.

I refer the House also to the recorded opinion of Captain Rodgers, a Newport man, connected with that place by family associations, and therefore an impartial witness, certainly, so far as any prejudice against either place might be concerned. Captain Rodgers is, of all the officers to whom I have referred, the most explicit and positive in his condemnation of Newport as a proper site for the location of the Naval Academy. As for the present Superintendent, I am assured that I might safely venture to rest the case upon the opinion of Admiral Porter alone.

Sir, this proposition has no merit. There has been no site proposed. there can be no site proposed, which is not, so far as regards Annapolis, infinitely below comparison. There must be some other pretext. I find another reason assigned why this is not a proper and suitable locality for this purpose. And, sir, what is this last refuge of disappointment? Why, sir, since we have been invited to go into this general game of grab, a temptation is offered to every man in this House who comes from districts bordering on the sea, on navigable rivers, or even on inland lakes, to put in the claim of his locality in competition with that of Annapolis.

Upon what ground is this resolution based? Why, sir, upon the ground, not distinctly charged but made by innuendo, that the State of Maryland is not a loyal State, and therefore that this institution shall be taken from within her limits. "Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike," the resolution upon which this movement was started does not in distinct terms contain the imputation, but insidiously suggests language large enough in scope to allow gentlemen to draw that inference, should the exigencies of the case require that inference to be drawn.

Now, sir, it is too late in the day for gentlemen to come in here and say that Maryland is not a loyal State. Fifty thousand of her sons upon the muster-roll of the Union Army are the answer to the libel; $30,000,000 thrown into the breach, with eighty-seven thousand of her slaves as a voluntary sacrifice to the Union at the time it was imperiled, are the answer to the libel. The first State to advance her quota of the war tax, she was the third to ratify the constitutional amendment abolishing slavery.

Sir, it is too late for any man to come before an intelligent body of gentlemen, no matter how strong their party feelings may be, no matter to what length their party prejudices might be supposed powerful to carry them, and deliberately ask the removal of this national institution, which is not called for by any consideration of propriety, and which is not warranted by any considerations of economy, or by any other consideration that can be named, on the ground that a State with such a record as that is not a loyal State.

Sir, if the results of elections from time to time are to have this effect upon works requiring stability for their success, upon great public institutions demanding permanence for their utility, then to what a pass have we come in this country. You must put the Military Academy at West Point, the Naval Academy, the United States Mint, and every other public institution which you have, upon wheels and move them from State to State whenever the result of an election within the limits of any particular State where the institution may be located may be objectionable to the dominant majority in Congress. You must make your permanent institutions migratory, which, like wandering tribes, are to be removed from place to place as the fluctuations of political parties from time to time may indicate to the dominant party that such action may be necessary to accomplish a temporary purpose.

But I do not propose to enlarge upon this subject, as I am restricted by the arrangement entered into in reference to time. I have promised to yield three minutes of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. McKEE,] and the remainder of my time to my colleague, [Mr. F. THOMAS.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has twelve minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. McKEE. I will yield my time to the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. F. THOMAS,] and not occupy any time myself.

Mr. F. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I confess that to me nothing can be more annoying than that a Representative of the people should be obliged to another Representative for the privilege of free speech in a Hall like this. But I must acquiesce in the uniform practice which prevails here, and proceed to say a few words upon this subject.

Can it be seriously proposed to waste

$1,000,000 which have been expended in the location of this School at Annapolis, as well as $100,000 appropriated at the last session of Congress; and to utterly disregard the reports of well-qualified men, scientific officers, better qualified to judge than any in the House who are partaking immediately in this discussion? Are all these considerations to be overlooked because a few mischievous politicians are now cutting fantastic tricks before high heaven in a little temporary domination in the government of Maryland? Why should we not as well now undertake to send forth another peripatetic committee to ramble all over the country to inquire whether the Brooklyn navy-yard shall not be removed because the dominant political sentiment in the precincts of the city of New York is not in exact accord with what may be deemed loyalty?

Mr. Speaker, I am under no sort of apprehension in regard to this question. I cannot anticipate that the Congress of the United States will adopt this resolution. I might have had some apprehension had the subject been acted upon when it was first introduced. But when gentlemen have had time to reflect I have no fears at all about the result. And although I speak thus earnestly in remonstrance against this resolution, let me take occasion to say that my constituents have no personal interest whatever in this question. My constituents live in a remote part of Maryland, and have but infrequent intercourse with the city of Annapolis. But there is a class of men in the city of Annapolis who are deeply interested, and a population there in whose behalf I would say a few words to every considerate and reflecting man in this House.

It being supposed, after the whole country had been thoroughly examined by competent boards of engineers, scientific men, and they had decided that this naval school should be located at Annapolis, that the question was finally settled so far as Congress would settle it, hundreds of persons went there, and have expended their own humble earnings in the purchase of lots and the erection thereon of homes for their families; and all that they have is at stake in this result. The population of Annapolis has increased considerably among that class of men, every one of whom is as faithful to the Government of the United States as I am or as is the gentleman [Mr. SCHENCK] who introduced, unnecessarily in my humble judgment, this disturbing question into the Congress of the United States at this late hour of this session. They alone are interested in this question: the people who have congregated there to minister to the wants of the officers of this institution and the wants of those humbler individuals who are participating in the administration of its affairs. Will Congress consent to waste the $1,000,000 already expended there, and, in direct opposition to the deliberate advice and admonitions of men competent to judge, disturb and reopen this question?

Besides, sir, if we contemplate such a proceeding, is it respectful to our immediate successors, the next Congress, that the examining committee who are to influence their action by a report on this subject shall be appointed by the present Congress at the very close of its session? Why should we not allow our successors the privilege of selecting from their own body the committee who shall make this scrutiny and report under their responsibility as members of the body that is finally to dispose of this subject? Hurried as I am, I have nothing more to say than simply to conclude as I began, by declaring that I do not believe this question is going to be seriously entertained by either branch of Congress.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I now yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. JENCKES] for five minutes, or ten if he desires.

Mr. JENCKES. The proposition of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK,] which is submitted as a substitute for the resolution reported by the committee, amounts, as I understand it, to this: it proposes to institute an investigation with a view to ascertaining the best possible site in this country for the location of the Naval Academy. It is not in the interest of New London or Newport or any other particular locality as against Annapolis. It indicates no preference of any site in any part of the country, but throws the location open to competition, so that every port conceiving itself to have the requisites for such a site may present its claims before this joint committee.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is the fairest proposition upon this subject that has ever been made to Congress. There is no law fixing the location of this Academy at Annapolis. It was located there originally, as the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PHELPS] has said, by a bargain between the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy. It has been kept there, not as a permanent site, but as an experimental site. It was removed to Newport from necessity. It has been brought back to Annapolis as a matter of favor. But there is no report such as this resolution calls for definitely recommending Annapolis as the best place for the permanent location of this Academy.

It is sufficient for me in what I have to say to call the attention of the House to the report of the Secretary of the Navy advising the removal of the Academy from Annapolis. It matters not to me how many officers have given their opinion that Annapolis is a favorable site, or what disagreements there may have been between boards of officers appointed by the Secretary of the Navy or others hitherto. The chief of that Department has placed upon record his opinion, based, we must presume, upon an examination of all the evidence submitted to him, that Annapolis is not a fit place at which to retain this institution.

Mr. PHELPS. Will the gentleman from Rhode Island allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JENCKES. Certainly.

Mr. PHELPS. I simply wish to ask the gentleman whether he is not aware that since the report of the Secretary of the Navy to which he refers, the objection urged by him that the accommodations were insufficient for the students has been removed by an enlargement of the grounds?

Mr. JENCKES. It has been partially; but that was but one objection. The report was based also upon other grounds.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the resolution reported by the committee does not meet the whole case. It provides for the appointment of a commission by the Secretary of the Navy. We cannot tell under what influences that board of commissioners may be appointed; we cannot tell by what suggestions that board may be guided to their conclusions; we cannot tell with what degree of fairness they may conduct their investigation. Besides, the investigation may be delayed by the Secretary of the Navy, or he may, if he chooses, in the exercise of the discretion with which the resolution proposes to clothe him, select a board whose members, as he knows, will report in favor of this or that particular site, a favorite with him.

It seems to me the mode proposed in the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio is the practicable one by which information should be sought by Congress before acting on a subject so important as this. It is to give the Naval Academy a location as fixed and definite as West Point is for the Military Academy. In order that this should be done there is no better mode than by obtaining information through committees of Congress. The members of those committees are responsible to the body appointing them. They are also responsible directly to the people. They are bound to conduct the investigation fairly. If any suggestion be made of unfairness in either House, instructions may be passed by which they shall be guided. This committee cannot perform its duties in a week or a month, or perhaps six months, if it does justice to the claimants in all parts of the country. And when it is clothed with power to have officers of the Navy and Coast Survey detailed for its information, we may be sure it will not be guided by any local or particular interest nor controlled by any clique of officers, or subjected to such manipulations as if appointed from the Army or Navy alone. It will pursue its investigation truly and fairly and report its judgment accordingly, as the evidence will dictate to Congress.

In the remarks of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. PHELPS,] who just spoke, it seemed he drew a comparison between Newport and Annapolis. It is not denied Newport is a contestant for this prize, if it be a prize, but it does not seek to shrink from any investigation. All Newport asks is fair, open competition. Let it be examined, its merits be acknowledged, and its demerits brought up against it. Let it have a fair trial before an impartial committee, and its merits placed before the House and the country. It is not afraid of competition. If it is not the best site for the permanent location of the Naval Academy, then let it go to the site that is found to be best for the purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield now five minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHANLER.]

Mr. CHANLER. Mr. Speaker, I have no opposition to Annapolis as a site for the Naval Academy, but I would suggest this traveling committee or commission in their tour along the Atlantic coast be also authorized to visit and examine the eastern extremity of the island called Long Island, so as to have a site entirely under the control of the Government, as the Military Academy is at West Point, by securing what is known as Gardiner's Island. It is a spot, sir, far removed from all the temptations so eloquently pointed out by the gentleman from Maryland, and also removed from the influences referred to in the memorial of the corporation of the city of Annapolis, which was laid upon the desk of each member. If Annapolis be really such a community, and it is not misrepresented in this memorial, as to degrade itself to making aspersions against the city of New York to secure its own ends, then it is near time the Naval Academy should be removed to some other place. They ought not to have this institution in their midst, an institution founded by a northern man, then Secretary of the Navy, George Bancroft, now a resident of the city of New York; a gentleman who is not opposed to the President's policy, and who is not in favor of the congressional policy, or he would not have received an appointment to high position in Boston which I understand he has declined.

Mr. PHELPS. What part of the memorial does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. CHANLER. This part:

"We admit that in Annapolis, as in perhaps every other place in the country, there are individuals whose sentiments may have given offense to Union men; but we assert that even during the war the proportion of such cases was much smaller than in many important cities at the North. New York city, which has recently given more than forty thousand majority against the supporters of the congressional policy, is the home of many men whose outspoken disloyalty throughout the whole war did much to support the waning fortunes of the rebellion. Certain towns in Connecticut have prominent citizens who were charged with having endeavored to destroy the efficiency of the Navy at the beginning of the war, and embarrassing the Government during its progress. But we submit it would be most unjust and unwise to remove the public establishments located at those places upon the grounds indicated in the resolution of inquiry, although, as we are positively certain, the charge would apply much more forcibly to them, as well as to other places at the North, than to Annapolis."

Mr. PHELPS. Does the gentleman consider that an aspersion upon New York city generally?

Mr. CHANLER. Such sentiments, coming from the authorities of Annapolis to gain its private ends, only deserves contemptuous notice on this floor.

Sir, I am in favor of giving to this Academy of the naval school every advantage, and certainly the disadvantages which may accrue from climate are to be taken into consideration. I look upon the argument advanced by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PHELPS] with regard to the open sea during the greater part of the winter as a very cogent one in favor of retaining the location at the present place. But, sir, there are still greater advantages than that. Direct contact with the ocean itself, the great highway of all nations, is a greater advantage than a location on an inlet of the sea like the Chesapeake; and the point to which I would draw the attention of the traveling committee is an island situated at the extreme eastern point of Long Island, which will be removed from the baneful influence suggested by the gentleman from Maryland. I refer to Gardiner's Island off Montauk Point, opposite New London.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. Speaker, in rising to close this debate it is not my intention to make any extended remarks, but merely to explain the resolution reported by the committee, and the reasons which have led the committee to report it.

This is not an original proposition coming from the Committee on Naval Affairs, but it comes before the House under an almost imperative order of this body; for it cannot have been forgotten by gentlemen that by more than a two-thirds vote some week or ten days since, upon a suspension of the rules, the Committee on Naval Affairs were instructed to inquire and report immediately to the House in regard to the expediency of the removal of the Naval Academy from Annapolis to some other point. Well, sir, when the committee came to consider the question with which they were thus charged by the House, they found two very important considerations affecting the situation of this Academy. One was, that it was located at Annapolis originally without any authority of law whatever. It was an accidental, if not intended as a temporary location, certainly without any authority of the legislative department of this Government.

Starting with that fact, the committee, without going into the investigation of certain things that had been intimated by the public newspapers or even in the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK,] which was the origin of the inquiry, found another fact which struck them, as I think it must have struck the House, as of imposing authority; and that is, that the chief officer of the Navy had himself solemnly, formally, and deliberately recommended in his annual report of 1865 the removal of this Academy from this place, which is claimed to be so advantageous and so remarkably adapted for this purpose. I need but read to those who consider this matter of consequence enough to give me their attention a portion of that report of the Secretary of the Navy:

"The academic grounds belonging to the Government at Annapolis include only twenty-one acres, and are wholly insufficient for the school. Their situation in the heart of a city also subjects the youths to temptations, from which, at that period of life, it is desirable they should be removed."

Mr. STEVENS. When was that report made?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In 1865.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman will recollect that last year we bought a considerable portion of land and added it to the grounds.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do recollect it; and if the gentleman had attended to the debate he would have recollected that that very thing has been stated twice already on this floor:

"In the present and prospective condition of our naval power, the idea of permanently establishing a national institution of this character on these restricted grounds, where large expenditures must be made in public edifices and buildings and various improvements, cannot be seriously entertained by any who shall give the subject candid and deliberate consideration."

"The school was originally designed for one hundred and eighty midshipmen, with the necessary officers, professors, and instructors; but the number has been increased, until there are now authorized by law five hundred and sixty-six midshipmen, with a corresponding increase of the academic staff. There are but ninety-six rooms in the present quarters of the midshipmen, and each room is intended for two occupants. The buildings are defective in many respects, and were originally hastily and imperfectly constructed."

"Commodore Blake, the late intelligent superintendent, in a carefully prepared statement, estimates the cost of the buildings and improvements which will be required at Annapolis in order to make the institution acceptable and worthy of the country at $300,000."

"No amount of money which Congress may expend in buildings and improvements at that location will be satisfactory, and at no distant day a different and better site will be procured. This should not be delayed. True economy and the best interests of the Government prompt an immediate selection of the best position that can be obtained before any greater expense shall have been incurred in large and costly edifices and other substantial improvements."

That, sir, was the fact which the committee found upon investigation. They found, too, that the Secretary of the Navy had himself stated to this House, upon authority which he deemed to be such as to warrant the statement, that the removal ought not to be longer delayed, and not only that the grounds in Annapolis were inadequate in point of capacity, but also that the site was unfit for such an Academy, being in the heart of the city.

Mr. PHELPS. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Has my colleague the face to ask me to yield further when I have already yielded all but ten minutes of my time?

Mr. PHELPS. After association with the gentleman from Connecticut on the Naval Committee, I have face enough to ask anything. [Laughter.] Will the gentleman state the date of the report of the Secretary of the Navy from which he has been reading?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have already stated it. It is the report for 1865; and if the gentleman had kept his ears as wide open as he keeps his mouth he would have heard me when I stated the date before. [Laughter.]

Mr. PHELPS. I now ask the gentleman further: has not Congress since replied to the recommendations in that report by an appropriation of $100,000 for the Naval Academy at Annapolis?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is beside the question.

Now, sir, as I was saying, the committee charged by the House with the duty of examining into the propriety of removing the Academy found that it was not originally located at Annapolis by law; also, that in the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy the site was unfit for a Naval Academy; that in order to meet the increasing requirements of the nation an expenditure of $800,000, nearly a million, would be required for additions and improvements; and further, that in the opinion of the Secretary it must ultimately be removed, at the loss of the whole investment at Annapolis. Therefore, without touching those inquiries which might well excite the sensitive nerves of the delegation from Maryland, they reported to this House—what? I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and through you gentlemen upon this floor, to listen for a moment to what the report of the committee is; it is not that the School should be removed from Annapolis; it is not that it should be taken to Newport, or to New London, or any other site; but it is simply this: that these alleged facts, which are asserted by the Secretary of the Navy to be of prime importance, should be investigated by a competent commission of naval officers; the report of that commission to be made to the Congress which is to begin its first session in a few days. The resolution offered by the committee provides that all the facts connected with the location of this Academy at Annapolis shall be inquired of by a competent commission, and that the advantages of that site, together with the greater advantages of other places, if there be other places more advantageous, shall be reported for the action of Congress, thirty, sixty, or ninety days hence.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield for a moment? I wish to ask him a question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The gentleman knows very well that I have not time to finish what I have to say.

Mr. WARD, of New York. Has not the hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. HILL. I merely desire to know what the buildings and grounds at Annapolis cost.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Seven hundred thousand dollars, as near as I can recollect.

Mr. HILL. I have been informed that they have cost $5,000,000.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Now it seems to me that the proposition of the committee ought to commend itself to this body.

There is a doubt—no man can avoid a doubt—whether there are not facts and circumstances other than those directly connected with the fitness of the present site and locality of the Naval Academy which would justify us, not perhaps in acting without further knowledge, but at least in inquiring what is the temper of that Maryland constituency which is around the Academy and in considering the propriety of removing it.

I hold in my hand a pamphlet or circular purporting to come from the mayor, aldermen, and recorder of Annapolis, in which they vouch for the loyalty of that city. And how do they seek to establish its loyalty? By impugning the loyalty of other States and other cities, which, to say the least, will certainly go down as creditably upon the page of history which records the events connected with the great rebellion as Maryland commenced to go down at the entrance upon the struggle.

These gentlemen say that the most specious and dangerous charge ever made in Maryland against the Government during the war was that in the future Congress would legislate for the interests of the northern States alone.

Mr. Speaker, was that indeed the most specious and dangerous charge made in Maryland against the Government during the war? I thought I had heard of a charge made by a ruffian mob in the streets of the chief city of Maryland upon the troops of the Government that were hurrying to defend this capital, a charge much more "specious and dangerous" than that which is cited in this pamphlet. I thought, too, that I had heard of a time when troops were hurrying from the North upon the call of the President of the United States to defend this city, the seat of Government, and when the Governor of Maryland refused to allow those Yankee troops to march over the sacred soil of Pratt street. I thought I had also heard of a matter pertinent to this debate, that there was a time when the Government itself removed this Naval Academy from precautions of safety to a loyal northern State. But it seems that these persons living in Annapolis have not heard of that fact. There was a time when it was necessary to remove that Naval Academy from the State of Maryland. I do not know that that necessity exists at this time, or that it will ever exist again. But I believe upon my soul, upon all the testimony I can get, that if Robert E. Lee was marching his army again to-day into Maryland we should be compelled, in order to save our Naval School, to again remove it into a loyal State. I do not know that that contingency will ever arise; I pray in God's name it never may.

So much for the charges made against other cities, and the attempt to cover up what every man must acknowledge with shame, turn his back upon, and walk away from with shaded eyes, was the temper exhibited during the war by the people of Maryland.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course I will have to do so.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. I desire the gentleman to inform the House whether Robert E. Lee did not march his troops into Maryland, once, twice, three times, and whether the loyal men of Maryland did not help to drive them out?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And I would ask the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. J. L. THOMAS] if he believes that Robert E. Lee would ever have been driven from Maryland if it had been left to the loyal men of Maryland to do it? And I would also ask the gentleman, if the loyal men of Maryland were able to drive out of that State even the disloyal men of Maryland?

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. Yes, sir; the loyal men of Maryland did drive out the disloyal men of Maryland.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is enough for me to say that we all know that there was a time, only five years ago, when we had to take the Naval Academy away from Maryland. I do not know that such a time will ever occur again; I do not believe that it will. But when I find the School established in Maryland, in the first place without authority of law, in an unfit place, as is stated by the chief officer of the Navy, and in a place where such things have happened in the past and may again happen in the future, as will sink your Navy in a night, for one, under the instruction of the House, I believe we at least owe it to the future of the Navy, which is to bear the thunders of your cannon over every ocean, we owe it to the Navy and to the loyal people of this country, that we shall at least inquire whether there is any danger or any disadvantage attending the location of this School at Annapolis, and at least give an opportunity to ascertain whether there is not a better location for it elsewhere.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. I desire to ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. I would ask the gentleman to state, if he can, what is the loyal majority in the State of Connecticut, and whether or not it is greater than the loyal majority in the State of Maryland?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. My friend knows very well that no Government work or establishment has ever been removed from the State of Connecticut on account of the disloyal majority there.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. The gentleman does not answer my question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is rather unkind in the gentleman to sit where he does and put questions to me prompted by his colleague and by gentlemen on the other side of the House?

Mr. F. THOMAS. That is an allusion not warranted by fact. I did not say one word to him. I do not deal in these small matters.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know whether my friend from Maryland, [Mr. F. THOMAS,] whom I love a great deal more than I respect, and I do both as much as one man can in regard to another, I do not know whether he understood of whom I was speaking or what I was talking about. I think he must have been mistaken.

An allusion was made by his colleague as to the political complexion of Connecticut, and in response to that I stated that I thought it was a rather unfair argument, that he should draw into this discussion the Democracy of Connecticut, when he was having the assistance of gentlemen on that side of the House who generally act with the Democracy. The gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. F. THOMAS,] who has graced the gubernatorial chair of that State, as he graces every position in which he is placed, was not in my contemplation when I made the remark. He is the last man upon this floor whose feelings I would intentionally wound. There is no one whom I more highly respect, and no one whom I would more regret to offend.

Now, Mr. Speaker, though I may seem to have, I certainly have no other or greater interest in this question than the gentleman from Maryland has. I am merely the exponent of the views of the committee. The resolution reported by the committee does not affect, directly or indirectly, expressly or by implication, the political—and when I say “political,” I speak not in the sense of parties but of sections—it does not affect the political character of Maryland; it makes no allusion to what was alluded to in the original resolution of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK;] but it merely authorizes the raising of a commission of naval officers to inquire into facts which, as we think, ought to be inquired into, facts which may settle the question of the advantages or disadvantages of the present location of the Naval Academy.

Sir, the opposition which the present proposition excites I attribute purely to the present state of feeling in Maryland. If such a resolution had been introduced here six months ago, upon the basis of the report of the Secretary of the Navy, and proposing to ascertain whether it was true, as stated in that report, that we must ultimately abandon the present location for the Naval Academy, there would not, I apprehend, have been a voice raised upon this floor in opposition to it. At any rate, sir, it would seem from the feeling now manifested in this House, that the vote on this question will range itself, to a great extent, according to the dividing lines of political parties.

For one I have stated the facts which appealed to the committee; I have explained or tried to explain the action of the committee. I leave the bill to the judgment of the House, merely saying with reference to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] in the nature of a substitute, that I do not see how it can accomplish any valuable purpose. It proposes that the Speaker of this House and the President of the Senate shall appoint a committee, consisting of two Senators and three members of this House, to examine the facts with reference to the advantages or disadvantages of different localities. I have as much respect for gentlemen on this floor as any man can have; but I do not believe that there is a man in this House, certainly I do not think there is one in the other end of the Capitol, [laughter,] who is fit to make an examination of this sort. I do not believe that we Representatives here are precisely the fittest persons to examine questions connected with the location of a naval school; questions depending, it may be, upon tides, upon currents, upon the depth of water, freedom of ingress and egress with reference to the ocean or rivers, and all questions of that sort. I do believe that a competent board of naval officers can be formed to determine these questions. I do believe that the Secretary of the Navy, who has recommended a change in the location of this Academy, will not be the person to pack a board adversely to the interests of the Government. I have nothing more to say.

Mr. LE BLOND. Will the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Four minutes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Well, I yield that to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LE BLOND.]

Mr. LE BLOND. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to consider the comparative patriotism or loyalty of different States. I think it is out of place to do so, and especially in my friend from Connecticut, though the resolution upon which he has based his remarks had its origin in that very spirit. But, Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me that the great West has been neglected in this matter. Now, I do not know whether my colleague [Mr. SCHENCK] introduced this resolution in good faith. I am inclined to think that he introduced it in about the same spirit in which the gentleman from Chicago [Mr. WENTWORTH] introduced the resolution inquiring into the moral character of members of his own party.

Mr. SCHENCK. I was in dead earnest. [Laughter.]

Mr. LE BLOND. Well if my colleague is in “dead earnest” in this matter he is recreant to the best interests of the State he represents; for in his resolution there is not a single provision that will authorize this commission to examine the various suitable sites in Ohio for a naval academy. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHENCK. My colleague will permit me to interrupt him so far as to say he is entirely mistaken. There is a general provision the committee may examine any site at their discretion, and they may even go into the Black Swamp. [Laughter.]

Mr. LE BLOND. The gentleman has come to my point exactly. Unless mentioned in the resolution that commission will never examine any of these other places. We have the Summit reservoir and other reservoirs in the West large enough to float the small class of boats. [Laughter.] They ought to be examined into and reported upon. I suppose it is owing to my living on this large reservoir of seventeen thousand acres that I have found my way into the Naval Committee as one of its members. [Laughter.] Being on that committee, then, I think it due to the people who live on this large reservoir that it should be mentioned in the resolution of my colleague, and this committee or commission should be enjoined to make an examination of it. I think it is only fair, and I am surprised my friend from Connecticut, who has spoken so ably of New London, has omitted it. He has New London on the brain.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is better than to have no brain to have it on. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The time for debate has now expired.

Mr. LE BLOND. I am sorry, as I have not concluded what I had to say.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS moved that the whole subject be laid upon the table, and subsequently withdrew it to take a vote on the direct question.

The question recurred on Mr. SCHENCK's substitute.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 67.

Mr. SCHENCK demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the substitute was rejected.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE demanded the previous question on the passage of the joint resolution.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 87, nays 108, not voting 45; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Delos R. Ashley, Brandegee, Sidney Clarke, Deming, Dixon, Donnelly, Eliot, Garfield, Grinnell, Hooper, Demas Hubbard, Humphrey, Jencks, Kelso, Koontz, Laffin, William Lawrence, McClurg, Mercur, Morrill, Paine, Patterson, Pike, Alexander H. Harding, Harris, Hart, Hawkins, Hayes, Higby, Hill, Hise, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Hulbard, Hunter, Julian, Kelley, Kerr, Ketcham, Kuykendall, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Leitch, Loan, Lynch, Marshall, Marvin, Maynard, McCullough, McIndoe, McRuer, Moorhead, Morris, Myers, Newell, Niblack, Nicholson, Neill, O'Neill, Orth, Perham, Phelps, Pomeroy, Radford, Samuel J. NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Arnell, Barker, Baxter, Blow, Boutwell, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Conkling, Culver, Darling, Dawes, Delano, Denison, Driggs, Eckley, Goodyear, Aaron Harding, Henderson, Hogan, Asahel W. Hubbard, James K. Hubbell, Ingersoll, Jones, Kasson, Latham, Longyear, Marston, McKee, Miller, Moulton, Plants, Price, William H. Randall, Raymond, John H. Rice, Rogers, Sloan, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, and Wright—45.

So the joint resolution was rejected.

Mr. PHELPS moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was rejected; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RATIONS ISSUED TO CIVILIANS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in response to a resolution of the House, relative to the issue of rations to persons not belonging to the Army; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1866; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GRINNELL moved that the usual number of extra copies be printed; which motion, under the law, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

THE TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MORRILL moved that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to take up the special order, being the amendment of the Senate to the tariff bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 72, noes 38.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the amendment of the Senate in the nature of a substitute to House bill No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORRILL moved to dispense with the first reading of the substitute for information. Objection was made.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the substitute.

Mr. MORRILL. I think the House will agree to dispense with this reading, and to read the substitute by paragraph for amendment, and I therefore move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. POMEROY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. MORRILL moved to suspend the rules so as to dispense with the further reading of the Senate amendment in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BENJAMIN demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. ALLISON. As I understand, this is a single amendment to the House bill?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. ALLISON. Then there is no first reading.

Mr. KUYKENDALL. Have we not a right to have it read once?

Mr. MORRILL. We can spend as much time in proposing amendments as we shall consume in reading the bill. It seems to me, therefore, a very dull process compared with proposing and debating amendments.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. This a very unusual motion.

Mr. MORRILL. A very usual motion.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to ask the gentleman, as chairman of the committee, what course he intends to take with this bill in the Committee of the Whole, whether it is expected to bring us to a vote upon the bill by taking it out of the Committee of the Whole by a majority vote without a single amendment made to it in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. MORRILL. That is not the purpose. The purpose in suspending the first reading is to allow the gentleman from Iowa and any other gentleman to propose such amendments as they please, and when the House shall become tired of offering amendments it will then be my duty to get a vote on the bill in the House.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to make an appeal to the chairman of the committee. I suggest that we dispense with the first reading of the bill, and let it be read over as though we were in the Committee of the Whole on the second reading, and let amendments be offered as the Clerk proceeds, so that gentlemen can offer such amendments as they may desire to the bill from beginning to end.

Mr. HILL. I insist that all debate is out of order, and that the question shall be put.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken on suspending the rules; and there were—yeas 85, nays 49, not voting 56; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Ancona, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Boyer, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Conkling, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Eliot, Garfield, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Hart, Higby, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Hubbard, Jenckes, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Koontz, George W. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Lynch, Marvin, McClurg, Mercur, Mercer, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Paine, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Stevens, Strouse, Thayer, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, William B. Washburn, Welker, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—85.

NAYS—Messrs. Arnell, Delos L. Ashley, Baker, Benjamin, Bergen, Campbell, Chanler, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cooper, Deftrees, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farquhar, Finck, Glossbrenner, Abner C. Harding, Harris, Hawkins, Hayes, Hill, Hise, Edwin N. Hubbard, Humphrey, Hunter, Julian, Kerr, Kuykendall, Le Blond, Leftwich, Marshall, Maynard, Nicholson, Orth, Radford, Ritter, Ross, Rousseau, Shanklin, Stokes, Taber, Nelson Taylor, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Andrew H. Ward, and James F. Wilson—49.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Barker, Beaman, Blow, Brandegee, Bromwell, Reader W. Clarke, Culver, Delano, Denison, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Farnsworth, Ferry, Goodyear, Aaron Harding, Henderson, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jones, Kasson, Laffin, Latham, Longyear, Marston, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, Miller, Moulton, Niblack, Noel, Patterson, Phelps, Plants, Samuel J. Randall, Rogers, Schenck, Sloan, Starr, Stillwell, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Wentworth, Whaley, Windom, Winfield, and Wright—56.

So (two thirds not having voted in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution of the House No. 224, giving additional compensation to certain employes in the civil service of the Government at Washington.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 904) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1868, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 912) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868;

An act (H. R. No. 1051) for the relief of Henry P. Blanchard;

An act (H. R. No. 1062) relative to the port of Camden, New Jersey;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 213) to extend the provisions of the act in regard to agricultural colleges to the State of Tennessee;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 290) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to grant the use of guns for trial of Ridgway's battery;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 224) giving additional compensation to certain employes in the civil service of the Government at Washington; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 271) authorizing the Secretary of War to adjust and settle the claim of D. Randolph Martin, assignee of the Washington, Alexandria, and Georgetown Railroad Company.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the Senate amendment, and before completing the same the hour of half past four o'clock arrived, and the House took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

CAPTAIN WILLIAM M'KEAN.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions a bill for the relief of Captain William McKean; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was read at length. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll the name of William McKean, late captain of company I, ninety-second regiment of New York volunteers, and pay to him the same pension allowed by the general pension laws to persons having lost the sight of both eyes in the military service of the United States, the pension to be paid under the restrictions and limitations imposed by the general pension laws.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MORRILL moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the amendment of the Senate in the nature of a substitute for the bill of the House.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire now to present an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the Senate; and in order to satisfy the curiosity of any gentleman present, I will say that the substitute which I propose to offer is mainly the bill as reported from the Committee of Ways and Means. I shall, however, propose some few alterations, not exceeding, I believe, a dozen or fifteen, in which cases it is proposed to place the duty at slightly lower rates than were proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means.

I will say further that in the progress of amendment and discussion which may be had upon the bill now pending any decisive vote that may be given would be considered in the nature perhaps of instructions. And therefore, before the vote shall be reached upon the substitute which I propose, I shall feel myself at liberty to modify it, if I so choose, in accordance with the votes given by the Committee of the Whole. I will not now state the details of the changes which I propose in the bill as reported from the Committee of Ways and Means, because, as I have stated, I shall feel at liberty, after further action by the Committee of the Whole, to modify the amendment I now propose to offer.

Mr. CHANLER. I would ask the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] what proposition he makes in reference to the progress of debate upon this bill?

Mr. MORRILL. I have made no proposition upon that subject. I now propose to move that the committee rise for the purpose of terminating all general debate upon this bill; which will not cut off five-minutes' debate upon amendments. I should be very glad to make a speech myself, and there are several gentlemen who also would be glad to make speeches. But it is now so late in the session I will forego the privilege myself and must ask that others shall also forego it.

I now move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate upon this bill.

Mr. CHANLER. Before the question is taken, I desire to inquire for information whether the proposed substitute of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] will not virtually cut off all further opportunity to offer amendments?

Mr. MORRILL. It will not prevent further amendment nor cut off the five-minute debate.

The question was taken upon the motion that the committee rise; and upon a division there were—ayes 61, noes 41.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. CHANLER called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MORRILL and Mr. CHANLER were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 68, noes 35. So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. POMEROY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, according to order, had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report that they had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that when the House again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole and resume the consideration of the special order, all general debate shall terminate in one minute.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the gentleman to allow a little longer time for debate to those who are opposed to the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. In reply to my colleague, I will say that if we ever reach the previous question upon this substitute which I now offer, I suppose I will be entitled to an hour, which I will be willing to divide with the gentleman from Iowa and other members of the House.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Will the gentleman distribute any portion of his time among members who are not upon the Committee of Ways and Means?

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly, sir; with a great deal of pleasure.

Mr. CHANLER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Vermont whether the effect of the course that he proposes to take will not be to limit general debate to one minute now, and to limit further debate to one hour when he shall have moved the previous question?

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman has been in the House long enough to know that limiting general debate does not cut off the five-minutes' debate. After general debate upon the bill has been closed, gentlemen can move amendments to it and can debate them for five minutes on each side.

Mr. CHANLER. I am not quite certain whether the amendment offered by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to the amendment of the Senate does not cut off all further amendments to this bill?

Mr. MORRILL. Not at all; not at all.

Mr. CHANLER. It seems to me pretty generally understood that the effect of that amendment will be to put the bill in that position.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that by the rule, which will be found in the Digest, the Senate amendment is the only text that the Senate have agreed to. Therefore it is open to an amendment in the House, and also to an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to propound a question. During the last session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress this bill, as it was sent to the Senate, was passed by this House. It came back to us from the Senate at this session with a single, and only a single amendment, that being an amendment which struck out the entire bill passed by the House; so that really the Senate have sent us back a new bill. Now, if we adopt the principle upon which that has been done we entirely ignore the constitutional provision that no bill for raising revenue can originate in the Senate. This Senate amendment is practically, in every sense in which it can be considered, an original bill coming from the Senate; and being a bill for raising revenue, it is in violation of the provision of the Constitution which I have indicated. Now, unless the question can be fully submitted to this House, and unless they deliberately and knowingly decide that the Senate has, and shall hereafter have, a right to originate revenue bills, this action of the Senate is all wrong. To me it appears to be a violation of well-settled constitutional principles, principles which were incorporated originally into the English constitution for the preservation of the liberties of the people against the encroachments of the English Upper House, and which were subsequently embodied in our own Constitution; and I believe that we, here as the Representatives of the American people, ought not to submit to any such encroachment by the Senate upon the constitutional prerogatives of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will answer the gentleman from New York. The point which he has made at this time should have been made, if at all, when the amendment came from the Senate. But when that amendment was sent to the House from the Senate no gentleman made that point, and therefore the amendment was received, was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, was considered by that committee and by them reported back to the House, and it was then referred by the House to the Committee of the Whole, which committee has been for some hours engaged in considering the bill. It is quite clear, therefore, that the point made by the gentleman from New York is made too late. But the Chair will state that although the Senate have exercised the power of amendment in a very large degree by striking out the original House bill and sending back a different bill, yet the Chair does not doubt that technically they have the right so to do. The Clerk will read the section of the Constitution bearing upon the point.

The Clerk read the first paragraph of section seven of the Constitution, as follows:

"All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments, as on other bills."

The SPEAKER. It will be seen that by the Constitution all bills for raising the revenue must originate in this House; the Senate cannot originate any such bill; but the Constitution also provides that when such bills go to the Senate the Senate may propose amendments, or may concur with amendments to them, as on other bills. Now, if they have power, as they certainly have, to strike out all after the enacting clause of any other bill and to adopt an amendment in the nature of a substitute entirely different from the original, then they have also a right to do so with a revenue bill.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I understood the Chair to rule that this being an amendment of the Senate the House have a right to propose an amendment to it, and then to offer an amendment to that amendment, which must conclude the action of the House so far as amending this bill is concerned. I wish to know whether that rule applies to the whole bill, or whether we may amend the several sections in that way?

The SPEAKER. That is a point that will be disposed of when it arises by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

As the bill is now pending in Committee of the Whole, with the amendment of the Senate and the substitute moved by the gentleman from Vermont, which is also an amendment, any gentleman can move to amend that substitute, and when that is voted upon any gentleman can move to amend it in any other particular, and when that is voted upon he can again move to amend; and so on until all desired amendments are offered.

Mr. CONKLING. Would it not be in order to amend the text of the amendment committed to the Committee of the Whole indefinitely, before a vote would be in order upon the substitute for the whole bill?

The SPEAKER. That would be in order. The Chair only answered the question upon the other point, whether the substitute itself could be amended.

Mr. DAVIS. If the decision of the Chair be sustained and this bill go back to the Senate, cannot they amend again by striking out the whole bill and send us back an entirely new substitute?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not anticipate a point like that. The gentleman from New York will see that the Chair has no right to decide a point based upon an anticipation of what may be the action of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire some information in reference to the order of amendments to this bill. I understand that when the bill came from the Senate with the Senate amendment it was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, who reported it back to the House with sundry amendments. The Senate amended bill and those amendments were then referred to the Committee of the Whole House. Now, is it not in order to act first upon the amendment reported by the Committee of Ways and Means before acting upon any other amendment?

The SPEAKER. Any amendment to perfect the Senate amendment will be in order before voting upon any substitute. But these points will be met by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole, who, as the House know, is fully competent to decide them.

Mr. ALLISON. I am aware of that. I asked the question because the answer might control my vote with reference to the question of closing debate.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask for information, whether when we go into the Committee of the Whole the Senate bill will be entirely open for amendment before any action is taken upon the amendment which the chairman of the committee has offered individually, not from the committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated, in reply to another member of the Committee of Ways and Means, that the amendments proposed by the committee will be in order to perfect the amendment of the Senate. The Chair does not wish to anticipate the action of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, whose prerogative it will be to decide these points of order as they may arise in committee.

On the motion of Mr. MORRILL, that when the House shall again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union all general debate shall terminate in one minute, there were—ayes 60, noes 39.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 76, nays 49, not voting 65; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Ancona, Arnell, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Brownell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Washburne, Whaley, Winfield, and Wright—65.

So the motion of Mr. MORRILL to close general debate was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 1197) for the relief of Charles Valmar;

An act (H. R. No. 1196) granting a pension to Peter Fisher;

An act (H. R. No. 1195) for the relief of Mary B. Fowler;

An act (H. R. No. 1194) granting back pension to Mary J. Dexter;

An act (H. R. No. 1193) for the relief of Levisa Daniel;

An act (H. R. No. 1192) granting arrears of pensions to Lewis A. Horton;

An act (H. R. No. 1189) granting arrears of pension to Sally Allen;

An act (H. R. No. 1092) for the relief of Milton Velzy;

An act (H. R. No. 1191) increasing the pension of Isabella Fogg;

An act (H. R. No. 1190) granting a pension to Mary Fitzpatrick;

An act (H. R. No. 1153) for the relief of Mrs. Rachel McClelland; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 280) for the relief of the mother of Charles O. Rowohl.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed an act (H. R. No. 1126) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed an act (S. No. 623) granting a pension to Mrs. Susan Ten Eyck Williamson, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the tariff bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R.

No. 718) to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORRILL. In order to facilitate business and prevent all confusion I withdraw my substitute for the Senate amendment to the present.

Mr. CHANLER. I ask the gentleman from Vermont whether this substitute has been printed, or whether there are any means by which members can become acquainted with it?

The CHAIRMAN. The printed bill shows what is proposed to be stricken out by the Committee of Ways and Means and what is proposed to be inserted. In accordance with uniform usage heretofore, the chairman will be first recognized.

Mr. CHANLER. I wish to inquire whether the substitute of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] has been printed in full.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been withdrawn, and is not before the committee.

Mr. MORRILL. I now propose the amendments offered by the Committee of Ways and Means. The first amendment is to strike out "from and after the passage of this act" and to insert "on and after ten days from the passage of this act;" so it will read:

That on and after ten days from the passage of this act, in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed by law on the articles hereinafter mentioned, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on the goods, wares, and merchandise herein enumerated and provided for, imported from foreign countries, the following duties and rates of duties; that is to say, &c.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. That is not the amendment reported from the Committee of Ways and Means and which is in the printed bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must recognize this as the amendment of the committee, coming as it does from the chairman.

Mr. MORRILL. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts the amendment I have substituted was made in consultation with the other members of the committee since the bill was reported. I have no objection if he prefers the other phraseology.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I have a preference for the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MORRILL. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Then I move the amendment of the committee, to strike out "from and after the passage of this act," and insert "on and after the 1st day of April, 1867." I will explain why this amendment was offered. It was on the advice of the Department. As all accounts are made monthly it would make a great deal of trouble to have a month divided and broken up. And another reason was the importance of communicating the change to the different parts of the country. It may be by telegraph sent to California in a few days, but it is better and more safely sent by mail. It was adopted in the absence of the chairman on the advice of the Department. If he had been present I have no doubt he would have assented to it.

Mr. MORRILL. I renew my amendment as an amendment to the amendment; and I only desire to say since we have had so frequent and rapid communication with Europe it enables importers to flood our markets, not only with silks and iron, but woolen goods and wool. It would be easy for them to order a sufficient amount if they could make enough by it before this bill goes into operation for an entire year. Therefore I want the act to go into effect ten days after its passage. Otherwise I should regard it in reference to some articles as entirely useless. Have we not had sufficient experience last year? The importers noticed the intention of Congress to pass this bill, and for that reason we have had an unprecedented glut of goods from abroad.

Mr. CHANLER. Mr. Chairman, the argument of the gentleman is an admission he cannot carry out his theory of protection. His plan is competition with improvement in the science of the age, and he finds himself met upon the brink of the ocean by the Atlantic telegraph. He is proposing "to put a girdle round the earth in forty minutes," and then he proposes to limit intelligence, trade, and speculation. He might as well attempt to bottle the lightning. He could control the efforts of genius as well by enactment as to limit the spirit of commerce and speculation. Sir, the theory of this bill is a falsity from beginning to end. The gentleman in charge of it surrenders his position in his amendment. He has been beaten by the spirit of the age. It is an age of free trade, of intercommunication between the continents without the interposition of legislators, without the trammels of legislative bodies. Sir, the basis of our Government rests upon the enterprise and commerce of its people, and to undertake to thwart or check the successful efforts of man to communicate across the ocean is likely to prove more feeble and futile than we might have reason to expect from the immense labor of the mountain of Vermont. [Laughter.] Parturient montes nascitur mus. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. Ridiculus mus. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANLER. Yes, sir, ridiculus mus. Sir, if the gentleman supposes that he can stand upon the granite hills of his native State and dictate to the civilization of Europe and America the means by which the laborer in the two continents is to gain his daily living he has come to the center of the American Government for little purpose, and is about to be promoted to a higher branch with very little advantage to himself or his country. [Laughter.]

Sir, it is by the spirit of competition in the open field of enterprise that this people here assembled has won the race. It is because we have opened our ports to the commerce of the world that England has spent millions to extend her telegraph to us, and it is because we are ruled through the enterprise of our people, under a system that is free, liberal, and wise, that the Europeans come here to trade with us. Draw this line around us, crush the spirit of trade, give to the manufacturing interest of New England the high places and rich profits, and you make a successful section, but you make a weak and tottering nation. It will be like the monster image seen in the vision by the king of old: its feet will be of clay, though its superstructure be of brass. [Laughter.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. MORRILL to the amendment of Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, it was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was then agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I would ask for information if the report of the Committee of Ways and Means on this bill is before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the Senate amendment printed in Roman text is before the House as a single amendment to the House bill, and the amendments of the Committee of Ways and Means to the Senate amendment are printed in italics.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I understand the Committee of Ways and Means made a report on the Senate amendment which was referred to them, and I had supposed that the amendments recommended by the Committee of Ways and Means in their report were the subject of consideration now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hold that they are before the Committee of the Whole as the report of the Committee of Ways and Means, but subject to amendment of course.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. If I understand the rule, it is that the amendments proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means are not before the Committee of the Whole, except as they are moved by some member of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I understand the Chair to rule that the amendments proposed by the committee would be received as offered by them, and that they were not to be taken as before the Committee of the Whole in their entirety.

The CHAIRMAN. They form no part of the bill except as they are proposed by the committee.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. If those portions of the bill now printed in italics are presented by the committee as amendments I call for the reading of them as a whole.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. They are not before the committee as a whole; they simply indicate what amendments the Committee of Ways and Means desire to make. Until they are moved in Committee of the Whole they are not before the House at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Such is the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I understood the Chair to rule a moment ago that he would treat this portion of the bill that is amended in italics as the amendments proposed by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Whenever moved by a member of the committee; until so moved they are not.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. If the committee do move them I call for the reading of the whole.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest, inasmuch as the amendments reported by the committee are in italics and are numbered, that it will facilitate action if the Clerk reads them one after another and passing them in committee.

Mr. SCHENCK. I would inquire whether these amendments are not reported from the committee as the record, to wit, "ordered to be printed with amendments of Committee of Ways and Means, made a special order," &c.; and whether they are not now before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will consider them as pending before the Committee of the Whole, but still subject to amendment.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Then I demand the reading of them.

The CHAIRMAN. They can only be read as reached in their order.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I rise to a question of order. The Committee of Ways and Means have made a report upon the Senate amendment, and I ask if it would not be in order to have their report read so that the House may know what it is?

The CHAIRMAN. The only amendments pending are the amendments reported by the Committee of Ways and Means to the amendment of the Senate, which is a substitute for the bill as it originally passed the House.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. The Committee of Ways and Means report certain amendments, and I ask if the House cannot have information as to what these amendments are?

The CHAIRMAN. They have been printed for the information of the House, and will be reported separately by the Clerk in their order. By unanimous consent they can be considered in gross; if there be objection to that they will be read seriatim.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I prefer that they should be read seriatim.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether the Senate amendments will be open to other amendments after the amendments reported by the Committee of Ways and Means have been acted on?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the whole substitute of the Senate will be open to amendment after the amendments of the Committee of Ways and Means are disposed of.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. The first amendment reported by the Committee of Ways and Means has been acted on, and the Clerk is about to read the second amendment. Will it not be in order to move an amendment to come in between the first and second amendments reported by the Committee of Ways and Means?

The CHAIRMAN. The uniform usage is to allow the committee which reports the bill to move amendments to perfect the bill before other amendments are offered. The Chair will recognize the members of the Committee of Ways and Means to propose their amendments.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I desire, at the proper time, to move to strike out lines ten and eleven, which levy a duty on tea and coffee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain that amendment at the proper time.

Mr. THAYER. I raise the point of order that the only text upon which the committee are to act is the Senate amendments, and that the House do not necessarily act upon the amendments which are recommended by the Committee of Ways and Means unless they are proposed separately as amendments to the Senate amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that these amendments of the Committee of Ways and Means have been reported to the House, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and they are now before the committee for its action.

Mr. THAYER. They stand as a report; but they constitute no part of the text of the bill which the committee is considering, and in order to be incorporated in the bill they must be separately moved by some member of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. GARFIELD. Not at all.

Mr. THAYER. It is not for you to say that.

Mr. GARFIELD. They have been reported by the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. THAYER. They have been reported as a report; but they are no part of the text upon which the committee is to act, and my point of order is that in order to incorporate any amendment in the text of the Senate amendment it must be specifically moved by a member of the Committee of Ways and Means. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union do not necessarily consider these amendments, but they may be considered on being moved by any member of the Committee of Ways and Means.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that they have already been moved by the Committee of Ways and Means through their report.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to illustrate in one word what I understand to be the condition of this bill. This morning I reported a bill that had passed the House, been sent to the Senate, and been reported back from the Senate with amendments. The Committee of Ways and Means instructed me to move that the Senate amendment be concurred in with four amendments. I sent up the report to the Clerk's desk, and the amendments recommended by the Committee of Ways and Means were read in their order without my saying a word more. The Clerk read the first amendment; the Chair said, "Will the House agree to the amendment?" The House voted and adopted the amendment; and then, without my saying another word, the second amendment was read, and the vote taken upon it. And so with the third amendment and the fourth amendment; which were voted upon and adopted. No person offered any other amendment, and the House proceeded to vote upon the amendment of the Senate as just amended by the House. Precisely that condition of things is presented by the bill now before the Committee of the Whole. The Committee of Ways and Means recommended that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in with two hundred and seventy-five amendments proposed by them. Those amendments have been printed and are now on the desks of members. The first one has been read and passed without any member of the Committee of Ways and Means or of the House saying a word. I take it that now the second amendment proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means will be read, and the Committee of the Whole will act upon it, and so they will pass upon all the two hundred and seventy-five amendments recommended. When that is done then if any member has any other amendment to offer, he can offer it and the Committee of the Whole will act upon it. If not, then the Committee of the Whole will report the Senate amendment to the House with the amendments they have made thereto.

Mr. THAYER. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] suppose that after all the amendments recommended by the Committee of Ways and Means have been considered and disposed of we must then go back and begin de novo, the Clerk reading over again every paragraph of the amendment of the Senate?

Mr. GARFIELD. By no means.

Mr. THAYER. That is the case according to the argument of the gentleman, otherwise the whole amendment of the Senate will be open to amendment at any time.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I desire to make an inquiry for the benefit of the Committee of the Whole; after the Committee of the Whole have passed upon all the amendments proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means, can we again go back and act upon the amendments we have adopted or the provisions to which they are attached?

Mr. GARFIELD. No, sir.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Of course not. And it seems to me that the only wise course for us to pursue is to take up this amendment of the Senate paragraph by paragraph and amend it as we go along, otherwise we may incorporate some amendments of the Committee of Ways and Means to which we cannot afterward return for action. The case referred to by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] is not a parallel case at all. No question was made upon the report which he made, it was not considered in Committee of the Whole; the amendments were proposed by him and no question of order was raised, but they were acted upon by the House by unanimous consent.

Mr. MAYNARD. Will the Chairman permit me to inquire whether the Senate amendment is regarded as being the text before the Committee of the Whole for amendment in the first degree?

The CHAIRMAN. It is the text for the action of the committee.

Mr. MAYNARD. I understand the amendment of the Senate has been once read through according to the rule, the first reading not having been dispensed with. Then, as I understand the rules in Committee of the Whole, the amendment of the Senate is to be again read by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. No, sir.

Mr. THAYER. Yes, sir; that is the true rule.

Mr. MAYNARD. I understand that to be the true rule.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is not the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. MAYNARD. I understand that to be according to the rule of the House; I may be mistaken.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I believe there is no question before the committee; and so far as concerns facility of business it seems to me that all these questions of order retard the business now before the committee. If the mode of proceeding recommended by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FARNSWORTH] were adopted, there would be the same difficulty: an amendment might be adopted that would be inconsistent with an amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means. I prefer very much that the Chair should consider the amendments proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means as first in order, and proceed at once to have them read. If there is no other question before the committee, I call for the reading of the first amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. MAYNARD. I did not yield the floor. I wish to know at this time whether, if we pass on and consider the amendments as we find them proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means, we shall then be permitted to go back to the beginning of the bill and amend it line by line in every part that has not previously been acted on. In other words, shall we be permitted to go over the bill twice or only once?

The CHAIRMAN. In answer to the point raised by the gentleman from Tennessee, the Chair holds that there is but one amendment before the House, which is the amendment of the Senate, and which is regarded as the text of the bill. To this the Committee of Ways and Means have proposed certain amendments which, according to the usage of the House, are to be considered in their order as reported by the committee. After that the whole section will be open to amendment upon the motion of any member.

A MEMBER. The whole bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The whole bill forms but one section.

Mr. MAYNARD. To make my point clearer, I move to amend by striking out in line eleven the word "five" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "three."

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to a point of order, and submit that the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chairman stated when he took the chair that according to the usage of the Committee of the Whole he should recognize members of the Committee of Ways and Means for the purpose of having action first upon their amendments, and that then the whole bill would be open to amendment on the motion of any member of the House.

Mr. MAYNARD. I wish simply to state that all we want is a fair opportunity to amend this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain any motion to amend after the amendments of the Committee of Ways and Means shall have been disposed of.

Mr. MAYNARD. Very well; so that we reach the object I do not care how it is attained.

Mr. THAYER. I desire to inquire whether our amendments must wait until all the amendments proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means have been disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair knows no other usage than first to recognize members of the committee reporting the bill to offer their amendments and have them acted on.

Mr. THAYER. That does not answer my question. I wish to know whether we are to wait until all the amendments of the Committee of Ways and Means have been acted on before any amendments to other parts of the Senate amendment will be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must entertain amendments in the order in which they are offered. The amendments of the Committee of Ways and Means have been before the House for several days; they have been referred to the Committee of the Whole and must take precedence of any amendments which may now be offered.

Mr. THAYER. Then all those amendments are to be acted on before any other amendments can be offered?

The CHAIRMAN. Such is the ruling of the Chair.

The committee rose informally, and the Speaker resumed the Chair.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. No. 182) for printing additional copies of the Appendix of the Diplomatic Correspondence of 1865, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. CHANLER. I rise for information as to whether the substitute of the Committee of Ways and Means—

The CHAIRMAN. It has been withdrawn.

Mr. CHANLER. But under the ruling of the Chair cannot it be again offered after we have gone through with these amendments, and the bill then reported to the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill cannot be reported to the House so long as any amendment is pending.

Mr. CHANLER. Is it not within the power of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to again bring in his substitute in writing?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in the power of any gentleman to offer a substitute any time before the bill is reported to the House.

Second amendment:

Insert the following:

Provided further, That on all sugars imported from foreign countries above No. 12, Dutch standard, which have in the process of manufacture been boiled in a vacuum-pan, purged in a centrifugal machine, or by a centrifugal process, or filtered through animal or bone black, or its equivalent, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, one half of a cent per pound more than the duties hereby imposed upon clayed and Muscovado sugars, as made by the old or open-pan process of the same number, Dutch standard in color: And provided further, That in the invoices of all sugars imported into the United States it shall be expressly stated if they are clayed or Muscovado, and in case they have in the process of manufacture been boiled in a vacuum-pan, purged in a centrifugal machine, or by a centrifugal process, or filtered through animal or bone black, or its equivalent, the fact shall be clearly stated in the invoice.

The amendment was agreed to.

Third amendment:

Strike out "six" and insert "eight;" so it will read, "on ground cacao, or cocoa, and on prepared cocoa and chocolate, eight cents per pound."

The amendment was agreed to.

Fourth amendment:

Strike out the words "containing spirits."

The amendment was agreed to.

Fifth amendment:

Strike out "bermuth" and insert "vermuth."

Mr. HILL. I desire to know whether the amendments of the committee are first to be considered as they are reached in reading the bill, and whether, after they have been completed, the bill will then be open for amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It will be read again and will be open for amendment.

Mr. HILL. The amendments of the committee, then, are first to be considered to the exclusion of all others?

The CHAIRMAN. Such has been the uniform custom.

The fifth amendment was agreed to.

Sixth amendment:

Insert "containing fifty per cent. or less of alcohol;" so that the paragraph will read:

On cordials, liqueurs, and bitters of all kinds, and on arrack, absynthe, Kirschwasser, vermuth, ratifia, and other similar beverages not otherwise provided for in this act, containing fifty per cent. or less of alcohol, $2 50 per gallon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Seventh amendment:

Strike out "four" and insert "five;" so it will read: Class 1. On all plain woven manufactures of cotton, and on drills, jeans, silesias, and other tweeled or twilled fabrics, not more than four-leaved twill, in the brown, gray, or unbleached condition, not exceeding one hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, and exceeding in weight five ounces per square yard, five cents per square yard.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 43.

Mr. FARNSWORTH called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GARFIELD and Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 43, noes 57.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Eighth amendment:

In the remaining portion of the same paragraph strike out "four" and insert "five;" so it will read:

If bleached, five and one half cents per square yard; if colored, stained, painted, or printed, four and one half cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, ten per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. This only preserves the present rate.

The CHAIRMAN ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. MORRILL and Mr. ANCONA.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 52, noes 50.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Ninth amendment:

Strike out "five" and insert "six;" so it will read:

Class 2. On finer or lighter goods of like description, not exceeding two hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, in the brown, gray, or unbleached condition, five cents per square yard; if bleached, five and one half cents per square yard; if colored, stained, painted, or printed, six and one half cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, fifteen per cent. ad valorem.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes 49.

Mr. MORRILL demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. AMES and Mr. RANDALL, of Kentucky, were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 56, noes 55.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Tenth amendment:

Strike out "satteen, jeans," and insert "satteen-jeans;" so it will read:

Class 4. On all other manufactures of cotton commonly sold or purchased by the yard or other lineal measure, or by the piece, comprising twills over four-leaved, satteen-jeans, nets, lappel, and Jacquard-made fabrics, damasked and figured fabrics, cords, beaverteens, velvets, velveteens, and fabrics embroidered or tamoured in the loom, not otherwise provided for, in the brown, gray, or unbleached condition, six cents per square yard; if bleached, colored, stained, painted, or printed, six cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, twenty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. It seems to be impossible to make the printers understand how this should be. There should be a hyphen between "satteen" and "jeans."

The amendment was agreed to.

Eleventh amendment:

In the following paragraph:

"Provided, That if the duties imposed upon manufactures of cotton included in the four foregoing classes shall amount upon brown, gray, or unbleached fabrics to less than thirty per cent. ad valorem, then the duty shall be assessed, at thirty per cent. ad valorem; upon bleached fabrics to less than thirty-three and one third per cent. ad valorem, then the duty shall be assessed at thirty-three and one third per cent. ad valorem," strike out "thirty-three and one third" and insert "thirty-five;" so it will read:

Upon bleached fabrics to less than thirty-five per cent. ad valorem, &c.

The CHAIRMAN ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. DAVES and Mr. ELDRIDGE.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 52, noes 55.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Twelfth amendment:

Strike out "thirty-three and one third" where it again occurs in the same paragraph, and insert "thirty-five."

Mr. MORRILL. This does not raise the duty on cotton the ninth part of a hair.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 58, noes 55.

Mr. KUYKENDALL called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. SPALDING and Mr. HUMPHREY were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 57, noes 57.

The CHAIRMAN voted in the affirmative. So the amendment was agreed to.

Thirteenth amendment:

Strike out "thirty-five" and insert "forty;" so that it will read: "upon colored, stained, painted, or printed fabrics to less than forty per cent. ad valorem."

On agreeing to the amendment there were—ayes 54, noes 55.

Mr. MORRILL called for tellers, but they were refused.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Fourteenth amendment:

Strike out "thirty-five" and insert "forty;" so that it will read: "then the duty shall be assessed at forty per cent. ad valorem."

On agreeing to the amendment there were—ayes 53, noes 55.

Mr. GARFIELD demanded tellers, but they were refused.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Fifteenth amendment:

Strike out the words "and on Marseilles bed-quilts or bed-spreads ten" and insert "twenty;" so that it will read:

On all cotton hosiery, comprising shirts, drawers, stockings, socks, gloves, and all other goods knitted or made on frames, or by hand, twenty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, forty per cent. ad valorem.

On agreeing to the amendment there were—ayes 61, noes 49.

Mr. FINCK demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. FINCK and HUBBARD, of Connecticut.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 55.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. ORTH. I move that the committee rise.

On agreeing to the motion there were—ayes 38, noes 55.

Mr. ORTH demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. ORTH and MOORHEAD.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 43, noes 60.

So the motion was disagreed to.

Sixteenth amendment:

Strike out "sixty" and insert "fifty;" so that it will read:

On cotton webbing, tapes, galloons, bindings, gimps, trimmings, and braids, plain or otherwise, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Seventeenth amendment:

Insert the words "not dyed or colored;" so that it will read:

On cotton edgings, insertings, and embroideries, not dyed or colored, of which the embroidering is the chief value, not otherwise provided for, forty per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Eighteenth amendment:

Add to the pending clause the words "when dyed or colored, forty-five per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I would inquire of the chairman of the committee what difference in the rate of the tariff this amendment proposes?

Mr. MORRILL. About fifteen per cent. I believe.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I think it is only ten per cent.

Mr. MAYNARD. Why should dyed or colored embroideries pay more duty than those not dyed?

Mr. MORRILL. These are finer articles; they have been allowed to remain from year to year at the old rates, and it is deemed proper if anything should be raised that the duty on these articles, which are used for ornament, should be.

Mr. HALE. Does the gentleman from Tennessee object because this makes a distinction as to race or color? [Laughter.]

Mr. MAYNARD. I would like to see wherein and wherefore the distinction is made.

The amendment was agreed to—ayes 57, noes 40.

Nineteenth amendment:

Strike out the words "at the last port or place" and insert "in the principal markets of the country;" so that it will read:

And upon wools of the first class, imported unwashed, the value whereof, in the principal markets of the country whence exported to the United States, &c.

On agreeing to the amendment there were—ayes 54, noes 9; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered under the rules; and Messrs. FINCK and FARNSWORTH were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 73, noes 15; no quorum voting.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers having reported no quorum voting, it is the duty of the Chair to have the roll called.

Mr. SLOAN. I understand the committee can rise without a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule is as follows, on page 62 of the Digest:

"Whenever the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union or the Committee of the Whole House finds itself without a quorum the Chairmanshall cause the roll of the House to be called, and thereupon the committee shall rise and the Chairman shall report the names of the absentees to the House, which shall be entered on the Journal."

The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was accordingly called; and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Ancona, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Bidwell, Blaine, Blow, Boyer, Brandegee, Bromwell, Campbell, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Culver, Darling, Dawson, Denison, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Ferry, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hayes, Hogan, Asabel W. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jones, Kerr, Le Blond, Leftwich, Marshall, Marston, McCullough, McIndoe, McKuer, Miller, Moulton, Nowell, Niblack, Noell, Patterson, Phelps, Plants, Radford, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Sawyer, Sloan, Stevens, Stilwell, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thornton, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Windom, and Wright.

The committee then rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. POMEROY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and finding itself without a quorum had caused the roll to be called, and had directed him to report the names of the absentees to the House.

A quorum being now present, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed its session.

Mr. FINCK. I move that the House now adjourn.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order: the committee was dividing when the committee rose, and the tellers will now resume their places.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. The call is withdrawn, and I now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. POMEROY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at ten o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. BROOMALL: The petition of citizens of the United States residing in Delaware county, Pennsylvania, praying for the impeachment of the President of the United States.

By Mr. CHANLER: The petition of Joshua H. Butterworth, of Dover, New Jersey, for extension of his patent of Butterworth lock.

By Mr. CULLOM: Two petitions signed by numerous citizens of McLean county, Illinois, protesting against the contraction of the currency.

By Mr. GRISWOLD: The petition of wool-growers of the town of Nassau, Rensselaer county, New York, upon the subject of protection for wool.

By Mr. HUBBARD, of New York: The petition of citizens of Milford, in the county of Otsego, in the State of New York, praying that Congress will not pass any law to contract the currency, or to compel the national banks to redeem their bills in the city of New York, or to prohibit them from receiving interest on bank balances.

By Mr. KASSON: The petition of the National Bank Note Company of New York, for authority to Postmaster General to settle the accounts of that Department with them on principles of equity.

By Mr. O'NEILL: A petition signed, by direction and in behalf of the committee having charge of Friends' Library of Philadelphia, by Samuel F. Trott, clerk, asking that books, &c., imported for libraries and public institutions may be admitted free of duty.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 27, 1867.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BORTON. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

RESTAURANT IN THE CAPITOL.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution, relative to the House restaurant:

Resolved, That the privilege of keeping the restaurant of the House shall be determined as follows: proposals therefor shall be received by the Clerk of the House up to the noon of Tuesday, March 12, 1867, and biennially thereafter, and shall be opened by him in the presence of two witnesses, and be by him awarded to the most suitable person, having also reference to both the money offered for the privilege and the capacity of the bidder for the business. Accompanying the proposals must be the names of one or more persons who are willing to become sureties in the sum of $1,000 for the faithful performance of the duties of said keeper, and possession of the premises shall be given by the Clerk to said bidder on his executing a bond in the sum of $1,000, with sufficient sureties, for the faithful discharge of his duties and for the careful use of the property of the Government intrusted to him; and the amount of money thus bid and accepted shall be paid to the Clerk, one half on the first Monday of the December next after the date of the bond, and the residue six months thereafter; and the money so received shall be by said Clerk paid to the Treasurer of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Home, for the benefit of said institution.

Mr. SPALDING. I object.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to suspend the rules, so as to enable me to offer the resolution; and I wish to say that I offer this resolution not for the purpose of taking away the management of this matter from the Speaker, but with his assent and consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, if he may be allowed to do so, would state that from the experience which he has had as presiding officer of the House during the last two Congresses he believes that whoever may be Speaker of the Fortieth Congress will much prefer that this matter should be in the hands of the administrative officer of the House, the Clerk, rather than in those of the Speaker, as it is entirely incongruous with the general duties of the Chair.

Mr. STEVENS. I think the privilege ought to be paid for, not given away.

The question was taken upon Mr. STEVENS's amendment; and (two thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended.

Mr. FINCK. Is that a joint resolution?

The SPEAKER. No; it is a House resolution.

Mr. FINCK. I rise to a point of order. I submit that we cannot make a law authorizing a contract by a mere resolution of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. The keeper of the restaurant in this wing of the Capitol building is under the control of the House. The appointment of the keeper of it has heretofore been given to the Speaker; but, as the Chair has just said, he thinks that it is entirely incongruous with his other duties, and not a matter upon which the Speaker of the House ought to be expected to decide.

Mr. THAYER. I ask my colleague whether in his opinion under his resolution the House would still retain control of this establishment, and whether, in case it should be improperly managed, it would be in the power of the House to discharge the keeper of the restaurant?

Mr. STEVENS. Undoubtedly; and to forfeit his bond.

Mr. THAYER. It strikes me that this would be in the nature of a contract.

Mr. STEVENS. The House would have full control over it, and his bond could be forfeited.

Mr. THAYER. I think it would be much safer for us to insert a proviso that the matter shall be subject to the control of the House.

Mr. STEVENS. I accept that; I see no objection to it.

Mr. NIBLACK. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] where the money is to go which we are to require the person to pay for the privilege of keeping this restaurant?

Mr. STEVENS. The resolution provides that it shall go to the Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Asylum.

Mr. NIBLACK. I submit that whatever tax we impose upon the keeper of this restaurant will be likely in the end to come out of our own pockets, and therefore we ought to look after the matter a little. If the man shall be a good business man I suppose he will charge over to us all the tax we make him pay for the privilege, illustrating the old principle that the consumer must pay the tax.

Mr. STEVENS. I have modified it so that it will at all times be under the control of the House. I now call the previous question.

The question was taken upon seconding the previous question; and upon a division, there were—ayes 40, noes 23; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. STEVENS and Mr. NIBLACK were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 60, noes 36.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was ordered, which was upon agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. FINCK. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and there were—ayes fourteen, not one fifth of the last vote.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. ANCONA. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I call for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The question was upon ordering the yeas and nays upon the motion to lay the resolution on the table; and being taken, there were—ayes fifteen, not one fifth of the last full vote.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion to lay the resolution on the table was not agreed to.

The resolution was then agreed to.

Mr. GRINNELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ASSAY OFFICES.

Mr. KASSON. I ask unanimous consent to report, from the Committee on a uniform system of Coinage, Weights, and Measures, a bill to establish certain offices for the assay of gold and silver, in lieu of certain branch mints heretofore established. The bill is in accordance with the recommendation of the Treasury Department, and I ask leave to report it now, as the committee will not be again called this session.

Mr. ANCONA. Let the bill be read. I will reserve my right to object until after I have heard it read.

The bill was read. The first section requires the Secretary of the Treasury to establish assay offices of the United States for the receipt and for the melting, assaying, and stamping of gold and silver at Denver, in Colorado, at Charlotte, in North Carolina, and at Dahlonega, in Georgia; and it appropriates the sum of $5,000 for the purchase and repairs of buildings at the branch mint at Charlotte, and the same sum for the same purpose at Dahlonega, to carry out the provisions of this section.

The second section provides that as soon as the public interest shall require the services of such officers, the President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for each of said assay offices, one superintendent, who shall perform the duties of assayer, and one treasurer, who shall perform the duties of melter; and the superintendent shall employ one clerk for his assistant, and three workmen and one watchman, if in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury such services shall be required. The salaries for such officers shall be as follows: for the superintendent and assayer, $2,500 a year; for the treasurer and melter, $2,500 a year; for the clerk and assistant, $1,800 a year; and the subordinates and workmen shall be paid such wages as may be determined upon by the superintendent and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; provided that such compensation shall not exceed such wages and allowances as are customary, according to their respective trades and occupations.

The third section provides that the officers and clerks to be appointed under this act, before entering upon the execution of their offices, shall take oath or affirmation before some judge of a court of the United States or of the supreme court of the Territory, as now provided by law, faithfully and diligently to perform the duties of their respective offices; and shall each become bound to the United States of America, with one or more sureties, to the satisfaction of the Director of the Mint or the Secretary of the Treasury, conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties of their offices.

The fourth section provides that the business of said offices shall be under the general control and direction of the Director of the Mint at Philadelphia, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and for this purpose it is made the duty of the Director to prescribe such regulations and require such returns and to establish such charges for melting, assaying, and stamping as shall appear to him necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

The fifth section proposes to enact that the assay offices shall be places of deposit for public moneys, if in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury it shall be expedient; and the treasurer thereof is to have the custody of such moneys as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct, and for that purpose he is to be subject to such provisions of an act to provide for the better organization of the Treasury and for the collection, safe-keeping, transfer, and disbursement of the public revenue, approved August 6, 1846, as relate to the Treasury and to the branch mint at New Orleans.

The sixth section provides that the owner or owners of any gold or silver in bullion, dust, or other form, or of any foreign coin, shall be entitled to deposit the same in any of said offices; and the treasurer is to give a receipt stating the weight and description of such gold or silver, bullion, dust, or coin as aforesaid, in the manner and under such regulations as are or may be provided in like cases of deposits at the Mint of the United States. And such bullion, dust, or coin is without delay to be melted, assayed, and cast into bars or ingots, on which shall be stamped the name of the assay office, the number of the deposit from the first day of each year, its weight and fineness and value in each metal; and in this form the bullion shall be returned to the depositor upon payment by him of the established charges of the office.

The seventh section proposes to enact that all laws and parts of laws now in force for the regulation of the Mint of the United States and its branches, and for the government of officers and persons employed therein, and for the punishment of all offenses connected therewith shall be in full force in relation to the assay offices established by this act so far as the same may be applicable thereto.

The eighth section provides for the repeal of an act to establish a branch mint at Denver, Colorado Territory, approved April 21, 1862, and an act to establish branches of the Mint of the United States, approved March 3, 1835, so far as the latter relates to the branch mints at Charlotte and Dahlonega.

The ninth section proposes to authorize and require the Secretary of the Treasury to remove the machinery and implements belonging to the United States mint for the purpose of coinage in the branch mints at Charlotte and Dahlonega to the Mint at Philadelphia; but he may authorize the retention of such portion of the property, buildings, and machinery at either of those places as may be necessary for the purpose of assaying metals, as provided by this act.

Mr. ANCONA. I hope that the gentleman does not propose that a bill like this shall be considered without the privilege of discussion.

Mr. SPALDING. I renew my demand for the regular order of business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order during the morning hour is the call of committees for reports, commencing with the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. BANKS obtained the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] to yield to me that I may move to postpone the morning hour until we have considered in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. BANKS. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to postpone the commencement of the morning hour until after the consideration in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I object to the postponement of the morning hour if that involves the postponement of the tariff bill.

The motion of Mr. STEVENS was agreed to; and the morning hour was postponed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1176) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1868.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1174) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1868.

On motion of Mr. STEVENS, by unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with, and the bill was read by clauses for amendment.

The Clerk read the following:

Navy-yard at Philadelphia:

For Bulkley's patent drier, with buildings complete, $35,000.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I move to amend by striking out the clause just read.

Mr. DAVIS. I rise to oppose the amendment. I have no personal interest in this matter; but I know that by the use of this invention the Navy Department has saved a great many thousand dollars. It is essential to the interests of the Government to have perfectly seasoned timber; and it is often necessary to obtain it within a short time; hence the utility of this drier.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I would like to know whether the gentleman from New York knows what this patent-drier is like? I come from a timber country and know something about it.

Mr. DAVIS. It is a process by which timber is cured in a very short time.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I hope it will not be struck out. The committee will notice the appropriations for the Philadelphia navy-yard are very small; and I have the authority of the Department for saying it is very desirable this patent-drier should be established in connection with that navy-yard.

Mr. MYERS. I hope the House will concur with the Committee on Appropriations. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] seems to have no good reason against it, while the Department and the committee inform us there are many good reasons for it.

Mr. STEVENS. The Committee on Appropriations investigated this subject with considerable care. It is a most remarkable process, by which timber in one or two days receives a seasoning that in the ordinary way would require one or two years. There is a great lack of room at the navy-yard at Philadelphia. The necessary seasoning of timber there now cannot be done, and the officers concerned in the drying of timber say this is necessary. They say this process seasons timber, not in years or months, but in days, and is a great saving in every way. I am sure if my colleague considered it he would not oppose this appropriation.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I have no doubt this mode of seasoning timber is a good one. When I put the question to my friend from New York I suspected men interested in this had told him this is a good process and he took it for granted without knowing what the process is. What I allege is this process of drying timber by heated air and steam, by either or by both, does not belong to this man, and he has no right to monopolize it, for it is a process older than he is years of age. It was known before he was born. We have, therefore, the right to use it at Philadelphia or anywhere else without paying for its use. They are now using it in my district. Private individuals are now and have been drying timber in the same way.

Mr. STEVENS. This appropriation is not all for this patent drier, but also for the buildings indicated.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I do not know what the buildings are worth, but I suppose not more than $2,500, and the rest of the $35,000 goes for the patent drier.

Mr. PIKE. I think the Committee on Appropriations have forgotten the House passed a bill, which the Senate has concurred in and the President approved, removing the navy-yard from Philadelphia to League Island. This is a proposition for buildings which will have to be taken down and sold almost immediately on the transfer of the yard. I suggest the amendment be struck out and put in some subsequent bill for League Island navy-yard.

Mr. KASSON. Let the contest on the part of the gentleman from Philadelphia should lead to the impression this is a Pennsylvania enterprise, I beg leave to say this subject has been examined by the Committee on Appropriations as carefully as possible. My own conviction is the public service requires the introduction of this patent drier into every navy-yard. In my judgment there ought to be an appropriation for Charlestown navy-yard and Brooklyn navy-yard. Lumber which has to lie in the yards one and two years to become properly seasoned for use, by this machinery or process is seasoned in a few days. It is a great economy of time and room, and we besides save the interest on the money invested for one or two years. For these reasons I have advocated, with Rear Admiral Smith, of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, the introduction of this process into our navy-yards. I know in one instance where a piece of square timber had been in process of curing for over a year this machine has reduced it several pounds in weight in twenty-four hours.

Mr. SCOFIELD. The gentleman calls it a process, a mysterious word, when there is nothing more about it than steam or heated air which has been applied time out of mind.

Mr. KASSON. The proper department has issued a patent, and if he is not entitled to it that fact I suppose will be shown.

This appropriation, however, is for all the buildings, steam-machinery, and all the requisite instrumentalities for the process. It is for the drier, with buildings complete; that includes all the machinery.

The question being put on the amendment of Mr. SCOFIELD, there were—ayes 46, noes 26; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. SCOFIELD and RANDALL, of Pennsylvania.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 67, noes 29.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I move to insert after the clause "for repairs of all kinds, $80,000" the following:

And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to receive and accept a deed or gift, when offered by the State of Connecticut, of a tract of land situated on the Thames river, near New London, Connecticut, with a water front of not less than one mile, to be held by the United States for naval purposes.

I conceive that there can be no objection to this proposition.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KUYKENDALL. I move to insert the following:

Naval station at Mound City, Illinois:

For repairs and general care of public property, $10,000.

I have the consent of the committee to offer this and the advice of the Department if necessary. There are about one hundred and seventy-five hands there at work all the time. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to insert the following after the appropriation for furniture and repairs of the Naval Asylum at Philadelphia:

For the purchase of books, under the direction of the governor of the asylum, for the increase of the sailors' library in that institution, $1,000.

I will explain in a word the object of this amendment. There are in the Naval Asylum at Philadelphia about one hundred old sailors; many of them armless and legless; all more or less decrepit. They have attached to the institution now a little library made up of various contributions; and any one who visits this institution will find some forty or fifty of the inmates on any day sitting in the reading-room and reading books thus supplied to them, so well thumbed that they are now nearly worn out. When I visited the asylum a short time since the tears fairly started from the eyes of the old veterans upon my suggesting to them I would ask Congress to increase somewhat their library; for they said they had read over and over again the few books they had.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of superintendents and the civil establishment at the several navy-yards and stations under control of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, and at the Naval Asylum, $153,967.

Mr. BANKS. I move to add to the paragraph just read the following proviso:

Provided, That the offices of civil engineer, master machinist, master carpenter, master joiner, master blacksmith, master boiler-maker, master sail-maker, master plumber, master painter, master caulker, master laborer, and naval storekeepers be, and the same are hereby, established in connection with the navy-yards at Kittery, Maine; Charlestown, Massachusetts; Brooklyn, New York; Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; and Washington, District of Columbia. And that the persons selected to fill the several offices hereby established shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and shall have the immediate supervision and direction of the work to be performed in their several departments, with authority to select and to discharge such workmen as the necessities of the service may require, subject always to the approval of the commandant of the navy-yard to which they are attached.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Before the gentleman advocates this proposition I would like to ask if it is in order to move that as an amendment to this bill, whether it is not legislation appended to an appropriation bill?

Mr. BANKS. It does not change the law at all. It is declaratory, and it is, moreover, substantially the same measure that passed this House a week or two since. It is designed to prevent a practice, which has grown up in all the yards, of placing the mechanics of the yards under the direction and superintendence of warrant-officers of the Navy. That practice is not in conformity with the law, but against it, and it is against the uniform practice in the Government until recently.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I understand it makes no additional offices.

Mr. BANKS. No, sir; it makes no additional offices.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Does it involve any increase of pay?

Mr. BANKS. It makes no change in the pay.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I raise no objection. I withdraw the point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I offer the following amendment to come in after the amendment just adopted:

For pay of some suitable person appointed by the Secretary of the Navy to examine the archives of the Department and other sources of information, and collect and collate the facts which may illustrate the history of the United States Navy, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For preparing for publication the American Nautical Almanac, $15,000.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I would inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if this appropriation of $15,000 is the usual annual appropriation?

Mr. STEVENS. It is what we always give.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Then I make no objection.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I move to insert after line eighty-nine the following:

For payment of expenses of Visitors to the Naval Academy, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANLER. I move to strike out the following clause:

Bureau of Construction and Repair:

For pay of superintendents and the civil establishment at the several navy-yards under this bureau, $63,000.

I move to strike out this clause, because until the whole system of the Navy Department is reorganized the civil appointments are given to none but political pets, and are made for the purpose of maintaining certain lazy politicians in places, not for the public welfare, not to aid in the construction or equipment of our fleet, but to provide certain persons who are useful on election day with easy berths and nice, comfortable boats in which to float off into eternity. [Laughter.]

Now, sir, there is no greater source of moral and political corruption in the neighborhood of our large cities, where these navy-yards have been established, than these superintendencies of the civil service in the navy-yards. I have from time to time received information from men employed in these yards of the system established therein, a system of hush-money and corruption for appropriating secretly and dishonestly, not only of the materials furnished for the equipment of our fleet and for the work in the yards, but even appropriating the labor of the humblest laborers to do the private jobs of these superintendents under compulsion. That, sir, is the established system throughout this country, and every gentleman who has examined into the subject must be aware of that fact.

I do not expect, in the face of the organization established in this House, to strike out this clause, but I do hope to awaken the attention of the country to that very sleepy influence which is excited over the equipment of the Navy by the Secretary of the Navy. That gentleman's apparent indifference to the development of improper practices among subordinates of that Department in which he is to a great extent responsible for all that is done is not only charming but philosophical. I respect that bland and patient adherence to duty which does not see the shortcomings of inferiors. It reminds one of Neptune slumbering amid a storm. The Secretary of the Navy, with a sublime smile upon his face, sits in the Sleepy Hollow of his office, like the own brother of Jupiter Riden, looking over, or rather overlooking, a system of corruption throughout this country, with a blessed somnolence unequalled in the annals of any department on earth or in Olympus. Why, sir, the gentleman from Brooklyn has to look to it how the different machinists and the men in the civil employment in this Department are going to act in the election when there is to be an election for Representative to Congress from his district. When they want to elect a sheriff in Brooklyn they sometimes take a popular carpenter in the yard. That has been done within my own experience, and wherever political machinery can be brought to bear on the minds and sentiments of the voters employed in the yard it is done without the least regard to the welfare of the Navy.

It is done simply for the purpose of filling this House with right-minded men, men who are such admirable navigators that they can steer their way successfully among all the rocks, shoals, and quicksands of the political current, so they may reach this haven of their political aspiration. That is the object of this superintendent of the civil bureau of construction and equipment as recorded by the votes of the creatures of those superintendents.

So long as we here are indifferent to this corruption, so long will the people of this country hold in disrespect and disregard these Government establishments at the different navy-yards; and you will find that the active, industrious, intelligent mechanic will be the last man to apply for an appointment in any of our navy-yards. He knows that he receives a certain taint and that his manhood will undergo some degree of suppression the moment he is enrolled upon this civil list in these yards. He must go through a system of corruption, the stain of which will attach to him when he leaves the yard, and for the purpose of maintaining his reputation the best class workmen will keep away from the yard, and the consequence is, and the fact has become proverbial all over the country, that the largest pay is given by the Government for the smallest and worst work in the Government yards.

Now, sir, while I am on this subject I would refer to the necessity both for the workmen and for the community where those yards are established of removing them from the neighborhood of our great cities. I think the movement in reference to League Island was in the right direction. The further you can get these public works from the great cities and still keep them within accessible distance for the working class the better for the people and for the Government. They should be located where the men can be kept engaged in the active employment of their various occupations for the benefit of the Government and not be retained as political pack-hounds to hunt at the cry and bugle of certain political leaders, and it would be desirable if we could organize these public works in such a way that any master workman, or any superintendent connected with these navy-yards who shall dare directly or indirectly to endeavor to affect the vote of a single citizen shall be on proof immediately discharged from his position.

Mr. STEVENS. All I can say in reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANLER] is that these officers exist now by authority of law; and the only way to get rid of making appropriations for them I think is to repeal the law; and that we do not propose to do.

I have not time, at this stage of the session, to enable me to go into much discussion of this subject. I therefore move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate on this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1167, making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1868, and had directed him to report that they had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that when this House again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole upon the special order all general debate be closed in one minute.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 1176, making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1868.

The pending question was upon the motion of Mr. CHANLER, to amend the bill by striking out the following:

Bureau of Construction and Repair:
For pay of superintendents and the civil establishment at the several navy-yards under this bureau, $63,000.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move pro forma to amend by striking out the last word in the clause last read. I make this motion for the purpose of inquiring of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations why the appropriation for preparing for publication the American Nautical Almanac has been reduced from $25,000, at which sum it has stood for a great many years, to $15,000, almost one half. Has there been any change made in the manner of preparing that work, so as to reduce the expense?

Mr. STEVENS. There was so much opposition to this item that the committee thought they would reduce it to the lowest possible sum.

Mr. MAYNARD. Was it reduced upon conference with the Bureau of Navigation having charge of this subject, or was it done by the committee upon their own responsibility?

Mr. STEVENS. It was done by the committee.

Mr. MAYNARD. I withdraw my pro forma amendment, and move, if I can have permission to do so, to go back and amend the item to which I have referred by increasing the amount to $25,000.

The CHAIRMAN. That will require unanimous consent.

Mr. STEVENS. I think we cannot agree to that.

The Clerk read the following:

For repairs of barracks, and rent of offices where there are no public buildings, $15,000.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I move to amend by inserting after the clause just read the following:

For rebuilding one wing of the Marine barracks at Washington, District of Columbia, $65,000.

Mr. SCOFIELD. This is a very large sum. I should suppose that if this expenditure had been at all proper the committee would have recommended it.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Since the bill came in, my attention has been called to the dilapidated condition of the Marine barracks connected with the navy-yard at this city, and the absolute necessity for some improved accommodation, not only for the convenience and comfort, but for the health of the marines stationed at this place. It would require some one hundred and thirty-eight thousand dollars to put these barracks in entire repair, and to extend them on a scale that will probably be required to meet the future wants of this branch of the service. I hold in my hand letters from the chief medical officer in charge of these barracks, and also from the quartermaster, setting forth in detail the necessity for this improvement. If gentlemen desire to hear these letters they can be read.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I move pro forma to amend the amendment by reducing the amount from $65,000 to $60,000.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know where all this money is to come from. The tax bill which we have lately had under consideration will diminish our revenues for the coming year, and our appropriation bills, I should judge, are larger than they have ever been before. Now, when these appropriation bills come along, I begin to understand what this House meant the other day when it agreed to issue $100,000,000 additional greenbacks. Our taxes are to be lessened, our expenses enlarged, and the deficiency is to be made up by a new issue of legal-tender notes.

Mr. O'NEILL. When the gentleman speaks of those $100,000,000 of greenbacks, does he recollect what is to be done with the compound-interest notes to the same amount?

Mr. SCOFIELD. I recollect all about the compound-interest notes. I am not particularly condemning the policy which the gentleman supports. I suppose that we can pay all our debts—

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a question of order, and submit that compound-interest notes have nothing to do with this discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Does the Chair hold that in order to show that we should not make an appropriation of $65,000 at this time, I am not to be permitted to refer to our diminishing revenue from taxes and our increasing expenses to show that we may not have the means of paying these large appropriations?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not so held. The Chair sustained the point of order raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.]

Mr. SCOFIELD. I was just going to say that I do not particularly censure the course of my colleague upon the $100,000,000 bill. I suppose that if we pay off all our indebtedness in legal-tender notes and abolish all the taxes the country would get along a great deal better; but inasmuch as I presume that policy will not be entered upon at present, and inasmuch as we have already determined very properly to reduce the taxes, I think we should endeavor in some way to curtail our expenses.

Mr. LYNCH. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether he proposes to increase our revenue by paying the banks $5,000,000 of gratuity for holding our bonds?

Mr. SCOFIELD. No, sir; I will vote to pay them in "greenbacks," and I do not know but I will go the whole length and pay all of our indebtedness in "greenbacks."

I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL. I do not think it is frank or fair toward the citizens of the country for a gentleman to rise in his seat and make the statement my colleague has made. I should have preferred him to say the $100,000,000 of "greenbacks" was to take the place of the $100,000,000 of compound-interest notes which were withdrawn or retired. As he stated it the country would get the impression that we were increasing the currency, when such is not the fact.

Mr. MORRILL. I make the point of order this debate is not pertinent to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. KASSON. I move to reduce the appropriation $1,000, to say a word. In my judgment this will initiate a large expenditure for the entire rebuilding of these Marine barracks. The subject was presented to the Committee on Appropriations, and for two reasons the committee have declined to make any recommendation on the subject: one that it was not proper to introduce it into a bill of this kind without the fullest examination of what is to be the entire cost; and the other was they deemed it improper, so soon after the close of the war, and while the public debt remained unsettled, to commence a work involving so large an expenditure. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. The estimates are that the entire cost will be $138,000; that is, for rebuilding these barracks. I call attention to the following letters on the subject:

HEADQUARTERS MARINE CORPS,
QUARTERMASTER'S OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, February 25, 1867.

SIR: I have the honor to present for your consideration, the propriety of your asking an appropriation to construct one wing of the Marine barracks, at Washington, District of Columbia. In the plan and estimate of cost of the reconstruction of the entire barracks submitted to, and approved by, the Navy Department, the sum of $138,900 was required; but as, under any circumstances, only one wing at a time could be erected, an appropriation of, say, $65,000 would meet the immediate wants of the service. I am induced to bring this subject to your notice from the present dilapidated condition of the barracks, and the responsibility I feel as quartermaster to do all in my power to provide suitable quarters for the accommodation of the men. Of the fact that the present condition of these barracks offers but little protection for the health and comfort of the men, it will only be necessary for any one to go and examine them to be satisfied; and in this connection I inclose copy of a letter from the medical officer of the post.

Trusting that the importance of the above matter will be a sufficient excuse for my bringing it to your notice at this time,

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. B. SLACK,

Quartermaster Marine Corps.

Hon. ALEXANDER H. RICE,
Chairman Naval Committee, House of Representatives.

Approved and forwarded:

J. ZEILIN, Colonel Commandant.

HEADQUARTERS MARINE BARRACKS,
WASHINGTON, February 14, 1867.

SIR: Your letter of February 2, "asking whether, in a sanitary point of view, the reconstruction of the Marine barracks is really required for the future health and comfort of the men" has been received.

In reply, I beg leave to state that I consider the present barracks as unsuited for the accommodation of the force usually occupying them. The rooms are small, cannot be properly warmed or ventilated, and have none of the modern conveniences of barracks, such as rooms for cleaning arms, accoutrements, wash-rooms, &c.

To show how much they are crowded, room number four is thirty-seven feet long, twenty-three feet wide, and thirteen feet high, has eleven thousand and sixty-three cubic feet of air; in it thirty-eight men are quartered, giving to each two hundred and ninety-one cubic feet of air, whereas there should be at least eight or nine hundred cubic feet per man. The men are obliged to wash in the open air in all weathers. The arrangement of the latrines, night urinals, and the drainage of the present building is defective.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

L. J. WILLIAMS,

Surgeon United States Navy.

Colonel J. ZEILIN, Commandant United States Marine Corps, Headquarters Washington.

Mr. KASSON, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment to the amendment. The amendment was then disagreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to insert the following:

Provided, That the American Nautical Almanac be printed at the Government Printing Office, and that the entire expense of preparing it for publication be $25,000, and no more.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. The gentleman may not be aware it is now printed there.

Mr. MAYNARD. I introduce this proposition at the instance of the chairman of the Committee on Printing. There is great propriety in the work being done there. I have often heard the statement by the gentleman who I understand has been reappointed Superintendent of Public Printing that the work could be as well, if not better, done there. If it is done there now this amendment will do no harm, but will be only a formal expression of our wish.

One word in reference to the amount. To economize on this seems to be economizing in a bad place. This, as is well known, is a work of rare scientific character, involving the aspects of the heavenly bodies for the purpose of being used by nautical men in the naval and commercial marine. Few persons are able to prepare it. Its value depends upon its accuracy, for otherwise it is worse than useless and becomes a snare.

Besides, it is a work that goes all over the commercial world, and one that presents our scientific attainments to the eyes of all the other nations. This sum, $25,000, has been the constant appropriation until I believe the last Congress, when it was raised to $25,825. I trust the Committee on Appropriations will concur in letting it stand where it has been for a long time until the last session, when it was reduced to $15,000. I had occasion to examine into this matter several years ago, when I was a member of this House. It was a subject that was much discussed, and some gentlemen attacked it with great severity; but I became satisfied that it was an expenditure that was very wise and economical. I trust the House will let it stand as it is.

Mr. KASSON. The estimate made for this year and submitted to the committee was less than that proposed now by the gentleman from Tennessee. I think the estimate was $21,200. I concur with the gentleman that it is an important publication, and in providing the requisite means for it, and if we could go back I would have no objection to substituting $21,000 for $15,000. But the amendment proposed by the gentleman is objectionable in two particulars. In the first place, the arrangements he proposes have already taken effect, and in the second place he asks more than the estimate that was submitted to us. Unless, therefore, we can go back and make the change I hope the amendment will be rejected; and if the amount is too small let it be corrected in the Senate.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to strike out the last word for the sake of replying to the gentleman. I think he will find, on looking at the estimate presented at the last session, that it was $25,825, and the House reduced it to $15,825. Now, the estimate submitted this year has been made under a pressure occasioned by our legislation in the last Congress, showing a disposition to reduce it to the very lowest point that it was possible to reduce it in accordance with the judgment of Congress, and coming as near as possible to what was regarded as the sentiment of the House.

Mr. KASSON. That is very doubtful pressure.

Mr. MAYNARD. I understand and appreciate it. We are told on high authority that "there is that withholdeth more than is meet and tendeth to poverty." This is a matter of necessity; it is not economy; it is penuriousness and parsimony.

[Here he hammered fell.]

The amendment of Mr. MAYNARD was disagreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I move to add the following as an additional section:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to use any sums heretofore appropriated for naval purposes remaining unexpended for such repairs and improvements at the several navy-yards as have been estimated for and for which appropriations are not herein provided.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to inquire how far the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Rice] intends to go back and authorize the use of any unexpended balances heretofore appropriated? There seems to be no limit according to the gentleman's amendment. I would like some explanation.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I observe by examining this bill that the estimates for the general appropriations for expenditures of the navy-yards amounted to $7,712,075, and that the Committee on Appropriations have cut it down by about seven million dollars, leaving it $707,663 in place of $7,712,075.

Now, it must be apparent to anybody and everybody that the naval establishment cannot be carried on upon that sum of money. I have had no desire to contest these appropriations as we have progressed with the bill, and the purpose of the amendment which I have now offered is, that the Secretary of the Navy may make use of any surplus funds that he has on hand, if he have any such, and may expend them in carrying on the navy-yards in the particulars for which estimates were made by the Department for the coming fiscal year. That is all there is of it.

Mr. KASSON. I hope the gentleman will so modify his amendment as to include only the balances of sums of money heretofore appropriated and not lapsed into the Treasury by the expiration of time. I think that would probably be the construction of the amendment as now offered, but I prefer to make it certain.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I have no objection to that.

Mr. PIKE. I ask that the amendment may be again read.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. PIKE. I ask the gentleman to state what amount of money this involves.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I cannot say exactly. I stated when I was upon the floor before that the estimates for these objects amounted to $7,712,000; but the committee have cut out the $7,000,000 and have left only the $712,000. I do not know how much may be necessary to be expended in carrying on the naval establishment for the next year; but the amendment which I have offered is intended to give the Department the privilege of expending any surplus that they have on hand and that has not lapsed into the Treasury, in carrying on the naval establishment according to the estimates made by the Department for the next fiscal year.

Mr. PIKE. I merely wanted the House to be made aware of the nature of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts. If I understand it, it would involve the full amount that the committee have cut out, $7,000,000, the amount of the appropriations to the various navy-yards, South and North, and for other naval purposes, which were recommended by the Department and which the Committee on Appropriations struck out. If the House choose to vote for it, now that they understand it, the responsibility is theirs and not mine.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I wish to say that these sums are only for the ordinary and customary expenditures of the Department, which have never before been rejected to my knowledge during the eight years that I have been here.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I move to amend by striking out the last word. It seems to me that if there is any merit in this amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts we should have the items that we are asked to appropriate set forth, and also the objects for which they are to be appropriated.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. The gentleman will find them all in the estimates made by the Department.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Very likely, if we had time to hunt up those estimates; but I think that these items and objects ought to be set forth in the bill. As it is, we are to vote in the dark; we do not know how many millions we may be voting away, nor do we know how those millions are to be applied. If the gentleman wants us to vote intelligently upon this proposition let him present the items. If he does that we can vote intelligently; otherwise, I hope that this proposition be voted down.

Mr. CHANLER. I offer a substitute, which I wish to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That any superintendent or other person employed in the navy-yards of the United States be, and are hereby, forbidden to take any part, directly or indirectly, in the political questions of the day while in the employment of the United States Government; but such employes and superintendents are not hereby to be deprived of their full rights as citizens to vote at all elections established by law.

Mr. MAYNARD. Without distinction of race or color? [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. I rise to a point of order; that the amendment is not germane to the subject under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CHANLER. I offer this as an amendment.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I desire to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOFIELD,] that I have before me the items about which he desires information and which are covered by the amendment that I have offered.

Mr. ALLEY. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word, for the purpose of saying that I hope my colleague will be allowed to state what those items are. For one, I am entirely unwilling to vote for his amendment in the dark. If the items which his amendment will embrace are of such a character that we can properly and consistently vote for it, I will give his amendment my support. But without some further information upon the subject I cannot reconcile it with my duty to vote for his amendment.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. It is very well known that the various Departments of the Government, before the assembling of each session of Congress, make up and send to the Secretary of the Treasury estimates of the amounts of money required for their respective Departments. That was done this year by the different bureaus of the Navy Department; they made their returns of estimates to the Secretary of the Navy, who transmitted them to the Secretary of the Treasury; and the items called for by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] will be found in the Estimates of Appropriations for the coming year; and if it is desired, I will send to the Clerk's desk and have read so much of the Estimates of Appropriations as is covered by my amendment. It will be found on pages 112, 113, and 114 of the volume which I hold in my hand. It is nothing more nor less than giving in detail the ordinary wants of these bureaus of the Navy Department. As I said before, the estimates of the Department amount to over seven million seven hundred thousand dollars.

Now, the Committee of Ways and Means, without assigning any reason so far as I have heard, have struck out the sum of $7,000,000 of these estimates. As I have been informed, the committee have not called upon the Navy Department for one particle of information as to whether those items of appropriation are really needed or not. They say that only $700,000 is needed to carry on the naval establishments of this country, when the Department themselves say they need over seven million dollars.

Mr. ALLEY. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts; and being taken, it was not agreed to.

Mr. CHANLER. I now offer the following amendment as an additional section:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That all superintendents or other persons employed in the navy-yards of the United States are hereby forbidden to take any part, directly or indirectly, in the political questions of the parties of the day while in the employment of the United States Government; but such employes and superintendents are not hereby to be deprived of their full right as citizens to vote at all elections established by law.

Mr. KASSON. I rise to a point of order: that this is new legislation and not in order in an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that the proposed amendment if adopted will change any existing law. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. BANKS. I rise to another point of order: that this amendment is an abridgment of the freedom of speech, and therefore prohibited by the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CHANLER. Of course it is; but I expect it is a very different kind of speech from any made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS.]

Mr. MAYNARD. I make another point of order: that under the resolution of the House of the last session this is one of those things which should be referred to the joint Committee on Reconstruction without debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules that point of order.

Mr. CHANLER. That was very well put by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD,] who seems to have reconstruction on the brain.

Now, the object of my amendment is not to interfere in the least with my highly honored friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS.] It does not in any way tend to impair the condition of the happy family which now controls the political organization in the navy-yards of the country. My object is to prevent—

Mr. BINGHAM. I rise to a point of order; and I ask that the proposition presented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANLER] be again read, to enable me to state my point of order correctly.

The Clerk again read the amendment of Mr. CHANLER.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon hearing the amendment of the gentleman from New York again read the Chair perceives that he was in error in his former ruling. He now rules that the amendment is not in order, upon the ground stated by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] that it is new legislation in an appropriation bill.

Mr. CHANLER. It applies to that portion of the bill embraced under the heading of "Bureau of Construction and Repairs."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled the amendment out of order.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to amend the bill by adding to it the following:

That so much of section four of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1867," approved April 17, 1866, as repeals any part of section two of the act entitled "An act to regulate the pay of the Navy of the United States," approved March 3, 1835, is hereby repealed, and section two of the act last aforesaid is hereby revived and restored.

Mr. KASSON. I am obliged to make the point of order that this amendment proposes new legislation, changing existing laws, and is therefore not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I now offer an amendment substantially similar to that which I offered a while ago; but I have so modified it as to obviate, I think, the objection which was then made. I have added a proviso that the sum expended shall not exceed the estimates for the next fiscal year. I move to amend by adding the following as a new section:

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he hereby is, authorized to use for the purposes of repairs and for the necessary expenditures at the navy-yards, any sums heretofore appropriated for naval purposes, and which have not lapsed into the Treasury, provided this sum does not exceed the estimates for the next fiscal year.

On the amendment there were—ayes 21, noes 34; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN, under the rule, ordered tellers; and appointed Messrs. BANKS and SCOFIELD.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes thirty, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I move that the committee rise and report the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, according to order, had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the bill of the House No. 1167, making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1868, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. KASSON demanded the previous question.

Mr. CHANLER. I want to move to amend the title so it shall read, "A bill making appropriations for the naval service and for regulating the employés in the navy-yards in the United States."

Mr. KASSON. I cannot yield for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The title does not come up for amendment until the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The amendments of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. LAFLIN, by unanimous consent, moved to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution No. 182, for printing additional copies of the Appendix to the Diplomatic Correspondence of 1865.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution was taken up and read a first and second time.

39TH CONG. 2D SESS.—No. 101.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LAFLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SMITHSONIAN REPORT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, presented the annual report of the Smithsonian Institution for 1866; which was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GARFIELD moved that five thousand extra copies be printed, two thousand for the use of the institution, and three thousand for the use of the members of this House; and that said report be stereotyped.

The motion, under the law, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

CALIFORNIA LAND BILL.

Mr. McRUER submitted the following privileged report:

The committee of conference to which was referred the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House bill No. 878, after full and free conference, do agree to recommend to their respective Houses:

That the Senate recede from so much of their amendment as inserts in the bill and also in the title the word "Placerville," and agree to the same as modified.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the other amendments of the Senate to the bill, and agree to the same.

D. C. McRUER,

S. T. HOLMES,

A. J. GLOSSBRENNER,

Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN CONNESS,

HENRY WILSON,

J. S. FOWLER,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report was adopted.

Mr. McRUER moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to:

IMPROVEMENT OF RAPIDS OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. LAFLIN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That two thousand copies of the report of General Wilson in reference to the survey and improvement of the rapids of the Mississippi river be printed for the use of the House.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MORRILL moved to suspend the rules so as to set aside the morning hour and go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the tariff bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL moved that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to take up the special order, being the amendment of the Senate to the tariff bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 72, noes 33.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the amendment of the Senate in the nature of a substitute to House bill No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

Mr. WENTWORTH moved that members who may desire to print speeches on this subject as part of the debates should be allowed to do so on handing them to the reporters.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk read as follows:

Twentieth amendment:

Strike out "such port" and insert "and such commissions."

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out the same words, and also the words "excluding charges in."

I do this in order to perfect the harmony of this bill. It will be recollected at the last session we passed a law in reference to dutiable values, whereby we included cost of transportation, also commission in no case less than two and a half per cent., and also the cost of packages in which these articles are transported.

Now, if this provision remains in the bill it will have the effect to exclude wool from the provision of the ninth section of the act of July, 1866, just alluded to, I know of no reason why wool should be made an exception. If the dutiable value is to be fixed by including the cost of transportation, cost of package, and commission, in no case less than two and a half per cent., I think it should also apply to the article of wool.

Mr. SLOAN. Do I understand this is retained on all other articles and excluded on wool alone?

Mr. ALLISON. It is an exception made against wool-growers alone, therefore I hope the words will be stricken out.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is perfectly aware of any tender spot in this bill, and being opposed to it he adroitly strikes at the vital point. Now, I desire to call the attention of the friends of the bill to the importance of allowing a portion of what he proposes to strike out to remain in the bill. This bill was fully considered by the House at the last session, and if this tariff bill goes into operation it is intended to supersede entirely the laws passed at the last session and all prior laws; and if when the agreement was made between the manufacturers and wool-growers in relation to this item it had not been intended to exclude the charges, then the price per pound would have been fixed at a different rate. But fix the price at a certain rate per pound excluding charges, and of course the price would have been fixed at a higher rate. I move, therefore, to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa so as to leave in the words "excluding charges."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not strictly in order, as it embraces more than the Committee of Ways and Means propose to strike out.

Mr. MORRILL. If the amendment shall be voted down, as I trust it will be—for this is one of the best points in the bill, and if we cannot maintain this we are all afloat—I will then move to strike out the words "in such port and such commissions."

Mr. ALLISON. I will withdraw my amendment for the time being to allow the gentleman to offer his.

Mr. MORRILL. Then I move to strike out the words just indicated; so that the clause will read:

Upon wools of the first class, the value whereof in the principal markets of the country whence exported to the United States, excluding charges, shall be thirty-two cents or less per pound, &c.

Mr. ALLISON. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Vermont. I do not see why the gentleman should assume that I propose to offer an amendment the effect of which will be to destroy this bill. The effect of it is to place it in harmony with other portions of the bill. When the gentleman tells us this is in accordance with an agreement, I suppose he alludes to an agreement made between the wool-growers and wool-manufacturers, of which I have heard a great deal upon this floor.

I know that the rates were fixed by wool-growers and manufacturers early last year, before the tariff bill, to which I have alluded, was passed, which was in July, 1866. Now, it is proposed to hold the wool-grower to the letter of that agreement and to allow the manufacturer to include his charges, commissions, packages, and not allow the same privilege to the wool-grower, which in my judgment is a clear departure from the agreement and a fraud upon the wool-grower if it is to continue in this bill as proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask the gentleman if he is not perfectly aware that these words in the bill are entirely satisfactory to all parties representing the wool-growers?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know who represents the wool-growers upon this floor or who has any better right to speak for them than I have, representing as I do in part a wool-growing constituency, and I say it is not satisfactory to me as it stands in the bill. If the wool-grower is to be made an exception to the principle contained in the ninth section of the law passed last session, I want to understand the reason why. The effect of it is to reduce the amount of duty upon the article of wool as prepared by the committee, and if the ninth section is not to be repealed, and it is not unless the amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means is adopted repealing the ninth section alluded to by me, then the wool-grower is placed at a disadvantage as compared with other interests in this bill, and for that reason, in order to make the bill harmonize I propose the amendment which I offered a moment ago and hope it will be adopted by the committee.

Mr. SCHENCK. I rise to a point of order, and I will put it in the form of an inquiry to the Chair. I understand from the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means that there is a printer's error here, and that the word "in" should have been included in the motion to strike out. The committee propose to insert the words "and such commissions." I claim that the only question upon which we can vote is: whether we will or will not agree to that amendment, and that any amendments offered must be amendments to those three words. Am I right?

I understand also that the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means does not want us to insert these words, "and such commissions."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The clerical error will be corrected.

Mr. ALLISON. I rise to a point of order. I desire to ask a question of the Chair. This is an amendment reported by the Committee of Ways and Means. I desire to know whether it will be in order to go back to these lines and propose still further amendments after these amendments of the Committee of Ways and Means have been disposed of?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that it will be in order after the amendments reported by the Committee of Ways and Means are disposed of.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Twenty-first amendment:

In line fifty, after words "the value whereof," strike out the words "at the last port or place."

The amendment was agreed to.

Twenty-second amendment:

In line fifty-one, after the words "excluding charges," strike out the words "in such port."

The amendment was agreed to.

Twenty-third amendment:

In line fifty-six, after the words "the value whereof," strike out the words "at the last port or place;" so that the section will read:

Upon wools of the second class, and upon all hair of the alpaca, goat, camel, and other like animals, and upon nails, the value whereof whence exported to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Twenty-fourth amendment:

In line fifty-eight, in the same clause, after the words "excluding charges," strike out the word "in such port."

The amendment was agreed to.

Twenty-fifth amendment:

In line sixty-one, same clause, after the words "the value whereof," strike out the words "at the last port or place."

The amendment was agreed to.

Twenty-sixth amendment:

In line sixty-three, after the words "excluding charges," strike out the words "in such ports."

The amendment was agreed to.

Twenty-seventh amendment:

In lines sixty-six and sixty-seven, after the words "the value whereof," strike out the words "at the last port or place."

The amendment was agreed to.

Twenty-eighth amendment:

In line sixty-eight, after the words "excluding charges," strike out the words "in such ports."

The amendment was agreed to.

Twenty-ninth amendment:

In lines seventy and seventy-one, after the words "the value whereof," strike out the words "at the last port or place."

The amendment was agreed to.

Thirtieth amendment:

In line seventy-two, after the words "excluding charges," strike out the words "in such port."

The amendment was agreed to.

Thirty-first amendment:

In line one hundred and four, after the word "wool" insert "woolen flocks;" so that it will read:

On sheepskins and Angora goatskins, raw or unmanufactured, imported with the wool on, washed or unwashed, the duty shall be thirty per cent. ad valorem; and on woolen rags, shoddy, mungo, extract of wool, woolen flocks, and waste, the duty shall be twelve cents per pound.

Mr. HOOVER, of Massachusetts. I hope that amendment will be rejected. I think it was a mistake on the part of the committee putting it in, as it was afterward explained to the committee that woolen flocks is a very necessary article in the manufacture of woolens. We had supposed when we first acted on it in the committee that it belonged to the class of shoddy, but we ascertained afterward that was not the fact. If this amendment be not agreed to, it will leave this article at three cents a pound, as the Senate have it in their bill. Ten cents a pound is entire prohibition of it, and this is an article which it was explained to us is very necessary in the manufacturing of woolens. I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to say that the committee acted with a full knowledge of the facts, and I think they made no mistake in this amendment. I hope the amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means will be adopted.

It will be seen that shoddy, mungo, and extract of wool are charged a duty of twelve cents a pound; the Senate struck flocks out of this category and reduced it to three cents a pound. It is true that "woolen flocks" is the name given to the shearings of new cloth, and is a very different substance from mungo and shoddy; but it is alleged by those who represent the wool interest, and I think with good reason, that if we make this discrimination and let flocks in at three cents a pound, all sorts of material, shoddy, mungo, and extract of wool will come in under the name of "flocks" at three cents a pound. Our custom-house officers are not experts and may easily be deceived. The committee were therefore of the opinion that we ought to put "woolen flocks" in the same category with shoddy, so that we may not open the door to fraud.

Mr. DELANO. I concur very fully in what has been said by my colleague, [Mr. GARFIELD,] who represents the Committee of Ways and Means in this matter. This stuff called "woolen flocks" ought to be subjected to the duty that it will have to pay if it stands in its present position in the bill. And there can be no inducement for placing it in the other position, subject only to a duty of three cents per pound, except to benefit the manufacturer and injure the wool-grower as well as the consumer of the manufactured articles. If the House understands this matter, as I do, they will maintain those words where they now are.

Mr. DAWES. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I do it for the purpose of saying that I am sorry my friend from Ohio [Mr. DELANO] does not know the subject-matter about which he is talking; otherwise he would not make the statement he does. He says the only effect of admitting this woolen flocks at a duty of three cents per pound will be to aid the manufacturer and to injure the wool-grower. Now, I suppose he would not object to aiding the manufacturer if he could do so without injuring the wool-grower. If he knew the use to which flocks and shoddy are put he would understand very well that nothing could so much injure the wool-grower as to prevent the introduction and use of this woolen flocks. But the gentleman might just as well say that the use of machinery, the use of dyes, or the use of anything that assists in the manufacture of his wool by the manufacturer would aid the manufacturer and therefore injure the wool-grower. His wool cannot be used for the making of fine broadcloth without the use of woolen flocks; but it can be used for manufacturing purposes without the use of shoddy.

The difference between flocks and shoddy is this: flocks is necessary to make the wool full, and to put a face upon it; shoddy is used to supply the place of wool. Now, while what the gentleman says may be true in regard to shoddy, every woolen manufacturer in the country well knows that flocks contributes to the use of the wool raised by most growers, for it facilitates the manufacture of it. The use of flocks, which are the shearings of the new cloth, enables the cloth to full up in a manner in which the shoddy or the wool alone will not full.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. I would ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] if there is such a distinction between shoddy and woolen flocks that shoddy cannot be imported under the name of flocks?

Mr. DAWES. It cannot be by anybody in any custom-house where our officers know the difference between the two articles. I am aware that there is some truth in what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DELANO] says, that the Government is liable to be cheated in this way, and I do not want to adopt any method that will enable men to bring shoddy into this country under the name of flocks. And any legislation which will prevent that will be just what I want, and I think it is what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DELANO] would want if he knew the difference between the two articles.

I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DELANO. I renew the amendment to the amendment for the purpose of saying a word or two in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.] I suppose I must stand corrected and acknowledge my ignorance after the exhibition of superior intelligence by that gentleman. I thought the gentleman got the same protection upon his cloth whether it was made of flocks or of wool. I thought if he made his cloth half of wool and half of flocks the protection would be the same.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman does not understand what I meant to say. I meant to say that flocks contributed to the manufacture and the use of his wool. You can use up more of his wool by having flocks to manufacture with it than by not doing so; just as you can use more wool if you have a power loom than you can if you use only a hand-loom.

Mr. DELANO. I do not quite subscribe to the necessity of using all flocks or even two thirds flocks in the manufacture of cloth. I do not want the duty to be so reduced that the importation of it may be reduced; for parties will be interested in committing frauds upon the country by its use. The gentleman knows very well what I say in reference to the liability to fraud to result from the adoption of the scale of duties which is proposed upon this article.

As other gentlemen desire to be heard upon this subject I will not say anything more upon it; but I will yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. GRINNELL.]

Mr. GRINNELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say in the first place that for the manufacture of woolen cloth in this country, all the flocks that is necessary to be used can be obtained in this country. In the second place the foreign article of flocks has no wearing qualities, and should not go with cloth to be imposed upon the people. I hold some of it in my hand. It has no more consistency than ground tobacco.

Mr. DAWES. That is shoddy.

Mr. GRINNELL. No, sir, it is flocks. I have here some shoddy. Large quantities of this foreign-grown article are now imposed upon our people as wool, supplanting the growth of our own sheep. I propose that this foreign article shall not come into damaging competition with our home production. Twelve cents a pound is not too much duty. All that we need for our own manufactures we can get from the shearings of our own cloth.

I hope we shall not depart from this well considered provision. It is due to the wool-growers; it is due above all to the consumers and the wearers of cloth, that this stuff should not be imposed upon the country. I have samples here and I invite gentlemen to examine them. Millions of pounds of this are brought in against all the laws of economy, and I would have the duty made prohibitory rather than reduced.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, after the very prompt contradiction by my distinguished and learned colleague on the committee, [Mr. GARFIELD,] I feel bound to make some little explanation. I acted as the chairman of that committee in the absence of the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] and after we had inserted this in the committee, as the gentleman states, some manufacturers came in and explained to us the difference between flocks and shoddy. We had supposed that these articles were to be ranked together; but they explained to us that flocks is a very necessary article in the manufacture of woolen. I have no particular interest in the subject, but I understood it to be the wish of the committee to put flocks as it stood in the Senate bill; and I desire to make this explanation, as my colleague has contradicted a statement which I made, and raised a question of veracity between us.

Mr. GARFIELD. I beg leave to say that I raised no question of veracity whatever with the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOOPER,] I only said that the committee did not put this in by accident, but inserted it deliberately. The subsequent action of the committee to which he refers I never heard of before. That action may have been taken in my absence, and doubtless was precisely as the gentleman states it.

Mr. DELANO. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. I move pro forma to amend the amendment by striking out the last word.

I desire to state to the gentlemen who are discussing this subject that no man who is acquainted with the two articles can mistake flocks for shoddy; and if there be not imbecility or corruption in the officers having charge of the matter, the one cannot be made the means of perpetrating frauds by the introduction of the other. The article of flocks is needed for various branches of manufactures, almost infinite in number, not at all connected with the woolen trade. If you could deprive the country of a supply of flocks you would entirely suspend thereby the manufacture of velvet papers and also the production of many pigments. This article enters in a comparatively small degree into the production of woolen goods; it enters in a much larger degree into the manufacture of many of the necessities and many of the elegancies of life. Gentlemen who have discussed the question do not appear to recognize the fact that shoddy is a fiber, while flocks is an article so light that it floats in the atmosphere and must have a quiet room in which to settle to be gathered from the floor.

Mr. GRINNELL. A perfect answer to all the gentleman has said is that the flock in this country is ample for all the wall-paper needed. It is not true it does not come into competition. It does come into competition. It is glued in many cases upon cloth, which is imposed upon the honest people whom we are here to protect. It has no wearing property whatever. We can secure all in this country that may be wanted by our manufacturers.

Mr. KELLEY, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Thirty-second amendment:

Strike out the words "and on woolen flocks or shearings of new fulled cloth the duty shall be three cents per pound;" so the paragraph will then read:

On sheepskins and Angora goatskins, raw or unmanufactured, imported with the wool on, washed or unwashed, the duty shall be thirty per cent. ad valorem; and on woolen flocks, shoddy, mungo, extract of wool, woolen flocks, and waste, the duty shall be twelve cents per pound.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I am opposed to the amendment. I think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DELANO] will agree "woolen flock and shearing of new cloth" should be admitted at three cents per pound. His objection to striking out in line one hundred and eighty-four "woolen flocks" was applied to another article, which in the bill is called "extract of wool."

The amendment was agreed to.

Thirty-third amendment:

Insert "and on such as may now be exempt from duty;" so it will then read:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed by law on manufactures of wool and similar materials, and on such as may now be exempt from duty, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on the goods, wares, and merchandise herein enumerated and provided for, imported from foreign countries, the following duties and rates of duty, that is to say.

The amendment was agreed to.

Thirty-fourth amendment:

Strike out the following:

On woolen cloths, comprising broadcloths, cloakings, cassimeres, ladies' cloths, deskings, tricots, and all other fulled or felted goods or fabrics, woolen shawls, flannels, and all manufactures of wool of every description made wholly or in part of wool, not herein otherwise specified, valued at $1 50 or less per pound, forty-five cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; valued at over one dollar and fifty cents and less than two dollars, fifty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto forty per cent. ad valorem; valued at two dollars and over per pound, fifty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

And in lieu thereof insert the following:

On woolen cloths, woolen shawls, and all manufactures of wool of every description made wholly or in part of wool, not herein otherwise provided for, fifty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, thirty per cent. ad valorem.

On zephyr worsted, twenty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, thirty per cent. ad valorem.

On endless belts or felts for paper or printing machines, twenty cents per pound, and thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 17.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Thirty-fifth amendment:

Strike out the words "on bunting fifty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, thirty per cent. ad valorem," and in lieu thereof insert:

On bunting, twenty cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

On women's and children's dress goods, and real or imitation Italian cloths, and all other similar fabrics uncolored or in the gray, commonly sold or purchased by the yard or other lineal measure, or by the piece, composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the alpaca, goat, camel, or other like animals, valued at not exceeding twenty cents the square yard, six cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty per cent. ad valorem; valued at above twenty cents per square yard, eight cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the difference between the amendment of the Senate and the amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means? My impression is it is a large increase.

Mr. MORRILL. The proposition of the Committee of Ways and Means was adopted at the last session. I am not going to deny the fact that this duty proposed is a very high one. It was deemed important that the flag which floats at our mast-heads should be made at home and not abroad. It has been provided that the Secretary of the Navy shall purchase this article of American manufacture if to be had. Under that provision a single establishment has been put into operation, but it has been found that it cannot be made to pay expenses and kept in operation without this duty.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the increase of duty is two hundred per cent.

Mr. MORRILL. It amounts to prohibition, or nearly that, I suppose. We did not care to bear the stigma of having our flag manufactured abroad. As to the remainder of the amendment, I simply desire to say it is for the protection of printing establishments of such manufactured goods in this country as are imported uncolored or in the gray, and unless a difference be made they must succumb.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. Chairman, I only wish to say that during the war, we not having manufactories of bunting, the English manufacturers raised the price to thirty dollars a piece, and our Government was compelled to pay that price. The same manufacturers are selling it to-day for about five dollars a piece in gold. Although this duty is high, it will have the effect to stimulate the manufacture, and we shall ultimately have the goods at the net cost of production. I have to say that to-day we are manufacturing a much better article in this country than has ever before been manufactured in the world, and this is a duty upon the article after it has become open to the public generally. There is no monopoly. It will find its level according to the cost of producing it under a tariff, while without it the only manufacturing establishment in the country must be broken up.

Mr. MAYNARD. Where is it?

Mr. BOUTWELL. In the city of Lowell, in my own district.

Mr. MAYNARD. Will they manufacture enough to supply the country?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do not know whether they will or not; but they will manufacture enough to keep the price within reasonable limits. The British took advantage of our necessities during the war, and put the price at six times its net cost.

Mr. KELLEY. I will say that if they do not manufacture it in Lowell, there are those in Philadelphia that will. The business has been crushed out, but they will gladly embark in it if they can do it without loss.

The amendment was agreed to.

Thirty-sixth amendment:

Strike out the words "either in the gray or of" and insert the words "dyed of;" so that it will read: Or women's and children's dress goods, and real or imitation Italian cloths, and all other similar fabrics, dyed, of uniform color.

The amendment was agreed to.

Thirty-seventh amendment:

Strike out "in" and insert "of;" so that it will read: Or of various colors or figures produced in the process of weaving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Thirty-eighth amendment:

Strike out "seventy" and insert "sixty;" so that it will read:

On fringes, gimp, tassels, dress trimmings, head nets, buttons or tassels buttons, or buttons of other forms for tassels or ornaments, wrought by hand or braided by machinery, made of wool, worsted, the hair of the alpaca, goat, camel, or other like animals, or of which the above-named materials are the component parts of chief value, sixty per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Thirty-ninth and fortieth amendments:

Strike out the following:

On Wilton, Saxony, and Aubusson, Axminster, patent velvet, Tournay velvet, and tapestry velvet carpet and carpetings, Brussels carpets wrought by the Jacquard machine, and all medallion or whole carpets, valued at $1 25 or under, per square yard, eighty cents per square yard; valued at over one dollar and twenty-five cents per square yard, ninety cents per square yard: Provided, That no carpeting, carpets, or rugs of the foregoing descriptions shall pay a duty of less than fifty per cent. ad valorem.

On Brussels and tapestry Brussels carpets and carpeting, printed on the warp or otherwise, sixty cents per square yard.

On all treble ingrain, three-ply, and worsted chain Venetian carpets and carpetings, forty-five cents per square yard.

On yarn, Venetian, and two-ply ingrain carpets and carpeting, thirty-five cents per square yard.

On druggets, baizes, and bookings, and felt carpets and carpeting, printed, colored, or otherwise, twenty-five cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty per cent. ad valorem; on carpet and carpetings of wool, flax, or cotton, or parts of either, or other material not otherwise herein specified, forty per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That mats, rugs, screens, covers, hassocks, bed-sides, and other portions of carpets or carpetings, shall be subjected to the rate of duty herein imposed on carpets or carpeting of like character or description, and that the duty on all other mats, (not exclusively of vegetable material,) screens, hassocks, and carpet, and door rugs, shall be forty per cent. ad valorem; and insert as follows:

On Aubusson and Axminster carpets and carpets woven whole for rooms, fifty per cent. ad valorem; on Saxony, Wilton, and Tournay velvet carpets, wrought by the Jacquard machine, seventy cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on Brussels carpets wrought by the Jacquard machine, forty-four cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on patent velvet and tapestry velvet carpets, printed on the warp or otherwise, forty cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on tapestry Brussels carpets printed on the warp or otherwise, twenty-eight cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on treble ingrain, three-ply and worsted chain Venetian carpets, seventeen cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on yarn Venetian and two-ply ingrain carpets, twelve cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on druggets, baizes, and bookings, printed, colored, or otherwise, twenty-five cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty per cent. ad valorem; on carpets and carpetings of wool, flax, or cotton, or parts of either, or other material not otherwise herein specified, forty per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That mats, rugs, screens, covers, hassocks, bed-sides, and other portions of carpets or carpeting shall be subjected to the rate of duty herein imposed on carpets or carpeting of like character or description, and that the duty on all other mats, (not exclusively of vegetable material,) screens, hassocks, and rugs, shall be forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I observe some change in this amendment from the provision of the bill sent to us by the Senate. I find in the Senate bill the various grades of carpet are divided by price. I do not find that that has been observed in the preparation of the amendment of the House committee, and I desire to know what change has been made by the Committee of Ways and Means. Under the provision of the Senate bill I find a lower rate of duty is imposed upon the finest kind of carpet, while the poorer or cheaper article used by the common people has the highest duty imposed upon it. I would like to have some explanation in relation to the manner in which these duties are levied; why the lowest duty is put upon the luxurious article?

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman appears to be speaking against the Senate amendment which we propose to strike out. I do not, therefore, see the necessity of replying. I agree with the gentleman that the House amendment is the best. It does not make the discrimination to which he objects.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, that is a very lucid explanation. I understand now why the committee recommend the imposition of the highest duties upon the lowest grades of carpet, and why, on the other hand, they recommend the lowest duties upon the highest grade of carpet; I understand it perfectly now, because the gentleman says that I seem to be opposed to the Senate amendment, and therefore I have answered my own inquiry; and of course that explains it very clearly. But still I want the chairman of the committee, who has given this subject his attention, to explain it to the House, and to let us know whether manufacturers who are making the lower grades of carpet do not need any higher rates of protection than those who are manufacturing the lower grades; whether those who are manufacturing carpets that go upon the parlors of the rich really need less protection under the tariff than those need who are manufacturing the carpets that are to cover the floors of the poor.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman is mistaken. Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. No; it is just as I say.

Mr. DAWES. It is just here. The Senate proposed an amendment that had this peculiarity: it put a lower rate of duty upon the higher-priced carpets than it put upon the lower-priced carpets. The Committee of Ways and Means propose to strike that out and to put in place of it a provision putting the higher rate of duty upon the higher-priced carpets and the lower rate of duty upon the lower-priced carpets; whereupon the gentleman from Iowa turns around indignantly and wants to know of the Committee of Ways and Means why the Senate put in this strange and wicked proposition; and again he wants to know of the committee why they now propose to strike it out.

Well, now, I do not know exactly what to say to the gentleman; but I suspect that it is because the Committee of Ways and Means think the Senate provision unwise that they propose to strike it out and to put in a different one.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] a question. I see that the Senate and the House agree in the duty to be put upon druggets, baizes, and bookings; and I wish the gentleman would state what rate per cent. of duty is imposed upon those articles.

Mr. DAWES. That is a queer question for a member of the Committee of Ways and Means to put to me.

Mr. ALLISON. I will state, then, that it is from eighty-two to one hundred and two per cent.

Mr. DAWES. Well, the gentleman knew before he asked; why, therefore, did he put the question to me? He is on the committee that reported this bill to the House, and I was following him, with unequal step it is true, but as well as I could—

Mr. DODGE. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to state to the House, so that we may vote understandingly upon this question, what is the amount of increased duty put upon these various kinds of carpet. The carpet that is put, under the present tariff, at seventy cents a square yard I understand to be put in this bill at seventy-five cents a square yard, and in addition to that thirty-five per cent. ad valorem. I ask if that is so?

Mr. MORRILL. I will state to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DODGE] that the increased duties do not any more than cover the increased amount of duty to be placed upon wool, and scarcely that. If the gentleman will examine the subject he will see that that is the case.

Mr. ANCONA. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] is still entitled to the floor.

Mr. MORRILL. I will merely say that upon a close computation the manufacturer of carpets, when this bill shall have passed, will receive no more and not even so much protection than he now obtains.

The amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means was then agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to inquire of the Chair if the Committee of the Whole are confined to voting upon the amendments proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means without any opportunity being given to offer amendments to those amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. All of the amendments proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means are open to amendment.

Mr. HILL. I would inquire if the amendments proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means will be open to amendment after they have been acted upon?

The CHAIRMAN. They will not. The Chair rules, and has ruled all the time, that the amendments recommended by the Committee of Ways and Means are open to amendment; but independent amendments cannot be offered until all the amendments of the Committee of Ways and Means have been acted upon.

Forty-first amendment:

Insert the words "five cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto," before the words "thirty-five per cent. ad valorem," in the clause relating to oil-cloth; so that it would read:

On oil-cloths for floors, stamped, painted, or printed, valued at fifty cents or less per square yard, five cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Forty-second amendment:

Insert, in the same clause, the words "ten cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto," before the words "forty-five per cent. ad valorem," so that it would read:

Valued at over fifty cents per square yard, and all other oil-cloth, (except silk oil-cloth,) and on water-proof cloth not otherwise provided for, ten cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

The question was taken upon agreeing to the amendment; and upon a division, there were—ayes 35, noes 27; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GARFIELD and Mr. LE BLOD were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 52, noes 46. So the amendment was agreed to.

Forty-third amendment:

In section five, in the clause relating to spun silk; to strike out the words "not more advanced than singles, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem," so that it would read:

On spun silk for filling, in skeins or cops, and on silk in the gum, not more than singles, tram, thrown, or organzine, and on floss silks, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Forty-fourth amendment:

Insert in the third clause of the same section the words "dress silks" after the words "head-dresses;" so that it would read:

On all ribbons, beltings, galloons, hat-bands, bindings, braids, fringes, gimps, gloves, cloak and dress trimmings, fancy buttons, cords, dress cords, cords and tassels, head-nets, head-dresses, dress silks, neck-ties, collars, and scarfs, made of silk, or of which silk is the component material of chief value, seventy per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Forty-fifth amendment:

In the same section, in the clause relating to unmanufactured flax, to strike out the word "fifteen" and insert the word "twenty;" so that it would read: On flax unmanufactured, twenty dollars per ton.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend the amendment proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means by striking out "twenty dollars" and inserting "forty-five dollars" as the duty per ton upon flax unmanufactured.

Mr. Chairman, one of the most remarkable features in this bill, of which there are a great many, is the fact that whenever you come to any matter which involves protection to the raw material which can be produced in our own country, and especially in the interior of the country, the Senate by the provisions of their bill propose to lower the rate of duty; and if the Committee of Ways and Means of this House attempt, as they have very properly attempted, to raise the duty to a higher rate, they never succeed in getting it back to what it was in the House bill of the last session.

Now, we have heard a great deal about the manufacturing interest and its relation to the agricultural interest of this country. We have heard ingenious arguments and calculations to show how much flour, corn, hay, pork, beef, &c., enter into a bar of iron or a yard of cotton cloth. Now, those arguments are not only ingenious but plausible, and there is a great deal of truth in them. I am not only in favor of a tariff, but I am in favor of a protective tariff. And besides the food which we furnish to the operatives who manufacture this iron or this cotton cloth there are many things which constitute the raw material which we can also furnish. But when our farmers go to the manufacturer and say, we cannot only furnish food for your operatives, but we can furnish hides and flaxseed for oil, and flax fiber for manufacture, the manufacturer does not see the force of the argument so strongly. He says to the farmer, no, I can import those things from Europe; if you will let me have them as cheaply or even cheaper than I can import them I will make them into goods and you will indirectly derive advantage from the consumption of the cereals and other products of your farm by my operatives. Now, the farmer wants to be protected, not merely by having a market for the articles of food which he raises, but for the raw materials which go into these manufactures, the fiber in every shape, from flax and from hemp.

Now, the Senate have not only cut down the rate fixed by the House bill from forty-five to fifteen dollars per ton on the unmanufactured flax, but they have shown a disposition to protect everything except what we raise in the interior of the country. And when the Committee of Ways and Means, very properly disagreeing with the Senate, undertake to give us something like the same protection upon these articles which they have given to the manufacturers, they cannot get back to anything like what it was in the original bill of the House, that is, forty-five dollars per ton on unmanufactured flax; they propose merely to raise it from fifteen to twenty dollars per ton.

The original House bill fixed the duty, as I understand, at forty-five dollars per ton.

Now, sir, what is the case with manufactured goods? You may look over this whole bill, and if I do not mistake, you will find that, calculating it by a per cent. as an ad valorem duty, the general average of protection is about one hundred and twenty-two per cent. Wherever manufactures come into consideration the tax is to be raised. A little while ago we put a prohibitory duty upon the article of bunting; I do not complain of that, for if there is anything the manufacture of which for our own use should be carried on exclusively by ourselves, it is the material of our national flag. I am willing therefore that no bunting shall ever be imported. But the matter has not stopped there. A vast number of other manufactures have been cared for in the same way. Take for instance the article of oil-cloth, which we had under consideration a little while ago. Not satisfied with the percentage of tariff in the shape of an ad valorem duty put on by the Senate, the committee have added to that a five and ten per cent. specific duty. Thus continually all through the bill the manufacturing interests receive the most liberal protection. But when we come to our western productions, such as I have named, hides, flax-seed, flax, tow, &c., we cannot even get back to that which the Committee on Ways and Means once thought was right.

Sir, I am for a fair arrangement of this matter. If protection is afforded to those who are engaged in manufactures, we of the West want not only indirect protection upon that with which we feed them, but direct protection such as they receive upon all those articles which, as raw material, may enter into the manufactures of the country.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I am not more surprised at some of the extravagant statements of the learned and distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] than I am at his theory of protecting the flax-growers of Ohio. Why, sir, he would protect the grower of flax by putting such a duty upon it as to prohibit entirely its introduction here from abroad, and then put so low a duty upon the manufactured articles of flax that the foreign articles would come in to the exclusion of all flax manufacturers at home, and preclude the possibility of consuming or selling any of the raw material or flax grown at the West.

Now, Mr. Chairman, under the theory on which we acted in years past, the article of linen in 1860 was receiving a protection of only fifteen per cent. Under the influence of the power dominant here then we had to allow articles consumed in the "sunny South" to come in at about one half the rate which northern people had to pay. While a duty of thirty per cent. was imposed upon cotton manufactures, only fifteen per cent. was imposed upon linen. We have since changed all that, and equalized the duties. This has a tendency to build up these manufactories in places where flax is grown. And I say to the gentleman from Ohio that is the most effectual way, if not the only way, in which he can procure any efficient protection for flax, is to go for a policy that will establish its manufacture in the neighborhood where it is produced.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the statement that we have raised the protection upon all manufactured articles up to one hundred and twenty-two per cent. is monstrous when tested by the provision of this bill. The gentleman is utterly mistaken. Why, sir, as to many of the articles in the bill the duties are stated in ad valorem terms, and at once refute the gentleman's statement. A number of articles are at less than forty-five or even forty, thirty, twenty, and down even to ten per cent. And many of the specific duties are merely a translation from the rates at which they stand in the existing tariff, being not at all increased. Yet the gentleman comes here on the pretense that we have raised the duties generally to one hundred and twenty-two per cent., and asks us to raise the duty upon flax two hundred to three hundred per cent. upon the present duty, which is fifteen dollars per ton. The Committee of Ways and Means thought proper to raise that duty thirty-three and a third per cent., having increased it to twenty dollars per ton. If we increase the whole tariff at this rate it would probably be satisfactory to the country.

If the gentleman's motion should prevail, then there would be no possibility of the manufacturing interests of the country obtaining imported flax, and they would be extinguished. The flax imported from abroad to be made into threads is a finer article than can be raised upon the fallow bottom lands of the West. The growth there is rank and coarse, and makes up in bulk what it lacks in fineness.

Take for instance the article of leather, and I thank God I come from a State where I am not required to humbug my people on any of these questions. If we impose a duty of twenty-five or thirty per cent. on raw hide what would be the result? We would import the article already manufactured, tanned and curried and dressed, and there would be no chance for the sale of domestic raw hides.

Mr. SCHENCK. I withdraw my amendment, and for the purpose of answering the gentleman from Vermont will make it forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. Chairman, gentlemen are very sensitive here if we point out objectionable features in this legislation, and we are reminded they have constituents who are not to be humbugged. I want gentlemen to understand it is not necessary to humbug my constituents, their eyes are open to this matter and they desire the gentleman from Vermont shall neither humbug them nor this House.

I am charged with making a monstrous proposition when I propose forty-five dollars per ton upon this unmanufactured flax. Does the gentleman know where I get that proposition? I get it out of his own bill, House bill No. 718, reported from the Committee of Ways and Means, and passed by this House at the last session of Congress. I want to go back to that bill. I went home to my constituents and told them a tariff bill had passed, and I had voted for it, which greatly increased import duties, and for the first time while it increased largely on manufactured goods there had been something like justice done to western interests. On that ground I could defend my vote. I ask the gentleman to answer whether it is not what was in bill No. 718?

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say when the bill was reported from the Committee of Ways and Means it contained no such proposition, but that proposition was inserted in the House.

Mr. SCHENCK. Under the auspices of the gentleman from Vermont, who managed that bill in the House, he permitted to be inserted and to go to the Senate a duty of forty-five dollars per ton upon flax, and because I now ask we shall stand by that bill passed last summer I am charged with humbugging, charged with making a monstrous and absurd proposition.

I dare say the gentleman from Vermont tried to get it low then as now. What is forty-five dollars a ton? Nothing like the percentage you give to the manufactured article for its protection. They put the manufactures from this article at forty and fifty per cent. ad valorem, and how much will forty-five dollars a ton on this raw material be? According to the gentleman's own estimate of value not as much as twenty per cent. I take his own standard and say forty-five, and I want to see whether we will give the manufactured article the same protection as manufactured goods. I insist on it.

Trace this bill all the way through and you will find the Senate in the most remarkable manner where they could find anything to protect the growers of the country put it down to a low figure, and the House committee disagree with the Senate very properly and put it up again. They never succeed, however, somehow, in getting them as high as in the bill passed at the last session. I was satisfied with the bill of the last session so far as this protection is concerned, but I am not satisfied with the amendments of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Chairman, while I dislike to enter into a contest on this question, I am bound to say the statements of my colleague [Mr. SCHENCK] are in many particulars incorrect. The Committee of Ways and Means at the last session introduced a bill proposing to make the duty on unmanufactured flax twenty dollars per ton, but the House fixed it at forty-five dollars per ton. The Senate reduced it to fifteen, as it now is in the law. The Committee of Ways and Means moved to restore the rate originally reported by them at the last session, and put it back to twenty dollars a ton, as it stands in the printed bill before us. So that all this talk about forty-five dollars per ton as being a part of the report of the Committee of Ways and Means or anything for which they are in any way responsible goes for nothing. The Committee of Ways and Means voted against such an increase and voted for precisely what they now propose; it is a thing they have all the while maintained.

Mr. MAYNARD. Will the gentleman tell us what flax is worth per ton?

Mr. GARFIELD. About two hundred and fifty dollars.

Mr. MAYNARD. Then fifteen dollars is only six per cent.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is a matter of arithmetic. I have no quarrel with his figures. Never but once in the history of this country has the tariff on flax been as high as is proposed in this bill. In the tariff of 1842 it was twenty dollars per ton, and in a subsequent tariff it was made free, unjustly so. It was then put up again little by little, and for the last ten years it has been fifteen dollars, where it now is.

But I wish to say to my colleague, that flax is grown in this country mainly for the seed and the oil, and hundreds of tons of flax fiber in the West are thrown away every year, and why? Because we have no adequate establishment for the manufacture of flax in this country. And you can never do anything in the flax interest in the way of raising it for sale until you make a market and bring the manufacturer and producer close together. Now, if you propose to pile up the tax on the raw material it will do us in the West no good. Unless you make it possible to manufacture flax here you will put your tariff on the raw material in vain. There must be a proper relation between the duty on the raw material and the manufactured article.

The committee therefore propose an advance of thirty-three and one third per cent., never to put it up three hundred per cent. as the gentleman proposes. That would be out of all proportion in this enormous bill, which I think in many respects is entirely out of proportion to what it should be.

Mr. SCHENCK. I modify my amendment by making it "forty-five per cent. ad valorem."

The question being put on the amendment of Mr. SCHENCK, there were—ayes 49, noes 45. Mr. MORRILL called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. SCHENCK and GARFIELD.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 56, noes 60.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The question occurred on the amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. MAYNARD. I propose another amendment to the amendment of the committee, by making it "twenty per cent. ad valorem." That is just about what was adopted at the last session.

Mr. BROOMALL. Make it specific.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order; but the Chair will allow it, as no objection has been made. The only word proposed to be inserted by the Committee of Ways and Means is "fifteen."

Mr. MAYNARD. I will move to strike out "twenty" and insert "forty;" so that it will read "forty dollars per ton."

Mr. SCHENCK. Will the gentleman withdraw it?

Mr. MAYNARD. I will if the gentleman will renew it.

Mr. SCHENCK. I will propose $100. Mr. Chairman, $100 duty on a ton valued at $250 is forty per cent. What we ask, therefore, is forty per cent.; and gentlemen, including to my surprise my colleague, [Mr. GARFIELD,] hold up their hands and roll up their eyes in pious horror at the idea of giving that amount of protection to anything in the West. "Why," says my colleague, "it never has been so high before." I know it, and sitting here a friend of protective tariff, for eight years I have voted ay or no as those who get up tariff bills have told me to do. But, sir, we begin to find that something like fair play is proper in these things, and we begin to conclude that while you protect one class of industrial pursuits it is well enough to look to another. While you protect one section of the country in its prevailing interest, it is well enough not to forget that there are other sections having their own interest, their own capital invested, and their own labor applied to the production of articles that it may be well enough to have fostered.

Now, sir, what is it we ask? Simply that articles which we can ourselves produce, and do produce in this country, shall not be put on the same footing as raw material not capable of being produced in the country, but brought from abroad for the use of manufacturers here. We claim that that which we do and can produce shall have the same protection which is given to the industry of the country applied to the business of manufactures.

All the gentlemen on the Committee of Ways and Means claim great credit for having gone from fifteen up to twenty dollars per ton. Now, what is it after all? How much is twenty dollars per ton upon that which costs $250? Eight per cent. Do you hear that, gentlemen of the West? Get down on your marrow-bones and thank these gentlemen for having protected you to the extent of eight per cent. when they themselves have got from forty-five to one hundred per cent. protection. Why do you not feel grateful? Why do you not express your gratitude? Such liberality was never known before, and because it was never known before you have always been imposed upon. You are to bow your necks to the burden and bear the yoke that is to be imposed upon you in the future. That is the argument and it is all there is of it.

I propose that we wake up. I propose that we try our hand at making tariffs, and see whether we cannot turn out possibly as good an article as these gentlemen who have manufactured it hitherto up in the manufacturing regions. We have not been accustomed so much to manufacturing tariffs or anything else as they have. We are in our infancy as yet. These are new and struggling interests with us, but I think if we continue to hammer away at a good many of these things, tariffs included, we shall by and by find we can manufacture them as well as other goods, for the consumption, enjoyment, and protection of the people of this country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL. I remember, Mr. Chairman, when I was a boy I looked upon the venerable and distinguished gentleman from Ohio, then a member of this House, as a very Gamaliel—reading his speeches with delight—and I must say I think the counsel of the Ohio statesman then could be more safely followed than now. I am not a little surprised that a gentleman of the experience in legislation of my friend [Mr. SCHENCK] should be compelled to resort to the kind of argument that he presents here to-day. Now, sir, I live somewhat distant from Ohio, and yet as neither of the gentlemen from Ohio seem to be aware of the price of flax at their own homes, I believe I will take it upon myself to inform them. When flax manufactures were receiving only a protection of fifteen per cent. duty, flax itself could only be sold in Ohio at so low a price that it was thrown away. It would not bring over eight or ten cents a pound. Since we have inaugurated a new system, notwithstanding the reproaches of the gentleman of the source whence it came, of giving protection to linen and flax manufacture, the same article of flax brings twenty cents per pound. That is the way we have encouraged the growth of flax; and if we can only induce people to raise it for the sake of the fiber, instead of raising it solely for its seed, we shall confer a blessing upon his people; for the cultivation of an acre of ground for the fiber will produce even at the lowest market price more than three times what it produces for the seed.

And now let me call the gentleman's attention to the effect of the tariff of 1846, against which he formerly warred. That tariff put the same duty on wool that was put on broadcloth, and what was the result? Prior to that time we were manufacturing broadcloths all over the country, and it was a profitable manufacture, and they were sold at a remarkably low rate, but as soon as that tariff came into operation it extinguished every one of the manufactories; there was not a yard of broadcloth in a very brief time manufactured in the country, and the prices of cloth went up while the price of wool came down to twenty-five cents a pound. That was the result. And now I take it, however wild the gentleman from Ohio is, he is not going to vaccinate the American House of Representatives with any such doctrine or policy as he seems to be so zealously proclaiming.

Mr. SCHENCK. I wish to ask the gentleman a question, whether by the tariff of 1846 there was not a specific duty fixed upon this of fifteen per cent., while now the gentleman is giving us eight per cent.

Mr. MORRILL. Admitting the fact, is it not also the fact that the manufacture of flax was not pursued at all in the country, and hence they had to burn it up; but under the encouragement we have afforded for the last six years the price has already doubled the price of the raw material. And that is the only proper way we can do it. For the last half dozen years it has been the policy of Congress to allow flax machinery to be imported free of duty, and I tell the gentleman that this is the most efficient mode by which we can encourage the growth of flax or increase its price.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. SCHENCK, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to amend by striking out "twenty dollars" and inserting "forty-five dollars;" which, according to the price of unmanufactured flax as given by gentlemen in this debate, will be only eighteen per cent. ad valorem.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 45, noes 55.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. MAYNARD called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MAYNARD and Mr. RAYMOND were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 49, noes 56.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN. We may as well give this flax question a fair trial. I move to amend the amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means by striking out "twenty dollars" and inserting "thirty dollars."

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 46, noes 50.

Before the result was announced,

Mr. BENJAMIN called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BENJAMIN, and Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 48, noes 49.

So the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The committee rose informally; and the Speaker resumed the chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 509) to amend certain acts in relation to the Navy, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The pending question was upon the amendment proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means, to increase the duty on unmanufactured flax from fifteen to twenty dollars per ton.

Mr. SCHENCK. We may as well "fight it out on this line;" I therefore move to strike out "twenty dollars" and insert "forty dollars." Gentlemen need not suggest to me that I am filibustering. This is not filibustering; it is standing up for the neglected interests of the country, whatever the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] or any other gentleman may say.

Sir, we all know perfectly well how all these tariffs are made. The moment the Committee of Ways and Means begins to tinker at one—and there is one of the brood brought forth every year—that moment the manufacturers rush to Washington and burst the doors of the room of that committee. There is not a member of the Committee of Ways and Means who will not aver the truth of all I say about this matter. Each one of the manufacturers has his own particular interest. One makes oilcloths and he wants some more protection on them; another manufactures carpets and wants more protection upon them.

And by way of illustration, I ask gentlemen to look at the portion of this bill relating to carpets and see how it is fixed up. There are certain carpets of comparatively inferior quality which are manufactured in this country. You put a very high tariff on them. The Senate put a high tariff upon the Aubusson and Axminster carpets, which are not manufactured in this country and which are articles of luxury. But the Committee of Ways and Means propose to cut down the tariff proposed by the Senate on these high-priced carpets from eighty or ninety per cent. ad valorem to about fifty per cent. ad valorem. Now, what is the effect of that? Your wealthy manufacturer here can manufacture the more ordinary kinds of carpet, upon which he has a high rate of protection, and can make money enough out of them to afford to buy for his own use the luxurious carpets which are made abroad and allowed to come in at a low rate of duty. Now, I do not say this for the purpose of demagoguing upon this subject, but to illustrate the whole character of the proceeding which has been entered upon in this matter of protecting the interests of the country.

Perhaps if I was a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, and surrounded by this atmosphere and influence, I might feel somewhat as every other gentleman upon that committee seems to feel, even though he be from the West. But outside of the Committee of Ways and Means, and at home, we breathe a somewhat different air.

Now, what is the fact in regard to this article of flax? The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] explains to us that it is in consequence of these manufacturers; that instead of throwing away this flax fiber to the extent we did formerly, we now get twenty cents per pound for it. What is the value of a ton of twenty-two hundred and forty pounds at twenty cents per pound? Only $240. The highest price I put upon it was $250 per ton. And according to his own arithmetic he proposes to allow us a duty of only five or six per cent.

But that is not the price by which the duty on the foreign article is to be controlled. The foreign flax fiber is produced at less than that per ton, and the duty is to be reckoned on that; so that we will not even get the protection the gentleman intimates. Put it in the best light you can, and these gentlemen are only willing to let us have about eight per cent. ad valorem protection on our flax fiber, while they take from forty-five to one hundred per cent. protection upon the articles in which they are interested. There is no escaping that. I know there is a theory about the tariff, and I believe in much of it: that you must build up your own manufactures, and thus create a market for your own productions of raw materials.

But no man can persuade me that to let in cheap flax from abroad and compel us to burn up our own flax fiber because for want of protection we cannot manufacture it, is protection to our flax-growing interests. There are the stubborn facts in opposition to all theories. We cannot, as the gentleman himself admits, find a sale for our flax, but must burn it up. Why? Because it is not protected. What would the manufacturers think if they had to burn up some of their productions? There would be a vast difference then between your bull goring my ox and my bull making an attack on your ox.

What is the statement of the gentleman from Vermont? That we are gradually getting a somewhat higher price for our flax; and I suppose that we shall be told not to kill the goose that lays the golden eggs nor attempt to hurry the process of incubation in any way, but remain satisfied with whatever protection may be doled out to us, even though this protection comes so slowly that we are obliged to burn up or destroy in one year thirty thousand tons of flax fiber, (as is shown by the statistical table to have been the case during the last year,) because for want of protection this fiber could not be manufactured.

Here, I say, are stubborn facts in opposition to all theories; and so far as facts go the arithmetical calculation may be taken as one of the facts. There is peculiar inconsistency in regarding us as the obliged party because we get protection to the extent of eight per cent., when the manufacturing interests complain that they have not enough protection if they get forty-five or fifty per cent., or more.

Mr. MORRILL. It seems to me that the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] are founded entirely, if he will permit me to say it, on a want of information. He refers to Aubusson and Axminster carpets, and he asks, "Why are lower rates of duty placed upon these than were fixed by the Senate?" If the gentleman had understood the facts he would have seen that with the duty as proposed by the amendment to the Senate bill the Government will get the largest amount of revenue. These carpets are of high quality and are very expensive, and an ad valorem duty of fifty per cent. will bring much more revenue into the Treasury than the duty fixed by the Senate.

Mr. SCHENCK. But it is a lower tariff.

Mr. MORRILL. I say that we shall get more revenue from these carpets under the duty here proposed than under the duty proposed in the Senate bill. An ad valorem duty of fifty per cent. upon this description of carpets is higher than would be the highest specific rate imposed by the bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in relation to this subject, I ask members of this House to look at the rates of duty imposed on linen goods. It will be seen that they are very low, amounting to not more than about forty per cent. on the lowest class of goods and fifty per cent. on the others of finer grade and higher cost. The gentleman will find, if he succeeds in making a tariff such as he desires and foreshadows, that he will have utterly extinguished any hope of establishing the manufacture of linen goods in his own section of the country. These duties are not designed for the benefit of my section of the country. There is not a linen manufactory in the State where I reside; but it is my hope and expectation that by a proper duty upon these linen articles we shall promote their manufacture in Ohio, Kentucky, and other western and southwestern States; and I shall heartily rejoice to see such manufactures established there.

But if the gentleman shall succeed in persuading the House to adopt his views I am quite satisfied, instead of getting twenty cents per pound for the flax now raised in the West, it will go down to the old ten-cent rate.

Mr. SCHENCK. I withdraw my amendment on condition my colleague will renew it.

Mr. LE BLOND. I renew the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have always understood a skillful physician, if he found a treatment he was prescribing failed to produce the desired result, would change the treatment and try something else. I find myself, though I do not claim to be a skillful physician, in somewhat of the same attitude.

When we have been advocating on our side a tariff for revenue purposes alone we found we were powerless for good. I propose now a complete antidote. I propose, as my colleague has suggested, by putting the duty on the raw material raised in the West equal to the duty on the manufactured article, to neutralize the effect of the tariff and to destroy the margin the East seeks in this measure. I find it is necessary to apply the same rule to the East they have been seeking to apply to the West. One gentleman rises here and advocates the protection of one branch of manufactures and another gentleman the protection of another branch; but who, sir, of all the friends of the tariff, has once spoken in favor of the people? Who has been heard upon this floor in favor of the great growing and consuming interests of the country? They are millions while the manufacturers are hundreds, and yet, sir, not a single man has offered an argument in favor of the poorer class of people, who are the consumers of all these goods manufactured in the East.

The West has been totally neglected; and as has been well said by my colleague, the very moment the West asks for protection on the raw article you will find the entire East opposing any duty, or at least any duty in comparison with that on the manufactured article. I hope the West will make a bold stand on this bill; that we will assert our rights, and let the West be heard once in getting up a tariff which is to govern the country in the future.

I observe in looking over the history of the Committee of Ways and Means you will always find a preponderance in favor of the manufacturing interests. Why it is so it is difficult to tell; but for years past such has been the basis of its action. They look to the interests of their peculiar localities, and not to the interests of the growers and consumers. I want to see this thing met, and met squarely. Let us have our rights for once in a tariff to raise revenue for the country.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Chairman, this is not the first time an attempt has been made to charge whatever there is to complain of in this bill to the East, and it is not the first time the struggle has been in this House to make a tariff which had nothing on which the East could rely for the encouragement of its industry, and then to make the East responsible for it. The East is charged with making this tariff for its own benefit. The same charge was made at the last session, and with as much justice, and by the very men who had secured in this tariff bill all there was to commend it to the industry of the country. It is raised again to-day. I took occasion then to say, representing as I believe

I do a larger manufacturing constituency than any of my colleagues upon this floor, a constituency as vitally interested in a protective tariff as any other, and I take occasion now to repeat to these gentlemen that if they do not want this tariff bill, so far as my constituents are concerned they do not want it so much as the very men do who denounce it. The bill of the committee commends itself less to me and my constituents than it does to them. So far as it has undergone a change it has been deleterious to the interests and industries of the East. I tell the gentleman from Ohio plainly it does not commend itself to the East, and if the West does not want this tariff bill the East can get along without it as well as the West can. Yet I expect to vote for it in spite of, not because of, these efforts to make us responsible for what is of more benefit to the West than to the East. But a tariff protecting home industry cannot build up one section at the expense of another.

Mr. LE BLOND. If such are the feelings of the people that the gentleman has the honor to represent, why is it that New England stands in solid phalanx, as a general thing, in favor of these bills while the West is opposed to them?

Mr. DAWES. That is just what I was commenting upon. Gentlemen on this side who are in favor of the principle of protection are willing to adhere to that principle of protection in its application to the whole industry of the country, while my friend from Ohio favors protection only when it applies to his particular interests.

Witness what was done here last night. Almost every man from the western part of the country came up in solid phalanx against the principle of protection when it applied to the cotton fabrics of the country and voted against it; and in ten minutes after, when we came to the wool interest, every one of them passed through the tellers in solid column for the highest rate of duty; and there has never been an interest provided for in a tariff bill which was peculiar to a locality in the West that any western man has raised his voice against upon principle.

Look at some of the features of this tariff bill. Take, for instance, the article of bituminous coal. Who from the western country raises his voice against this tariff upon bituminous coal? Who from the West ever raised his voice against the tariff of thirty dollars a ton upon manila hemp, or of twenty dollars a ton upon jute, or against this high tariff upon wool, or two and a half cents a pound on pig lead, or thirty per cent. on linseed, which is claimed to be prohibitory? The tariff upon these articles is high enough to crush out the industry of the East, but no man from the West ever raised his voice against it.

Mr. LE BLOND. I withdraw my amendment and move to insert "forty-three" in lieu of "forty;" and I yield for a moment to my colleague, [Mr. SPALDING.]

Mr. SPALDING. I wish to say, in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] that he does me injustice when he says that every man from the West voted in solid phalanx against the duty on cotton. I voted for the cotton duty every time last night.

Mr. DAWES. I think I did injustice in making the statement so broad, and I desire to take it back. There were exceptions, but very rare. I spoke of the western men as a class, and in confirmation of what I said—

Mr. LE BLOND. I must resume the floor. I only regret, Mr. Chairman, that Ohio had one Representative who did not stand up for the interests of the West.

Now, sir, it is a startling fact that you find the Representatives of Massachusetts standing as one man in favor of these high protective tariffs, and when you come to the raw material, when the West asks that a duty shall be laid upon that equal to the duty laid upon the manufactured articles of the East, you find the Representatives of Massachusetts and the manufacturing interests of the East generally raising their voices in opposition to it, for the simple reason that the discrepancy between the duty on the raw material and the duty on the manufactured article leaves them a margin for profit. When the West asks that the duty shall be made equal as between the raw material and the manufactured article, you find the manufacturing interests here, through their Representatives, opposing it, although it is only doing simple justice to the West.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] has referred to various articles in fixing the duties upon which in this bill he says the West has been favored. Sir, it has already been disclosed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] that the duty laid upon wool, where a large margin is given for deductions for package, transportation, &c., is simply a fraud upon the wool-growers of the West. It is but a tub thrown to the whale, and that is all there is of it. And the same is true in reference to other items.

Sir, for one, I want no protection. I want no protection to western men or to eastern men. I want the bars laid down. I want our country left open to the commerce of the world. I want the West to have the privilege of seeking a market wherever and whenever they can find it and find it best. When you do that you will have done that which will benefit a large portion of the American people, the consumers of the country, and it is to their interests that we should look, and not to the interests of the manufacturers, who are the wealthy portion of the community. No man upon the other side of the House seems to advocate the interests of that great mass of the American people who are the consumers of the manufactured articles of the East. Every dollar, every cent that you add in the shape of a duty on imports only furnishes that much of a margin to the manufacturer to tax it over against the consumer and make him pay that much more for the support of manufacturing corporations that are already declaring annually large dividends.

I see from published statements that these corporations are declaring annually dividends of from fifty to one hundred and twenty five per cent. Who among the consumers of the country, the agricultural interests of the country, has made any such percentage upon the capital invested in the business they are engaged in? Not one can be found; and yet you do not find that the consumers, the agricultural interests, come here with their large delegations to pray and beseech the Committee of Ways and Means and the House to increase the duty on what they produce in order that they may have greater protection.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Chairman, I am quite aware that the philosophy of the gentleman is that he prefers that the industry necessary for carrying on the manufactures needed in this country should be somewhere else except in this country, and that the capital needed to produce those manufactures should be upon the other side of the water where labor costs only one tenth part what it does here, so that perchance the labor of this country may be reduced to a level with the pauper labor of Europe.

I understand his philosophy very well, and I am not coöperating with him in any such scheme. I prefer that the manufactories and the capital invested in them should be upon this side of the water rather than upon the other, and that the industry which gathers around them should be upon this side of the water, and be fed and clothed and educated and reared here, so that our country may reap the reward of it, rather than that it should be upon the other side of the water, in countries where they have brought the price of labor to a few pennies a day, when we pay a dollar a day for the same labor.

I am aware that the gentleman's philosophy in that respect differs from mine. I am proud to say that I go no step with him in that direction. I go for protection to every industry of the country, I care not where it is, and the gentleman has never found me voting against protection to any industry, whether of the West or of the East. What I complain of is, not that the industry of the West claims protection under this bill, but that while claiming it they charge it upon us in the East.

When they find us of the East voting against the protection necessary for the development of all their industries then they will have the same reason to complain of us that we have to complain of them now. The gentleman speaks of the large dividends made by the manufacturers of the East. Has he ever turned to the income list of the importers of the city of New York, where they pile up their fortunes, as a friend near me says, until they dizzy the very arithmetic itself? Let me read the incomes of a few of them, which I have taken from the records of the internal revenue office here: $85,000, $120,000, $75,000, $58,000, $392,000, $157,000, $110,000, $112,000, $248,000, $1,843,000, $573,000, $680,000; $153,000, $158,000. These are the yearly incomes of a few of the importers of New York city. They have been made out of the pauper labor of Europe, to which the gentleman's philosophy invites us in his speech and in his argument to-day. Between these great incomes and the incomes of the men who build up the manufactures and the industries of this country, and employ the labor here, and the capital here, and the industry here, I leave the gentleman to make his choice. I cling to my own country and its industry.

Mr. LE BLOND. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CHANLER. I renew the amendment to the amendment. The question of philosophy has been introduced into this debate by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.] If there is any principle underlying the argument of the remarks which he has just made, it is that the system of protection which he advocates is the embodiment of monopoly. Not only will New England monopolize the manufacturing interests of its own section, not only would she grasp at all the resources of the country for the benefit of her own manufactures, but she would absorb also, in her greed for monopoly, all the manufactures and products of Europe. Carrying out this idea of universal manufacture, how are you to feed the masses? Can you feed them on cotton, spun and woven into the warp and woof of the manufactures of the New England States? Sir, this doctrine would annihilate the very principle of all exchange of interests which has built up this country to its present thrift and magnitude. By the system which the gentleman proposes you would return to that system which has been established, and which has triumphed in China and Japan; you would violate that system of interchange of products among nationalities which has grown up in Europe, and has given to that portion of the earth the lead among the nations of the world. Free trade is the result of European civilization, developed to its highest standard. The action which the gentleman proposes is toward the East—toward Asia, and its systems of monopoly and restriction. The exclusiveness of the Asiatic cannot find root here. You might as well undertake to stop the changes of the tide of the great ocean itself as to regulate the fluctuations of commerce and the interchange of the products of agriculture and manufactures by means of commerce. The argument which the gentleman adduces is as old as Asia, as old as the civilization of the world; but the ship-of-state to-day is not propelled by the lateen-sails of the East, but is moved by machinery and propelled by steam. The ship-of-state to-day moves forward with an impetus which it never knew when the principle of monopoly ruled the Governments of the world; and the gentleman would utterly fail in carrying on a Government such as this if he undertook to absorb within this continent that system of labor which Europe to-day has in operation. America and Europe are to-day developments of the same system of civilization, and it is only by an interchange of ideas and products that that system of civilization can exist.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. Chairman, I rise pro forma to oppose this amendment, because I wish to say a word to my distinguished friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.] He informs us that this is a western tariff, that he sees in it nothing for the benefit of the great East. Now, sir, I have examined this tariff with as much care as I have been able to bestow upon it, and I cannot find in it any provision the effect of which will be to promote the great agricultural interests of the West.

We are told that we have a pleasing soporific here in the shape of a prohibitory duty on wool. I deny it absolutely. Compare the tariff on wool with that on woollen goods, and it will be found that the wool manufacturers have an advantage of not less than from ten to fifteen per cent. over the wool-growers. Hence, as a large proportion of the wool manufactured in this country is not grown here, but imported and can still be imported under this difference in favor of manufacturers of wool, there is nothing in this bill that will really protect the American wool-grower, unless it may produce the effect of temporarily increasing the price of wool to consumers all over the country.

We have arrayed before us here the incomes of the importers of this country for the purpose of showing that men in this branch of business have realized large fortunes during the last year. Sir, a manufacturer of the gentleman's own district told me that if we should pass this tariff it would increase the cost of woollen products alone in this country $30,000,000. We know that to-day there is a large surplus of those articles in the country. The effect of the passage of this tariff will be to give a profit of $30,000,000 or $40,000,000 to those who now hold these woollen goods. If the importers are to-day holding large stocks of these goods, next year they, along with other traders in this branch of business, will have largely increased incomes, which will come out of the pockets of the consumers of these goods, as in the end the consumer is compelled to pay the increased cost by means of increased duty.

Now, sir, I say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that so far as I understand, the people of the West do not see in this tariff anything that will especially benefit them. If it contains nothing that will benefit the East, why should we at this late stage of the session spend so much time in the consideration of this bill? If this measure is to benefit nobody, why not lay it aside and proceed to legislation that will be of benefit to the country? I believe that it is necessary to revise to some extent the existing tariff. I know that some of our industrial interests are suffering to-day; and perhaps a portion of these would temporarily be affected beneficially by this tariff.

Mr. DAWES. What are they?

Mr. ALLISON. One is the woollen interest of this country, which I believe is somewhat depressed at this moment; and for the purpose of saving that interest as far as possible we have in the bill passed a few days ago reduced the internal tax upon all woollen manufactures two and a half per cent. This will make a difference of several million dollars to the wool manufacturers of this country. In effect it increases the tariff upon woollen goods to the extent of from seven and a half to ten per cent.; so that whether this bill be passed or not we have already by the tax bill indirectly increased the tariff on all woollen manufactures.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CHANLER. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LE BLOND. I renew the amendment of my colleague, [Mr. SCHENCK,] to strike out "fifteen" and insert "forty."

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Chairman, when in the Congress of the United States, charged with the duty of legislating for the advancement of the great interests of the country, the discussion of a measure like this degenerates into a mere struggle of sectional interests, I almost despair of any wise legislation on this subject. I might as well suppose the blood that flows from the heart was intended only for a single limb as to suppose we are enacting a bill for the special protection of the North or the South, the East or the West; that we are not legislating for the benefit of the interests of all the States and for all our industrial interests alike. It is really very melancholy to hear gentlemen charging upon each other that they are only for sectional interests and sectional protection. Why, sir, do gentlemen forget when we protect the manufactures of the East we protect the great consumers of the grain and other raw materials of the West; that when we promote the manufacturing interests of the East we at the same time promote the great interests of the middle and western States? The former afford markets for the products of the latter within our own limits. Do gentlemen wish to transfer their markets three thousand miles off, and to sell to the laborers of Europe instead of to our own laborers at home?

Why is it we hear of the interests of New York or New England? It is the interest of America we are talking about. If we were to continue adequate protection a few years longer our markets would be enlarged. With the vast water power of the West we would have manufactures established there to consume the products of the country, instead of now sending them abroad. I need not point gentlemen who have read history to this. We have seen England from a country that had no commerce and no manufactures by this system of protection break down Holland and sweep her fleets from the ocean, until now to repeal her protection laws is protection to that very country. This has been the result of the grand navigation act and the protection laws of England. England never passed a more protective measure than when she repealed her protective laws; for she had got to that point when she could manufacture for the whole world, and if she could only hold the Governments of the world where they then were she would furnish them with all her products, for those of no other nation could stand in competition with her. Until she found herself able to compete with continental Europe she had a tax of two per cent. upon coal and iron, but when she had surpassed all competition she took off that duty. All this cry of free trade means protection for England, and she knows it. We need not go back in her history to the time of Cromwell to learn what great results this system of protection now advocated here has done for the English manufacturers. If gentlemen ever heard Henry Clay, they would be satisfied with the truth of what I say.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee here informally rose.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had indefinitely postponed House bill No. 2, to amend an act declaring the officer who shall act as President of the United States in case of vacancies in the office both of President and Vice President, approved March 1, 1792.

It further announced that the Senate had passed House bill No. 1220, to provide ways and means for the payment of compound-interest notes, with an amendment, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. LE BLOND. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen from Pennsylvania talk ably on this proposition, but he fails to tell this House what rates of duty were established under the British tariff of which he speaks. I venture to say Great Britain never yet had a tariff with a rate of duties as high as the one now proposed in this House; and when he speaks of Henry Clay being in favor of a protective tariff I will only reply it was far short of this one. Sir, as I said before, when you levy a duty for revenue alone, which I conceive is necessary for this and all other Governments to carry them on, that of itself furnishes plenty of protection for the manufacturing interests.

But, sir, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] undertakes to put his argument and the ground upon which this bill is to pass upon patriotism. He who is in favor of his country, he would say, and substantially said, would be in favor of such a bill as this. Sir, I pretend to say that the argument which the gentleman makes simply sounds in your pocket, and in nothing else. It sounds only in the dollars and cents of the particular locality he seeks to represent. Sir, the man who favors his country is the man who favors such laws, and such rules and regulations as will benefit the greatest number of the American people, and secure the greatest amount of production and wealth; not he who is in favor of guarding these monopolies and giving them all they dare to ask for. Sir, I envy not the man who dares to stand up in the American Congress and say that he will levy a tax upon the consuming interests of this country, represented by the millions, in favor of the manufacturing interests in a particular locality up in New England. It is a wrong principle—a principle that ought not to prevail in this or any other country. The effect of a high protective tariff in this country is simply to force a condition of things that the country will not be ripe for until it becomes populous, until it becomes as old England has become. Then you can compete with the manufacturing interests of other countries without taxing the great mass of the American people in order to foster any particular enterprise. That is the true theory. The gentleman says that the evidence of devotion to the country is in the great mass of the American people bowing down like slaves and suffering the burden of taxation to be laid upon their backs, in order that they may build up in New England and in the gentleman's district a great monopoly that can distribute its one hundred and one hundred and twenty-five per cent. Yet the gentleman comes in here and reads to this House the amount of money made by a few importers. I only wish he had read in connection with that the amount of profit made by manufacturing establishments.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. LE BLOND, to substitute forty for twenty, and it was agreed to—ayes 54, noes 45.

The question recurred on the amendment as amended, and it was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise, for the purpose of terminating debate upon this section.

Mr. LE BLOND. I hope the motion will not prevail. There are other amendments that ought to be made.

Mr. SCHENCK. I hope it will not be done.

Mr. MORRILL. If gentlemen resist it I will withdraw the motion. I supposed gentlemen had exhausted themselves.

Forty-sixth amendment:

Strike out "thirty" and insert "forty;" so that it read:
On flax hackled, known as dressed line, forty dollars per ton.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend by striking out forty and inserting fifty. I do not mean to be put in a wrong position upon this bill. I am gratified that my colleague [Mr. LE BLOND] comes to our rescue, so far as voting is concerned, because there are points upon which we agree. But I am not to be set down as a free trader nor as opposed to a protective tariff in consequence of anything that is said by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.] I am in favor of protection; in favor of these impost duties being laid in such a way and with such discriminations as that they may afford protection to all the industrial interests and pursuits of the country. What I contend for is that they shall be relatively right; that we shall have comparatively the same benefits that others have.

Now, sir, why do I propose to put up (as we have already done, to a certain extent, with one of these articles) the tariff upon this raw material? Because, as I said before, we produce it in the country. What do the committee allow us? It is eighteen per cent., if you take all these items upon the raw material, these foreign fibers brought into the country. But cast your eye down the pages and after you have passed through the various kinds of hemp, flax, flax straw, tow, jute, the moment you reach Sisal grass, up goes protection. The manufacturers of this grass are to have thirty per cent. ad valorem protection, while you give to the growers of the raw material which we produce from eight to eighteen per cent. Is not that a great stretch of liberality? The instant you touch the manufacture of one of these articles then thirty per cent. is little enough. I know these manufacturers pay five per cent. tax, but what is that tax on this amount of products?

But there is a better lesson than that to be learned. It is well the two things were not put in juxtaposition, or perhaps gentlemen would have waked up to the inconsistency. If you turn over two pages you will come to some clauses which provide for a tariff upon all the manufactures of flax, hemp, jute, or other similar fibers. Whenever you reach them, what then? Are they satisfied with from eight to eighteen per cent.? Not at all. Then the committee put on forty per cent. ad valorem. Shut out the manufactured article, and then protect the manufacturer, and let the foreign fiber come in as cheaply as possible, even though it breaks down the domestic fiber. Let gentlemen understand that some of us, at least, are for protection; that we want a fair and equal comparative protection. We are going upon the question of the relative proportion of advantage we get from this bill. I subscribe to all that has been said by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] in regard to the principles involved in this theory of a protective tariff: and he, unlike other gentlemen, is voting with us upon this question. He I believe will go so far as to put a prohibitory duty upon this raw material. I would like to see a little of that same spirit manifested by other protectionists here; and while they ask us to assist them in giving reasonable protection to manufactured articles, they should on their part agree to give us protection upon the raw materials, which contribute to make the manufactured articles, as against those same raw materials brought in at cheap rates.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DAWES. I do not understand the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] to entertain, and did not intend to charge him with entertaining, any free-trade opinions. No one in this House adopts the principle of a protective tariff and carries it even to the extent of prohibition, whenever it suits a particular interest of a section, as does the gentleman from Ohio. It was his colleague over the way [Mr. LE BLOND] who openly avowed the doctrine of free trade, and it was to him I was replying; and I ask him to answer this question: the coat he has on his back has got to be made in this country or on the other side of the water. Where that coat is made there must be a mill, and where that mill is there must be capital, and where that capital is labor must be employed, and where that mill is there must be a shoemaker alongside of it, and a tailor and a hatter; there must be all the industries gathered round it. I ask him whether he would rather have all these things on the other side of the water or here? He must have them somewhere; it is for him to say whether it shall be here or there. There must be a tariff of some kind; he admits that. He proposes to have one for revenue solely; and he must put it either upon the manufacturer of the articles, or upon the raw material. If he puts it upon the manufactured article, he does what? He protects the man who is making it here. If he puts it upon the raw material, he does what? He discriminates against the laborer here. There is no alternative, no middle way. He may have his choice; and as he answers this question so he will be a free trader or a protectionist.

Now, touching the raw material in this country, that comes in competition with the raw material imported. I am not one of those who shrink from putting a duty upon that raw material which comes in competition with the raw material here. Sir, I go with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] to the full length of the doctrine, that you cannot build up one interest here at the expense of another. They all stand arm in arm, shoulder to shoulder; that which sickens one sickens the other; they flourish together or they faint together. One cannot grow up at the expense of the other any more than one of the limbs of the body can grow at the expense of any of the others. It is a system. It is not for to-day; it is for all time. It is not to me nor to the gentleman from Ohio, but it is to the nation, and to the nation in the future, not to the nation of to-day alone, that the American system has application.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROSS. Mr. Chairman—

The SPEAKER. Debate is exhausted. There is an amendment to an amendment pending.

Mr. THAYER. I move that the committee rise, for the purpose of terminating debate.

The motion was disagreed to—ayes forty, noes not counted.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] withdraw his amendment to the amendment? I will renew it.

Mr. SCHENCK. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I will move to amend by striking out "twenty dollars" and inserting "eighty dollars" instead of "fifty dollars," as proposed by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSS] as entitled to the floor.

Mr. ROSS. I am willing to vote for the highest rate. I admit feeling a degree of complacency in view of the fact that light begins to break in upon the minds of the gentlemen on the other side of the House, although they see it as yet but dimly, "as through a glass darkly;" yet I feel confident that light is breaking in upon their minds; and it is high time that such was the case.

We have been "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to the manufacturers of this country long enough. And I attribute the light which is breaking in upon the minds of gentlemen upon the other side of the House to the wholesome discussion of this question upon the stump and in the public press of the country.

I called the attention of the House at the last session of Congress to the fact that it was not attempted to apply the same measure of protection to the agricultural interests of the country that is proposed for the manufacturing interests of the country. It is a matter of some interest to look through the tariff bill and see the condition in which the products of manufacturers are placed. First, they have a specific duty, and then that is followed up by an ad valorem duty. But when you come to the portion relating to agricultural interests, it will be found that twenty to thirty percent. is considered to be amply sufficient, while manufacturers ask for themselves from fifty to one hundred per cent.

Now, I do not concur entirely with my distinguished friend from Ohio, [Mr. LE BLOND,] who says we need no tariff.

Mr. LE BLOND. No tariff for revenue.

Mr. ROSS. It is true, I have been educated in the school of free trade; but we must all recognize the condition of the country at the present time. I believe that with our depreciated currency we need a tariff of from thirty to forty per cent.; and I am willing to vote for a square tariff of thirty to forty per cent., protecting manufacturing and agricultural interests alike.

Mr. LE BLOND. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment for explanation?

Mr. ROSS. I cannot well do so in the five minutes which are all that are allowed me.

Mr. LE BLOND. I hope the gentleman will state my position correctly.

Mr. ROSS. I understood the gentleman to declare himself to be for free trade.

Mr. LE BLOND. No, sir.

Mr. ROSS. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] says that New England does not want a tariff. I noticed that the same thing was said by a Senator from Massachusetts in the other end of the Capitol at the last session. But they want this tariff, notwithstanding all their pretense about it; and they have had the control of the legislation of this country so long that they now deem it their absolute right to continue that control. They control all the important committees of Congress. You find New England men controlling all the committees which relate to our financial interests.

Mr. GRINNELL. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. ROSS. I hope the point of order will not come out of my time.

Mr. GRINNELL. My point of order is that the arrangement of the committees of this House is not the question under discussion. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSS] will confine himself to the question before the committee.

Mr. ROSS. Of course; that matter is involved in this question. New England members have control of all the leading committees. I do not complain of it. I know that in making up these committees there is a terrible pressure brought to bear in order that the same men shall get upon them who have heretofore had the framing of our financial measures, and hence the great West very seldom gets any of the places on these committees, and New England men continue to manipulate the tariff and tax bills in their own interests.

Now, I do not blame them for endeavoring to protect the interests of their own constituents. But it is time the great Northwest was aroused to its own interests, and to the necessity of endeavoring to secure some protection for them. If eastern manufacturers need a tariff of from fifty to one hundred per cent. upon their manufactures, I do not understand why they should consider thirty per cent. enough for the agricultural interests. Why should we not be entitled to the same measure of protection which the manufacturers claim? They exclude foreign manufactures from coming into this country by a prohibiting tariff, and then they desire to have the opportunity to slip off into Canada where they can get their beef, pork, flour, and other articles, and wool and other products cheaper than we can produce them, and thus break down our interests.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of advocating the increase of this item to eighty dollars per ton, for the purpose of making it proportionate to the tariff that we have put upon unmanufactured or undressed flax. On this the committee has already voted a duty of forty dollars per ton. Eighty dollars per ton upon the dressed flax would be only a proper proportion. If we are going to protect this interest at all, if we are going to encourage the culture of flax, let us put such a tariff upon the dressed article that our own people will have the dressing of our flax.

While on the floor I desire to say that I am no free-trade man, nor do I propose to attack any section of the country. I have nothing to say against New England or New England manufactures. They are of very great benefit to the whole country; and I hope to live to see the day we in the West shall have built up manufactures as have the people of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut. I hope to live to see the day when I may travel the whole length of the Fox and Rock rivers without being able to get away from the clatter of the machinery of busy factories. To this end I am in favor of affording reasonable protection by a properly adjusted tariff to the manufacturers of the West and of the East. I am in favor of protecting labor everywhere.

While, however, we are protecting manufactures, let us at the same time so adjust our tariff as that the farmer, the agriculturist, the producer may have some share in the benefits to be given by this bill. In our country, especially in the West, we can raise flax; we can dress it; we can prepare it for the manufacturer. While, therefore, we are imposing high duties upon the manufactured article, let us impose correspondingly high duties upon the raw material which we can raise in our own country. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of increasing this item from thirty dollars to eighty dollars per ton, which would be only four cents per pound.

Mr. THAYER. For the purpose of closing debate on the pending paragraph I move that the committee rise.

On the motion there were—ayes forty-five, noes not counted.

Mr. THAYER called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. THAYER and SCHENCK were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 64, noes 39.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. POMEROY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution (H. R. No. 92) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay certain claims out of the balance of an appropriation for the payment of necessary expenditures in the service of the United States for Indian affairs in the Territory of Utah; when the Speaker signed the same.

DEFICIENCY BILL

Mr. STEVENS, from the Committee on Appropriations reported a bill making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed, and on motion of Mr. STEVENS, made a special order for to-morrow after the morning hour and from day after day until disposed of.

WILLIAM BEALE.

Mr. ANCONA, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to furnish this House with copies of all letters and papers on file in his Department relating to the reduction to the ranks of William Beale, a hospital steward on duty at Camp William Penn, near Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, by General Order, No. 429.

and particularly a letter of Lieutenant Colonel Louis Wagner, of the eighty-eighth Pennsylvania volunteers, of or about November 14, 1864, upon that subject, and recommending his discharge.

The SPEAKER. This being a call for executive information, unanimous consent is necessary for its consideration on this day.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

Mr. ANCONA moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that all further debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the pending section be closed in one minute after its consideration shall have been resumed.

Mr. THAYER. I move to amend so as only to close debate on the pending paragraph. That was the understanding on which the committee rose.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If the House should close debate on this paragraph or section now, will it be open for debate when we have completed the amendments of the Committee of Ways and Means and it is open to general amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It will, as it will then be at a different stage.

The hour of half past four o'clock p. m. having arrived, the House, pursuant to order, took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

INCREASED PAY OF ARMY OFFICERS, ETC.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask unanimous consent of the House to report back from the Committee on Military Affairs Senate bill No. 592, to provide for a temporary increase of the pay of officers in the Army of the United States, and for other purposes. It is the only bill in which we can make a provision securing to the soldiers sixteen dollars a month instead of thirteen dollars, as their pay will go down to thirteen dollars by limitation of law.

It also includes a provision in regard to lost soldiers' discharges.

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back Senate bill No. 592, to provide for a temporary increase of the pay of officers in the Army of the United States, and for other purposes, with amendments.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill to provide for a temporary increase of the pay of officers in the Army of the United States, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That for two years from the first day of July, eighteen hundred and sixty-six, all officers of the Army below the rank of major general, including the professors at West Point, shall be paid an addition of thirty-three and one third per cent. to their present pay proper; and the pay and emoluments of all field and other mounted officers shall hereafter be the same as is now provided by law for cavalry officers of like grades.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That section one of the act entitled "An act to increase the pay of soldiers in the United States Army, and for other purposes," approved June twenty, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, be, and the same is hereby, continued in full force and effect for three years from and after the close of the rebellion, as announced by the President of the United States by proclamation bearing date the twentieth day of August, eighteen hundred and sixty-six.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That commutation of rations shall be allowed in the settlement of the accounts of all enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and Marine corps, who have died while held as prisoners of war, or the legal representatives of those who, having been prisoners of war, have died subsequent to release; this allowance to be made for the period covered by such imprisonment.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That so much of section seven of the act entitled "An act to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States," approved July 28, 1866, as provides for the creation of fifteen bands for brigade or military posts, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; but the band at the Military Academy shall remain as now established by law.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That section one of the act providing for the better organization of the military establishment, approved August third, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, authorizing the President to appoint an Assistant Secretary of War, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That so much of the act entitled "An act to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States," approved July twenty-eight, eighteen hundred and sixty-six, as relates to the promotion of assistant surgeons after three years' service, shall be amended so as to read, "and persons who have served as surgeons or assistant surgeons three years in the volunteer force shall be eligible for promotion to the grade of captain."

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the act entitled "An act more effectually to provide for the national defense by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States," approved May eight, seventeen hundred and ninety-two, and the several acts amendatory thereof, be, and they are hereby, amended by striking out the word "white."

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That the medical storekeepers of the Army shall hereafter have the rank, pay, and emoluments of captain of infantry, and the post chaplains now in service, or hereafter to be appointed, shall be commissioned by the President, and all vacancies occurring in the grade of chaplain, which is hereby established, to rank as captain of infantry, shall be filled by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and all Army chaplains shall hereafter be on the same footing as to tenure of office, retirement, allowances for service and pensions, as now provided by law for other officers of the Army.

The amendments of the committee were read, as follows:

First amendment:

Strike out section three, and insert the following in lieu thereof:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the joint resolution approved July 25, 1866, entitled a "Joint resolution in regard to the rations of Union soldiers held as prisoners of war," shall be extended so as to allow commutation of rations at cost prices in the settlement of the accounts of all enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and Marine corps, who died while held as prisoners of war in the rebel States, or who, having been so held as prisoners of war, have died, or may die subsequent to release, to be paid, however, only to the widow of such deceased person, if such widow remain unmarried, or in case there be no such widow then to the surviving children of the deceased, or if there be no such widow or children, then to the parents of the deceased, or if there be no such widow, children, or parents, then to the brothers and sisters of the deceased.

Second amendment:

Strike out the fourth section.

Third amendment:

In section eight, strike out all after the enacting clause down to and including the word "infantry," in line four, and insert the following: "That (excepting the Ordnance storekeeper and paymaster at the Springfield armory, who has the rank, pay, and allowances of a major of cavalry) all storekeepers of the Army shall hereafter have the rank, pay, and allowances of captains of cavalry."

Fourth amendment:

Add the following as an additional section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That in any case where a person entitled to receive payment of bounty under the provisions of any law shall make application therefor, or where such application shall be made by the proper representatives of such person, being deceased, and the discharge of such person has been lost, it shall be competent for the accounting officers to receive, in lieu of the actual production of such discharge, proof of the actual loss of the same and secondary proof of its issue and contents, together with proof of the identity of the claimant or person deceased, under such rules defining the character and form of the evidence as the Paymaster General shall prescribe.

Fifth amendment:

Add the following as an additional section at the end of the bill:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That section fifteen of the act to increase the present military establishment of the United States, and for other purposes, approved July five, eighteen hundred and thirty-eight, be amended so that general officers shall not hereafter be excluded from receiving the additional ration for every five years' service; and it is hereby further provided that officers on the retired list of the Army shall have the same allowance of additional rations for every five years' service as officers in active service.

Mr. SCHENCK. Unless there be some inquiry or suggestion to be made I will demand the previous question upon the amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. I notice that in the first of the amendments the term "parents" is used. Under a decision made by the Department, in reference to the bounty law passed at our last session, it is held that where that law requires the "parents" of deceased soldiers to apply for bounty the application must be made by both father and mother. I suggest, therefore, that the gentleman modify his amendment by substituting for the term "parents" the words "father or mother," so as to avoid the difficulty.

Mr. SCHENCK. I am willing to add the words "or parent" after the word "parents" wherever it occurs; and I modify my amendments so that they will read in that way.

The amendments, as modified, were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MILITARY INSPECTION.

Mr. PAINE. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution calling for executive information:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to communicate to this House the report of the tour of inspection of Brevet Major General Rufus Ingalls, made during the year 1866.

No objection being made the resolution was considered and agreed to.

Mr. PAINE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. ANCONA, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, made adverse reports upon the resolution of the House, respecting extra-travel pay to volunteers mustered out in distant Territories; and upon the petition of discharged soldiers of the first Michigan cavalry, whose claim was provided for in an act passed at the first session of the present Congress; which were severally laid on the table.

DISCHARGE OF VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. ANCONA, by unanimous consent, and from the same committee, also reported back bill of the House to authorize the granting of discharges to certain volunteers, with the recommendation that it do not pass; and also moved that the bill be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

SAMUEL SILVER.

Mr. ANCONA. I ask leave now to report a small private bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I yield further to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. ANCONA, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported, with the recommendation that it do pass, a bill for the relief of Samuel Silver.

The bill was read. It directs the Paymaster General to pay to Samuel Silver the sum of $210, in full payment for his services as wagon-master of the ninety-ninth regiment of Ohio volunteer infantry, from the 9th of September, 1862, to January 15, 1863.

The bill was read a first and second time, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ANCONA moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to inquire of the Chair what is the business before the House?

The SPEAKER. When the time for taking a recess arrived this afternoon the House was dividing upon the question whether tellers should be ordered upon the motion to close the debate upon the pending amendment to the tariff bill in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union in one minute after the consideration of it should be resumed in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FINCK. I withdraw the demand for tellers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FINCK] withdraws the demand for tellers, and the motion to close debate upon the pending amendment in one minute after the consideration of it is resumed in the Committee of the Whole is agreed to.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MORRILL moved that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to take up the special order, being the amendment of the Senate to the tariff bill.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended, and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the amendment of the Senate in the nature of a substitute to House bill No. 718, to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN stated the pending question to be upon the amendment to the forty-seventh amendment reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, to strike out in line eight, page 26, the word "forty," and insert in lieu thereof the word "eighty;" so that it would read:

On flax hackled, known as dressed line, eighty dollars per ton.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 27, noes 35; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ANCONA and Mr. MOORHEAD were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes fifty, noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means, as amended, was agreed to.

Forty-seventh amendment:

Page 26, line nine, after the word "ton" insert "on Russia hemp unmanufactured, forty dollars per ton."

Mr. BENJAMIN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "forty" and inserting "fifty" in its place.

I wish to inquire of the Chair what the order is in regard to debate?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this paragraph is closed.

Mr. BENJAMIN's amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was then agreed to.

Forty-eighth amendment:

On line eleven, page 26, strike out "Russia."

The amendment was agreed to.

Forty-ninth amendment:

On line twelve, page 26, strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirty;" so that it will read, "thirty dollars per ton."

Mr. McRUER. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "thirty" and inserting "twenty-five; or I will waive that, and merely oppose the amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means.

At the last session of Congress the duty on manufactured Manila cordage was raised from two and a half to three cents a pound in order that manufacturers might be protected against the duty on unmanufactured Manila hemp; and now, if this is raised to thirty dollars a ton, it will require that the duty on manufactured cordage shall be raised still further. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the present duty upon Manila hemp is twenty-five dollars per ton. That was the duty established by the House bill in which the Senate have concurred; and now, at this late day, the Committee of Ways and Means propose to increase it five dollars per ton.

Sir, we do not require this for the protection of any American manufacture, because we produce none of this hemp; and, taking into consideration the export duty upon this hemp at Manila, and the revenue tax, it is represented, as I think truly, that there is not sufficient discrimination between thirty dollars a ton and three cents a pound to afford the manufacturers here any protection at all. The consequence will be, if this amendment shall prevail, that instead of our manufacturing Manila hemp into cordage, we will be importing the cordage manufactured at Manila. I hope this amendment recommended by the committee will not be adopted.

Mr. WENTWORTH. As I understand it, the gentleman from California wishes to strike out the amendment proposed by the committee. I would very much dislike to have that done. I have already been censured by Western interests for not standing up for still stronger protection in this bill, and I would say that it is as necessary to have this increase here as it is to have an increase in any other portion of the bill.

The difference between the raw material and the manufactured article has been so fully discussed here that I do not propose to take up the time of the committee in a further discussion of it, but I hope that every friend of the "raw material," every friend of the agricultural interest of the country, will oppose the striking out of any of the items in this bill that the committee have recommended.

The question was taken upon the amendment recommended by the Committee of Ways and Means; and there were—ayes 32, noes 25; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. McRUER and Mr. LE BLOND were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 58, noes 39.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Fiftieth amendment:

Strike out "one dollar" and insert "three dollars" in the clause relating to flax straw; so that it will read:

On flax straw, three dollars per ton.

Mr. SCHENCK. Although that is a considerable increase upon the old duty, yet it amounts to next to nothing. Therefore I move to amend the amendment by striking out "three dollars" and inserting "five dollars." If foreigners are prevented by protective duties from bringing into this country the article hackled either in its first or second stage of preparation they may fall back upon the straw itself, and probably import that; though I think they will not do so to a very great extent. But to make the matter secure, I move to make the duty five dollars instead of three dollars per ton on flax straw.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I would ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] if he can state what is the present duty on flax straw; and how much increase is proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means upon the present rate of duty?

Mr. SCHENCK. It is proposed to increase it to three times what it was before; but it was contemptible before; it was nothing at all.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. How much is it under the present law?

Mr. SCHENCK. It is one dollar per ton in the present law and in the Senate amendment; and it is proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means to make it three dollars per ton.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. The question I asked the gentleman was what the duty is now.

Mr. SCHENCK. One dollar per ton.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I should like to have some evidence of that.

Mr. KUYKENDALL. You have the gentleman's own statement.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. SCHENCK. There may be none at all.

Mr. MORRILL. There is no duty on this article under the present law that I am aware of. I think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] is unnecessarily sensitive in relation to his flax straw. It is utterly impossible that it should be imported any distance from abroad; it is so bulky that it will not bear the cost of transportation. It may possibly be brought a few miles across from the Canadas, but in quantities so insignificant as to be of no account, and a duty of one dollar per ton will be sufficient to even prohibit this improbable traffic. But to provide against all accidents, we propose to put the duty at three dollars per ton upon flax straw. I do not suppose any of it will be brought into the West, either at one rate or the other. I think the gentleman ought to be satisfied with the proposed rate of three dollars per ton.

Mr. SCHENCK. Since gentlemen are so interogative—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The amendment recommended by the Committee of Ways and Means was then agreed to.

Fifty-first amendment:

Strike out the word "five" and insert the word "ten" in the clause relating to tow of flax or hemp; so that it will read:

On the tow of flax or hemp ten dollars per ton.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move to amend by striking out "ten" and inserting "twenty-five." We have increased the duty on hackled flax to eighty dollars per ton and on flax unmanufactured to forty dollars per ton. I understand that the present duty on the tow of flax is ten dollars per ton, just what the Committee of Ways and Means propose here. Now, to make the duty on this article in proportion with the duties which we have voted to put upon the unmanufactured and on the hackled flax it should be at least twenty-five dollars per ton. I therefore move this amendment, as this article comes directly in competition with our home productions.

Mr. MORRILL. I presume it is almost utterly useless to attempt to resist any proposition, no matter how absurd it may be, in relation to flax or hemp. I have risen merely for the purpose of saying that this article cannot be imported into the West, and therefore there can be no competition there. It is too bulky to be profitably imported in any quarter. The duty upon it has always been heretofore five dollars a ton; but after raising the duties on the other articles as we did, the Committee of Ways and Means thought it would be proper to increase this to double its present rate, or an increase of the duty one hundred per cent. It seems to me that ought to satisfy even gentlemen from the West who profess to be so eager to keep down any general increase of duties though equally eager to have their flax protected.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. FARNSWORTH; and upon a division, there were—ayes twenty-five, noes not counted.

So the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the amendment proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. LE BLOND. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "ten dollars" and inserting "fifteen dollars." That will make it more uniform with what we have done.

The question was taken; and upon a division, there were—ayes 29, noes 48; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. LE BLOND and Mr. CONKLING were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 26, noes 70.

So the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the amendment proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "ten dollars" and inserting "twenty dollars." I could not give my support to the amendment of my colleague to make this duty only fifteen dollars. Gentlemen may think that this is a small matter because it is only tow, and that a duty of ten dollars per ton upon that tow would a very heavy duty. However, when that tow comes to be converted into burlaps or coarse material for gunny-bags the manufactured article becomes somewhat important. It will be seen, by reference to this bill a little further on, that the Committee of Ways and Means propose "that burlaps valued at not over fifteen cents per square yard shall be subject to a duty of only forty-five per cent. ad valorem."

A MEMBER. What is "burlaps?"

Mr. SCHENCK. "Burlaps" is a coarse fabric made for baling purposes. I have been told by some members here that it is used to make sacks for our corn in the West. I suspected that would be said; and therefore I took the precaution of obtaining the written statement of a man who has manufactured more "burlaps" in this country than anybody else in the United States that such was not the case. And I am ready upon suitable occasion to produce the statement here.

Still burlaps are deemed by the Committee of Ways and Means to be worth protecting with a duty of "forty-five per cent. ad valorem," with the word "only" put before "forty-five" in order to make the statement the more emphatic. Now, the duty on this flax tow should be put up as the Committee of the Whole have put up the duty on unmanufactured flax and on hackled flax instead of keeping it where the Committee of Ways and Means propose to put it. And inasmuch as we have raised the duty upon the other articles, I propose that we raise it on this also.

Although this article is only "tow," it is somewhat important for more reasons than one. With us in the West what is called "tow" is not merely tow proper; it is that which is the refuse after the hackling of the flax. In the wasteful use we make of our flax, for want of sufficient protection, when the seed has been threshed out the whole of the fiber is converted into what is called "tow;" there being no "dressed lines" obtained from it at all. And that will continue to be the case unless there is more protection given to it. I therefore move to increase the duty to twenty dollars per ton, so as to make it in proportion to the action of the Committee of the Whole in relation to the other articles.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely rise to oppose the amendment to the amendment, and to say that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] having himself voted against an increase of the duty to even fifteen dollars, I do not think his eloquence can persuade the Committee of the Whole to turn "right about face" and vote to increase it to twenty dollars.

Mr. SCHENCK. I voted against fifteen dollars, because I thought it was not high enough.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. SCHENCK; and upon a division, there were—ayes 41, noes 57.

So the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The amendment proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means was then agreed to.

Fifty-second amendment:

Strike out "five" and insert "fifteen," in the clause relating to unmanufactured jute, Sisal grass, &c., so that it will read:

On jute, unmanufactured, and Sisal grass, and other vegetable fibers not otherwise provided for, fifteen dollars per ton.

The question was taken; and upon a division, there were—ayes fifty-two, noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Fifty-third amendment:

Strike out the word "burlaps" from the following clause:

On all brown or bleached linens, ducks, canvas paddings, cot bottoms, burlaps, drills, coatings, brown Hollands, blay linens, Spanish linens, diaper, damasks, crash, huckabacks, handkerchiefs, lawns, or other manufactures of flax, hemp, or jute, or of which flax, hemp, or jute is the component material of chief value, not herein otherwise specified, valued at thirty cents per square yard or less, four cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; valued at over thirty cents per square yard, six cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, sixty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I would inquire of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. MORRILL] why it is proposed to strike "burlaps" out from this clause?

Mr. SCHENCK, (in his seat.) In order to make the duty on it lower.

Mr. MORRILL. In answer to the question of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. GRISWOLD,] I will say that these goods are used very extensively in the manufacture of oil-cloth, and if the duty upon them is placed at a higher rate than forty-five per cent. ad valorem it will be necessary to raise the duty upon the other articles. And, notwithstanding the negative assertion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK,] they are also used in a form which in the West are required for bags.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I understand that various establishments in this country are just beginning successfully to manufacture articles in which this tow of flax exclusively enters. And it is in the direct line advocated by gentlemen who are to-day protesting against low duties for the agricultural interests, I trust the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I think this amendment was a mistake; I do not think it was intended by the Committee of Ways and Means. If the chairman of that committee [Mr. MORRILL] will notice, the proviso which it is proposed to add to this clause is as follows:

Provided, That burlaps valued at not over fifteen cents per square yard shall be subject to a duty of only forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

I do not think it was intended to strike out this word "burlaps;" I think that was a mistake. I do not like to make that statement unqualifiedly, for fear I may be contradicted again. But I think the Committee of Ways and Means did not intend to strike it out, but meant to have this rate of duty of "four cents per square yard and thirty-five per cent. ad valorem" confined to burlaps valued at over fifteen and not over thirty cents per square yard. I hope, therefore, that the Committee of the Whole will not adopt this amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. I am glad to hear what my colleague on the committee says. I was not present when this was suggested; as it is I think it should not be stricken out, and I hope it will not be.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Chairman, at the risk of trespassing upon the time of the House, but to correct the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means on the subject of burlaps, I move to strike out the last word.

If gentlemen will look to the paragraph they will find there are a great many things embraced, as linens, ducks, canvas paddings, cot bottoms, drills, coatings, brown Hollands, blay linens, Spanish linens, diaper, damasks, crash, huckabacks, &c., which are not manufactured from anything raised in the West, but there is one article we do manufacture, and that is these burlaps, these coarse goods used for baling.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me to call his attention to one point. The burlaps manufactured from American material are the cheap ones excepted in the proviso to that section.

Mr. SCHENCK. Exactly; that is what I am going to speak of. When there is one we can furnish the material, for that is to be put down lower than any other. It is just this exception to which I object. I thought there was a cat in the meal-tub, and I have obtained the written statement of one of the largest manufacturers of burlaps in the country, and I propose to read it as better than anything I can say on this subject.

Mr. ALLISON. Does not my friend from Ohio think that forty-five per cent. ad valorem high enough on this article of burlaps?

Mr. SCHENCK. Perhaps it is; but why make it more upon the others. They are four cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem. This is what the largest manufacturer of burlaps says:

BURLAPS.

On page 26, present House bill, line twenty-one, burlaps is stricken out, and on page 27, lines thirty, thirty-one, and thirty-two, a proviso is made which should be stricken out, and burlaps reinstated on line twenty-one, page 26.

Burlaps is an indefinite term, and under that head many other coarse linens, such as crash, cot bottoms, brown linens, &c., can be imported. In other words, it makes an exception which will cause much trouble. Burlap proper is for baling purposes. It is not used for grain bags, as is supposed by some, but is used for baling up goods as a mere wrapper. Being imported, it is usually made of jute, because jute came to the Irish and English spinners free of duty, and therefore is cheaper than their tow. It can be made here from our coarse tows, and would, if properly protected, furnish a very large market for our home production, for the amount used is very large, amounting to hundreds of tons. If made of our tows it would be stronger and more durable. It seems, in view of the amount of the home production it would consume and the labor it would employ, it should be reinstated in line twenty-one.

Thus the one thing we can furnish the material for is made an exception, and burlaps is stricken out and a proviso inserted that it shall only be subject to a duty of forty-five per cent. ad valorem, while the others are at four cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem. I hope burlaps will not be stricken out, but that we will strike out the proviso at the end of the section.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Fifty-fourth amendment:

Strike out the following:

Provided, That burlaps valued at not over fifteen cents per square yard shall be subject to a duty of only forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to insert after "burlaps" the words "and crash." I wish to state that crash, like burlaps, is a cheap article, and the imported article comes of different widths so that it is almost impossible to ascertain the measurement of this low price article not costing over fifteen cents per square yard.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know whether I am in order, but I hope this proviso inserted here will not be stricken out. I desire to say a word why I should like to have it retained. This applies only to an article manufactured of jute. It is used in baling cotton, in baling wool, and also used by our western farmers in sacking corn and oats and other products which they send to market. If this proviso is not stricken out the effect will be to allow an ad valorem duty of sixty per cent. on this article. It seems to me if we adopt the rule of protection we should protect the largest number of people; and certainly there is a larger number who use these goods than those who manufacture them. And it seems to me further, if this article of burlaps is not protected by a duty of forty-five per cent. ad valorem those who manufacture it should turn to some other branch of manufacture, and protect the producer of cotton, corn, and oats, by allowing him to procure this article at the cheapest possible rate. If I am not mistaken, and I think I am not, as to the uses to which burlaps are applied, it seems to me forty-five per cent. is quite enough, and thus divide the protection to some extent with the large class of producers who consume this article in the way I have indicated.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I hope the proviso will be stricken out, and the gentleman will pardon me for saying that I think there is a gross inconsistency in his argument upon this question. There is no reason in the world why the article should not be produced in this country; and the only way to furnish a market for the tow and flax for which the gentleman argues so strenuously is to foster the manufacturer of the very article which consumes the tow and flax.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, it was agreed to.

The question recurred on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to strike out one word for the sake of saying I hope this proviso will be stricken out. It is entirely inconsistent with what the committee have done already. I hope that crash and burlaps will both go out.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know whether I understand my friend. Do I understand him to say that it is inconsistent with anything we have done?

Mr. CONKLING. I do not know what he understood, but I mean to say that.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not understand it to be inconsistent. We have retained burlaps, and we here provide that burlaps valued at not exceeding fifteen cents per square yard shall pay only a certain duty.

Mr. CONKLING. Precisely so, and that is exactly what we did not mean to do when we retained burlaps. The Committee of Ways and Means struck out burlaps and then put in this proviso; now we have put in burlaps, and to be consistent we should strike out this proviso. I hope it will be done.

The amendment of the committee, as amended, was disagreed to.

Fifty-fifth amendment:

Strike out "gunny-bags;" so that the clause will read:

On gunny-cloth, cotton bagging, or other manufactures not otherwise herein provided for, suitable for the uses to which cotton bagging is applied, composed wholly or in part of hemp, jute, flax, or other material, valued at ten cents or less per square yard, three cents per pound.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I hope it will not be stricken out for the very reason suggested in regard to "burlaps."

The amendment was disagreed to.

Fifty-sixth amendment:

Insert the following:

On gunny-bags, twenty per cent. ad valorem.

On agreeing to the amendment there were—ayes 35, noes 57.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, and CONKLING.

The committee divided; but the tellers were unable to agree on the count.

The Chair accordingly appointed as tellers Messrs. SHELLABARGER and ELDRIDGE.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 41, noes 56.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The committee informally rose, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed House joint resolution No. 205, for the erection of an equestrian statue to the memory of brevet Lieutenant General Winfield Scott, with an amendment, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

Also, a joint resolution (S. R. No. 165) to refer the claim of the trustees of A. G. Sloo to the Court of Claims, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution (S. R. No. 182) for printing additional copies of the Appendix to the Diplomatic Correspondence of 1865; when the Speaker signed the same.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

The committee then resumed its session.

Fifty-seventh amendment:

Insert the words "and on hemp and tow yarns, single, valued at not over twenty-four cents per pound;" so that it will read:

On jute yarns, single, and on hemp or tow yarns, single, valued at not over twenty-four cents per pound, thirty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I hope that will not be adopted for the same reason that applied to all the other articles.

Mr. CONKLING. I want to express my concurrence with my colleague. It would be very inconsistent to adopt it after what we have done.

Mr. SCHENCK. Put me down number three; I hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. MORRILL. I trust it will be allowed to remain. It is precisely the existing law.

Mr. CONKLING. I would like to ask my colleague on the committee if the committee did not propose this fifty-seventh amendment as consistent with and belonging to those amendments which have already been rejected? And if that be true, then I ask him to inform the House how it is consistent to retain this amendment when the other amendments upon which it hinges have been repudiated by the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. MORRILL. In reply to the gentleman from New York I will say that if the gentleman had listened to what I said he would have seen that this amendment was not made with any reference to any of the amendments which have been voted on. It was made solely with reference to the article of carpets, in the manufacture of which a large amount of this article is used, and which would suffer serious injury without this provision.

Mr. CONKLING. I dislike very much to differ with my colleague on the Committee of Ways and Means about a matter of fact, but I cannot agree with him at all. We all know, it is past discussion by either of us, that these two subjects of duty are connected with each other, and we find these amendments in the bill submitted by the committee in connection with each other.

Now, I submit to my colleague that he does violence to the text of the bill, and does violence to the palpable logic of the connection of the two articles when he says that the committee in putting them together in harmony, with each other did not intend that they should be in harmony.

If the other amendments ought to have been rejected, as I think they should have been, I submit that this also should be rejected.

The question was taken on the amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means, and it was disagreed to.

Fifty-eighth amendment:

In line eighteen strike out the following words: And any person or corporation may import and use railroad iron at any time within ten years upon paying the duties imposed by law, any provision in any act of Congress to the contrary notwithstanding.

The question was put, and there were—ayes 32, noes 25; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. O'NEILL and KERR were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 86, noes 10.

So the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally, and the Speaker having resumed the chair,

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bill of the House No. 878, to quiet land titles to lands in the town of Santa Clara, in the State of California.

PATENT OFFICE REPORT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the annual report of the Commissioner of Patents; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JENCKES moved that five thousand copies of the report be printed for the use of the Patent Office, and ten thousand for the use of the House.

The motion was referred, under the law, to the Committee on Printing.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union then resumed its session.

Fifty-ninth amendment:

In line eighty-three, page 34, insert the following: On cotton ties made of hoop iron, three and three fourths cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

Sixtieth amendment:

In line one hundred and eighteen, page 34, strike out "forty" and insert in lieu thereof "two cents per square foot, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five;" so that it will read:

On iron wire-cloth, two cents per square foot, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Sixty-first amendment:

Insert at the end of the paragraph the following: When painted, four cents per square foot, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five cents per square foot.

Mr. PRICE. That must evidently be a mistake.

Mr. JENCKES. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "cents per square foot" and inserting "per cent. ad valorem;" so as to read: "and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Sixty-second amendment:

Insert after the word "two," in line one hundred and twenty-five, the words "and one half;" so as to make the paragraph read:

On machinery forgings, mill-irons and mill-cranks, of wrought iron, and wrought-iron pieces or parts, of any weight, for ships, steam-engines, or locomotives, two and one half cents per pound.

On the amendment there were—ayes 58, noes 39.

Mr. FINCK called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. FINCK and Mr. RICE, of Maine were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 64, noes 31.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Sixty-third amendment:

Strike out after the word "diameter," in line one hundred and forty-one, the words "two and a half" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three;" so as to make the clause read:

On chains, trace-chains, halter-chains, and fence-chains, made of wire or rods not less than three eighths of an inch in diameter, three cents per pound.

Mr. LE BLOND. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "three cents" and inserting "one cent;" so as to make the duty on these articles one cent per pound. It seems to me that a duty of even one cent is high. The articles embraced in this paragraph are used by every farmer throughout the country; and I do hope that Congress will show some disposition to favor the agricultural interests of the country. The agricultural class make up the great body of the American people. They constitute the bone and sinew of our country, and are the foundation of the nation's wealth. Yet by this bill in its present form that class of the community will be required to pay a heavier tax than almost any other class of citizens.

I hope that my amendment will be adopted, and that we shall reduce this duty to one cent per pound instead of making it three cents, as proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means. This committee propose an increase upon the rate fixed by the Senate, which was but two and one half cents. Instead of an increase there should be a diminution of the duty. Let us have fair competition in this matter. Why should the great consuming interests of this country pay three cents per pound on these articles if they can be bought at a lower rate abroad? I hope that this question will be duly considered. Let us lighten as far as possible the burdens of the agricultural class, for it is they who use the articles embraced in this paragraph.

On the amendment there were—ayes 36, noes 50; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN, under the rule, ordered tellers; and appointed Messrs. LE BLOND and MOORHEAD.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 32, noes 64.

So the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. LE BLOND. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "three" and inserting "two," so as to make the duty two cents per pound. My reason for offering this amendment—and I offer it in good faith—is that I think the duty too high already. If, sir, there will be no importations of these articles, then it is unnecessary to include them in the bill. If these articles will be imported, then I submit that we do fully enough in offering to the domestic manufacturers of these articles a bonus of ten cents on the foreign-made article.

I say, sir, as I have said before, that every dollar, every cent, added to the cost of imported articles in this country is so much taken out of the pockets of the consumers and given to the manufacturers of these articles. I know that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] advocates a different doctrine, and he seems to base it upon the ground of devotion to the manufacturing interests of our country. But, sir, I repudiate that doctrine. I do not believe in it. I believe that wherever you can get the cheapest article there is the place for the people who consume it to go for the purpose of purchasing it. I believe that we should not tax the great body of the people of this country for the benefit of the few who are engaged in manufacturing pursuits.

Now, sir, I will venture to say, notwithstanding the argument of the able gentleman from Massachusetts in favor of protection, that when he goes into the market to purchase any article or commodity, when, for instance, he wishes to buy broadcloth for a suit of clothes, if he finds that he can buy the desired article one dollar cheaper of an importer than of the domestic manufacturer he buys the imported article instead of that manufactured in his own country, all other things being equal. He buys it because it is the cheapest. And, sir, if he has a bushel of wheat or anything else to sell he does not inquire whether the man proposing to purchase is a citizen of the United States or a subject to Great Britain. He sells to the man offering the largest price, whether that man resides in this country or comes from abroad. In the consideration of a tariff bill I apply the same reasoning which I would adopt in buying or selling an article, for, as I have already said, the consumers in this country make up the great body of the American people, and we should look to their interests, not merely to the interests of the manufacturer.

With regard to the several descriptions of chains named in this paragraph, if by reducing the duty we can enable those who use them to get them at a lower price, why should we not give them the privilege of getting them as cheaply as possible? and if they have an article to sell let them sell it wherever they can get the largest price.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Chairman, in reference to the amendment proposed by my colleague, [Mr. LE BLOND,] allow me to say that these articles on which he proposes to reduce the duty from three cents to two sell at an average of about eighteen cents a pound; so that the duty of three cents would not be over twenty per cent. ad valorem. That is an outside statement of the rate proposed on these articles. Whether this is an exorbitant duty I leave to the judgment of the committee. But I call attention to the fact that twenty-five years ago, and under a Democratic Administration, these very articles bore a duty of four cents a pound; and it remained for many years at that rate; one cent per pound more than that which the committee propose in this bill.

I desire to say in addition, Mr. Chairman, that in this bill the rates of duty on iron have been somewhat increased; and the Committee of Ways and Means felt it their duty to increase in a corresponding degree the duties on articles manufactured of iron. I appeal to the justice of the Committee of the Whole to decide whether it is not fair, when the duty on iron has been increased, that we should provide for a corresponding increase on manufactures of iron. If gentlemen desire to attack the bill let them begin at its foundation and here. If this item be reduced they should go back and make other changes to correspond.

One word in reply to what my colleague [Mr. LE BLOND] says from his stand-point on the general question of the tariff. He is in favor of buying where he can buy cheapest. Is he not also in favor of living where he can live cheapest, and therefore of leaving the United States and moving to Canada, or if he wants to live still cheaper, to the Fejee Islands, where he can pluck bread fruit from the trees [laughter] and wear primeval fig-leaves, at little expense, and thus avoid the troubles of tariffs and woollens?

It occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, that it is worth something to live in a country like this. I would rather help bear the burdens of civilization to sustain a noble Government like ours than to go where everything is so cheap that it ceases to be valuable.

Mr. Chairman, the necessities of the revenue of this Government are so great that the old-time doctrine of prohibition on the one hand and free trade on the other are of but little practical value in this debate. If my colleague is hunting through this bill for enormities it would not be difficult for him to find paragraphs in reference to which he might exert his talents to some purpose.

Mr. LE BLOND. Point them out. It is just what we want.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am not fighting the gentleman's battle. He has help enough on this side already. But I do say that unfortunately for his case he has taken one of the most modest provisions of this bill as the object of his attack. He will observe we have reduced the duty on other chains as found in the Senate bill two cents a pound, which leaves the duty twenty-five per cent. less than it was twenty-five years ago under Democratic administration.

The amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means, and I do so for the purpose of making a few remarks in regard to iron, and particularly with reference to the proposition now before the committee.

This paragraph includes classes of iron largely used in this country, chains, trace-chains, halter-chains, and fence-chains of two different sizes. It includes fence-chains and fence-wire used for fencing purposes in our western country. I think the tariff proposed by the Senate is quite high enough on this article; but I wish to call the attention of the committee to another fact which appears everywhere in this bill, as it applies to iron and steel. I allude to the classification of these articles. Under existing law the classification of iron is carefully adjusted so as to admit at a low duty per pound the coarser product of iron, and that product in most extensive use in this country, and experience has shown that this classification, as well as the existing rate of duty, has afforded abundant protection to the manufacturer of iron and nearly all its products.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Can my colleague state the reasons for the change of grade?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly I can, without difficulty.

The object the committee had in view was of course to increase the duty on certain classes of imported iron without increasing the duty per pound. When we come to consider the question of iron generally the committee will observe that the classification has been entirely changed from existing law and for the purpose of increasing the duty, as I have stated. The classification in this bill was prepared by the manufacturers of iron and presented to the Committee of Ways and Means, and it is not likely they would so classify as to reduce duties. A word here upon the general question. We produced of iron and its products in this country during the last fiscal year, as nearly as can be ascertained from the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, about $213,000,000; while during the same year we imported in value only $11,000,000, in round numbers, of iron, and $19,000,000 of iron and steel—the largest importation being of pig iron, an interest now unprecedentedly prosperous in this country—yet the manufacturers of iron insist upon a large increase of duties upon all classes of iron.

The tariff of 1861 was intended especially to favor the iron interest. Certainly by that act iron fared well, yet by a succession of enactments these duties were increased, until by existing law rates have been increased beyond the tariff of 1861 on bar iron flats of classes most in use from forty-nine to sixty-eight per cent.; on bars, round or square, from forty-nine to one hundred and twenty per cent.; and on certain classes of hoop, plate, and sheet iron, from sixty-eight to ninety-six per cent.; yet by the proposed bill duties on all these classes are increased still further—from twenty-eight to one hundred and twelve per cent.; and in a few instances as high as one hundred and forty per cent.

Now, it is a serious question for us to consider whether the consumer shall be thus taxed for the benefit of an interest producing annually more than $200,000,000, against a total importation of $19,000,000, reduced $4,000,000 by our own exports of iron products. This demand for increase comes chiefly from Pennsylvania, which produced last year thirty-three per cent. of the whole product, while I have heard no complaint from New York and Massachusetts, which produced twenty-three per cent. of the whole product. I do not see how it can be possible to injure the iron interests of Pennsylvania, especially if these rates are not increased. No State has so great advantages as Pennsylvania; take the Cambria Iron Works as an example, if you go there with me you will see almost within the throw of a stone, near the surface, iron, coal, and fire-clay, essential elements in the manufacture of railroad iron, which competes with iron produced in England, made from ore brought from a point five hundred to one thousand feet beneath the surface, and coal mined at a point four hundred feet below the surface, and from fire-clay, the cost of an acre of which is £5,000 sterling. I yield to none here in my devotion to the interests of American industry and American labor; but I do not think we should so adjust our duties as to give one class of manufacturers and producers an especial advantage over others equally meritorious, and equally important to the development of the material interests of this country.

If we increase largely the duty upon what we may term the raw products of iron, we must also give a corresponding increase upon the more costly and finer products, so that if the general increase proposed is to be maintained the amendment proposed by the committee may not be too high. But, as appears from the finance report, there was imported of this class last year only $283,256, and it is not probable that the importation would be increased if we should adhere to the Senate proposition, which is, I believe, the existing rate. Therefore I hope the committee will adhere to the Senate provision. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the further fact that in aid of this iron interest, at the last session, we largely reduced the internal tax on iron, which to the extent of the reduction operated as an increase of protection to their product. The iron manufacturing interest, as all others, must be subject to the changes incident to the abnormal condition of our finances and may occasionally be depressed; but I do not see that we should now largely increase the cost of all iron products to the consumer for the purpose of aiding an interest now so well protected.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL. I do not propose to reply to the gentleman from Iowa, but to call back the attention of the committee to the subject before them, which is the duty on chains. The duty upon these chains is fixed in the bill at two and a half cents per pound. The duty on chains under the present tariff is the same. As proposed by the committee it will be three cents. Now, take common chains, nine or ten feet long, weighing fifteen or twenty pounds, and costing from two dollars and a half to three dollars and a half, all we propose to give to the blacksmith for the manufacture of this article in the way of protection, above what he pays on the material, is therefore from fifteen to twenty cents. Is that too much? I believe it is not.

The question being put on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 62, noes 40.

Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded tellers; but they were not ordered.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Sixth-fourth amendment:

Strike out "five" and insert "six;" so that it will read:

Less than three eighths of an inch in diameter and not less than No. 9 wire gauge, five cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

Sixty-fifth amendment:

Strike out "eight" and insert "seven;" so that it will read:

Less than No. 9 wire gauge, seven cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

Sixty-sixth amendment:

Strike out "two and one half" and insert "three;" so that it shall read:

On anvils of all descriptions, three cents per pound.

Mr. CHANLER. I move to amend by inserting one and a half cent instead of three. As I understand the theory of this bill it is protection; and the question very naturally arises, protection for whom? For the owner of the raw material, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] calls it, or for the manufacturer or for the laborer or for the consumer? The gentleman from Massachusetts says we are reduced to the necessity of taxing either the raw material or the manufactured article. I maintain that this is a distinction without a difference. Raw material, except in the form of the air we breathe, the water we drink, and the earth we stand on, does not exist. Everything the farmer produces is a manufactured article; the product of the mine, the ore which is dug out and smelted, is a manufactured article.

Mr. MORRILL. I raise the question of order that the gentleman is not speaking to his amendment.

Mr. CHANLER. I am speaking to it at this moment; I am speaking of the anvil, and I assert that it approaches as near to the raw material perhaps as anything, and illustrates admirably the distinction the gentleman from Massachusetts seeks to draw, but which he cannot do. It is a manufactured article; so is the ore out of which it is made. And you propose to draw a distinction in favor of whom? In favor of the blacksmith who labors upon the anvil? No, sir. In every smithy in this land you draw a distinction in favor of the owner of the raw material, as you call it, which is the ore of which the anvil is made. You draw a distinction in favor of the manufacturer of the anvil against the blacksmith who uses it, by giving to the former the advantage of the profits which you get finally out of the latter, and you give to the laborer employed by the manufacturer no other benefit than his per diem salary. And yet gentlemen have the effrontery here to assume that they are consulting the interests of the people.

Sir, it is manifest that this bill is not for the greatest good of the greatest number; it is for the greatest good of the richest few. The capital invested, which finds its profits in the manufacture of anvils, demands that this restriction be put upon it; but the blacksmith, the man who labors in the factory, makes no such demand. This bill is not made in the interest of the laborer nor the interest of the consumer, and it will be a difficult matter for gentlemen to pretend that it is made in the interest of the revenue. No such argument has been advanced, and if the gentleman from Ohio, who spoke lately of the tax which was laid twenty odd years ago in the connection just read and passed upon, presumes to maintain that the high tariff then made to protect the iron-interest of Pennsylvania increased the revenue, he will fail in proving it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL. Notwithstanding the richness and superior quality of our iron ores and the vast amount of iron that we produce, which should enable us to send it abroad by thousands of tons, I am ashamed to say that we neither export iron and not an anvil is manufactured in this country, so far as I know, under the present duty of two and a half cents a pound, and probably none will be manufactured if we put the duty at three cents a pound. It is a matter of entire indifference to me whether the duty is raised one half cent per pound or not; for, although this is a heavy article which ought to be manufactured in this country, I do not suppose that an increase of the duty one half cent per pound will induce a single manufactory to engage into the business.

The question was taken on Mr. CHANLER's amendment to the amendment; and it was disagreed to—ayes 27, noes 70.

The amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means was then agreed to.

Sixty-seventh amendment:

In lines one hundred and forty-nine and one hundred and fifty, page 35, strike out the words "two and one half;" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five;" so that it will read:

On blacksmiths' hammers, stone hammers, and sledges of all descriptions, wholly or partially finished, five cents per pound.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. I believe the present duty is two and a half cents per pound, and, on looking at the returns for last year I find that there were only imported into this country $9,000 in value of this article, so that the present duty is abundantly sufficient to protect those gentlemen who are engaged in this manufacture. I hope the provision will remain as the Senate fixed it.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa, if he has offered one, or to speak in favor of the amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. ALLISON. Before I take my seat I wish again to call the attention of my friend from Pennsylvania to the fact that last year the importations of this article amounted only to $9,000 in value, so that certainly the present rate of duty must be a reasonable protection.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I know nothing of the accuracy of the returns which the gentleman cites, but I hardly think that they can be correct.

These hammers are made of steel, and the duty on the steel of which they are made is more than two and a half cents per pound. It is necessary that we should put a higher duty on the manufactured hammers than we put upon the steel of which they are made. The Finance Committee of the Senate were evidently mistaken about this matter. They must have supposed that these hammers were made of iron, or they would not have put the duty at two and a half cents per pound.

The question was put upon agreeing to the amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means, and there were—ayes 59, noes 40.

Mr. FINCK demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. FINCK and Mr. PRICE were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 57, noes 37.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Sixty-eighth amendment:

In line one hundred and fifty-one, page 35, strike out the word "washers;" so that it will read: On wrought-iron nuts, bolts, or rivets, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Sixty-ninth amendment:

In line one hundred and fifty-two, on the same page, after the word "rivets" insert the words "other than screw-bolts not exceeding four inches in length."

The amendment was agreed to.

Seventieth amendment:

In line one hundred and fifty-four, on the same page, after the word "three" insert the words "and one half;" so that the amended paragraph will read: On wrought-iron nuts, bolts, or rivets, other than screw-bolts not exceeding four inches in length, wholly or partially finished, of all descriptions, punched or unpunched, three and one half cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

Seventy-first amendment:

In line one hundred and fifty-five, page 36, insert the following:

On wrought-iron washers, five cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

Seventy-second amendment:

In line one hundred and fifty-seven, on the same page, strike out the words "three and one half" and insert in lieu thereof "four;" so that it will read:

On wrought-iron tubes, and flues of all descriptions, four cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

Seventy-third amendment:

In line one hundred and fifty-nine, on the same page, strike out the word "three" and insert in lieu thereof "four;" so that it will read:

On wrought-iron hinges of all descriptions and bed-screws, four cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FINCK. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was put; and the committee refused to rise—ayes thirty-four, noes not counted.

Seventy-fourth amendment:

In lines one hundred and sixty-one and one hundred and sixty-two, on the same page, strike out the words "three and one half" and insert in lieu thereof "four;" so that it will read:

On galvanized iron, tin plates galvanized, and iron coated with zinc, of all descriptions, four cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

The seventy-fifth amendment was to make the duty on cut nails and spikes of all descriptions "one and three fourths" instead of "one and a half" cents per pound, as proposed by the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The seventy-sixth amendment was to make the duty on horseshoe nails of all kinds "six" instead of "five" cents per pound, as proposed by the Senate.

Mr. LE BLOND. In looking over the rates of duty upon iron of all descriptions I find that the Committee of Ways and Means recommend in all cases an increased rate over the Senate bill. In regard to this article of "horseshoe nails, of all kinds," the Senate proposed a duty of five cents per pound; the Committee of Ways and Means recommend a duty of six cents per pound, or an increase of twenty per cent. Now, I would like to have some member of that committee give us some reason why they recommend an increased rate of duty upon all these articles made of iron, and especially upon this article of horseshoe nails.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman will permit me—

Mr. LE BLOND. Let me add a few more words. As my colleague [Mr. GARFIELD] proposes to answer my inquiry, I would inquire of him what amount of these articles have been imported into this country under the present rate of duty, and if it is so great as to call upon us to make this increase of duty. Let us know what the amount of competition is, and if it is enough to affect this interest in our country. And I would like my colleague to tell us if he can what increased amount of revenue is expected to be derived from this increase of duty?

Mr. GARFIELD. I am unable at present to state to my colleague [Mr. LE BLOND] what amount of revenue has been received from this specific source.

Mr. ALLISON. I have the amount stated here.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] shows me an official statement that we received during the last fiscal year from that specific source the sum of $23,889.

Mr. LE BLOND. From what specific source?

Mr. GARFIELD. Horseshoe nails.

Mr. LE BLOND. That does not include horseshoe nail iron.

Mr. GARFIELD. I supposed the gentleman was inquiring about horseshoe nails.

Mr. LE BLOND. Very well.

Mr. GARFIELD. These nails are made from the very best iron, which pays a duty of five cents per pound. Last year the House proposed to lay the duty on horseshoe nails at seven cents per pound. This year the Committee of Ways and Means propose to decrease that rate one cent, and make it six cents per pound. For more than twenty years past horseshoe nails have been subject to a duty of from four to five cents per pound. The increased duty proposed on the iron of which these articles are manufactured makes it necessary to make a corresponding increase of duty on the articles themselves. These nails sell in the market at about thirty cents per pound; so that a duty of six cents per pound is by no means exorbitant.

Now, I desire to make one or two general remarks on this bill. And first the present condition of the country. The vast volume of currency, which I am sorry to see this House is unwilling to reduce, and which maintains prices at their present exorbitant rates, make it absolutely imperative upon us to impose a higher tariff upon imported products than would be needed in a normal state of business and trade. It is a necessity which I very much regret is laid upon us. If gentlemen would consent to the necessary reduction of the currency, which would bring prices down nearer to their proper level there would be no call for so formidable a tariff. But what I am compelled to call the strange and mistaken policy of this House on the question of the currency has compelled us to ask for an increase of the tariff.

Mr. KELLEY. I would ask the gentleman whether the excessive rates of internal taxation have not rather more to do with excessive prices than the condition of the currency?

Mr. GARFIELD. Not in view of the fact that for two successive sessions of Congress this House has very considerably reduced the internal tax upon manufactures, and has to that extent avoided the necessity of increasing tariff duties. But I am sorry to say that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] and my associates from the West in an almost solid phalanx have voted against a further reduction of the currency, and by their last vote have actually ordered a considerable increase in the present enormous volume of paper money.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I make this motion for the purpose simply of saying to gentlemen who are in favor of a tariff that if they will hold their tongues and vote, letting the other side do the talking, they may get a tariff; but they never will if they keep up this debate. [Laughter.]

Mr. THAYER. That is the best speech that has been made to-night. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. STEVENS. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Seventy-seventh amendment:

Insert after the word "pound," in line one hundred and seventy-six, the words "and on screw-bolts less than four inches in length, nine cents per pound;" so as to make the paragraph read:

On screws, commonly called wood-screws, two inches or over in length, nine cents per pound; less than two inches in length, twelve cents per pound; and on screw-bolts less than four inches in length, nine cents per pound.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "length" the words "wholly or partially finished."

The duty on screw-bolts less than four inches in length, as proposed to be fixed by the committee, is nine cents per pound. Now, sir, many of these screw-bolts shorter than four inches come into the country in an unfinished state, and escape all duty, except that which bars pay, being one and a fourth and one and a half cents per pound; in no instance over two cents per pound.

In the district in which I reside and in the country surrounding Philadelphia there are establishments which make these screw-bolts; and, sir, they have been almost driven to close their doors because, by a trick, bolts half finished are sent to this country, coming in at a duty of only one and a half cents per pound, and are then finished here. I would like to ask the Committee of Ways and Means why they have not inserted in this amendment the words "wholly or partially finished," for I see that in a preceding part of the bill those words are inserted in reference to wrought-iron nuts, bolts, or rivets.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I will state the reason why the words "partially finished" have not been inserted in the pending amendment. If those words were inserted, the effect would be—

Mr. CHANLER. I rise to a point of order. I submit that after the leader of the other side of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS], has decreed that gentlemen on that side must "hold their tongues," it is not in order for gentlemen to infringe the rule thus authoritatively laid down. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot sustain that as a point of order.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I was about to say that nine cents per pound on these screw-bolts is a high rate of duty; and it has been made high because of the large amount of labor put upon them. It would hardly be proper to impose an equally high rate upon these articles when only partially finished.

Mr. O'NEILL. Well, sir, it has been stated to me that many of these bolts, after being partially finished abroad where labor is cheap, are imported at a trifling duty, the same rate as that imposed upon bars; and thus injustice is done to American workmen. I do not see why the committee should not assent to this amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

Seventy-eighth amendment:

Insert after the word "three," in line two hundred, the words "and a half;" so as to make the paragraph read:

On all puddled and blistered steel, and on all steel other than cast or shear steel, in bars, sheets, slabs, plates, coils composed of rods or bars above three eighths of an inch in diameter, axles, tire, and parts of machinery forgings, a duty of three and a half cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

Seventy-ninth amendment:

Strike out in line two hundred and eleven the words "four and a half" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five;" so as to make the paragraph read:

On all cast and shear steel, in bars, ingots, sheets, slabs, plates, coils composed of rods or bars above three eighths of an inch in diameter, axles, tire, and part of machinery forgings, and steel wire rods exceeding three eighths of an inch in diameter, valued at above seven cents per pound, a duty of five cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, ten per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Eightieth and eighty-first amendments:

Strike out in line two hundred and fifteen the words "three and a half" and insert in lieu thereof the word "four;" and to insert after the word "four," in line two hundred and eighteen, the words "and a half;" so as to make the paragraph read:

On steel rods and steel-wire rods not exceeding three eighths of an inch in diameter, and not less than one eighth of an inch in diameter, a duty of four cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, ten per cent. ad valorem; less than one eighth of an inch in diameter, four and a half cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, ten per cent. ad valorem.

The amendments were agreed to.

Eighty-second amendment:

Insert "and a half;" so it will read as follows: On steel wire not less than No. 16 wire gauge, a duty of five and a half cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, twenty per cent. ad valorem.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 45, noes 30; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. BROOMALL and Mr. HUNTER.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 38.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FINCK moved that the committee rise.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes 52.

Mr. FINCK demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. FINCK and Mr. MORRILL were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 52, noes 45.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. POMEROY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the Senate amendment to House bill No. 718, with the amendments of the Committee of Ways and Means thereto, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to give notice to the House that to-morrow morning I shall make an effort to bring the tariff bill to a decisive vote.

DOMINION OF CANADA.

Mr. RAYMOND. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Whereas the establishment in immediate proximity to the Territory of the United States of a powerful monarchy, under the protection and with the support of a foreign nation, cannot be regarded as otherwise than hostile to the peace and menacing to the safety of this Republic: Therefore,

Resolved, That the President of the United States be respectfully requested to inform this House whether any remonstrance has been made by this Government against the proposed consolidation of all the British North American Provinces into a single confederation under the imperial rule of an English prince, or whether the consent of the Government has been given in any way, directly or indirectly, to the consummation of this project.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to hear that resolution debated.

Mr. RAYMOND moved to suspend the rules. The House divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 48; no quorum voting.

And then, on motion of Mr. BIDWELL, (at ten o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a resolution of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, ratifying the amendment to the Constitution of the United States proposed to the several States by a joint resolution of Congress, passed on the 13th day of June, 1866, to be designated article fourteen of Amendments to the Constitution; which was ordered to lie on the table.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MORGAN. I present a memorial of merchants of the city of New York, in which they represent that they are made familiar in the course of their business with the character and extent of the duties performed by deputy collectors of customs, deputy naval officers, deputy surveyors, and assistant appraisers at that port; that their duties are numerous and important, and the compensation paid therefor is inadequate. The memorialists therefore pray as an act of justice that the salaries of those officers be increased in correspondence with the enhancement of all articles of necessity, and in accordance with the increase of compensation in all departments of commerce and manufactures. This memorial is very numerous signed by the largest merchants in New York. I ask its reference to the Committee on Commerce.

It was so referred.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution directing the Sergeant-at-Arms to provide seats on the floor of the Senate for the accommodation of one reporter for the New York Associated Press and one reporter for the United States and European News Association, have instructed me to make a verbal report. A number of Senators have spoken to the committee on this subject. The opinion of the committee was that it was advisable to pass the resolution, for it is manifestly impracticable for the reporters to make accurate reports unless they can have a better place for hearing; but there were a great many Senators opposed to it, and it did not seem advisable to the committee that this change should be made, which is a somewhat radical one, with a strong minority against it. Since that time one of the associations, the United States and European News Association, has been dissolved, and the old Associated Press is the only one to which the resolution would apply. The representative of that association does not desire this accommodation, especially if there be any Senators who think it would not be advisable. I think, if a page could be stationed at the reporter's gallery, with authority to communicate with Senators, and with orders to convey no other messages, it would be of considerable advantage; for frequently the reporters desire to obtain the exact words of a resolution, and not having access to the floor, they have no means of doing it, except by calling out Senators, which is unpleasant to them and to us, or waiting until after the Senate adjourns to communicate with the clerks, and then it is too late for the evening papers, and late for the morning papers. The committee ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution.

The report was agreed to.

SALE OF COLORED CHILDREN INTO SLAVERY.

Mr. POLAND. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 157) to protect children of African descent from being enslaved, in violation of the Constitution of the United States, have had it under consideration and have directed me to report it with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed. We think that the object of the bill is accomplished by the civil rights bill that was passed at the last session and by the habeas corpus bill of the present session, and that no further legislation is needed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report of the Committee on the Judiciary, to postpone indefinitely the bill just reported by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. SUMNER. Before that is disposed of I will ask the Senator from Vermont how the object is accomplished by the civil rights bill?

Mr. POLAND. I am not aware that in any State there is any law in reference to the apprenticeship of white children but what is just and proper; and the language of the civil rights bill provides the same rights and remedies in the case of black persons as in the case of white persons. If a negro child is apprenticed in a manner that would make the apprenticeship illegal in case the child was white, we think the black child would be entitled to all the remedies to which a white child would be entitled under the same circumstances, and would be discharged from the custody of the guardian; and the habeas corpus bill passed at the present session would authorize a United States magistrate of any kind to discharge them upon habeas corpus.

Mr. SUMNER. And yet the Senator is aware that several gross cases have occurred in a neighboring State since the passage of the civil rights bill.

Mr. POLAND. We can do nothing except to pass a law against these cases, and provide some legal remedy for such wrongs. That we think is already provided, and we could do no more if we were to create further legislation on the subject.

Mr. CRESWELL. Let me ask the Senator what remedy is provided, and how that remedy is to be enforced?

Mr. POLAND. In case a negro child is apprenticed in a manner that would not be a legal apprenticeship if the child were white, the master would have no right to retain the custody of the child. If he should attempt to do so, he would subject himself to a civil action for false imprisonment, and perhaps an action for the wages of the child. We think that under legislation that already exists, on application to a judge of the circuit court or district court of the United States, the child would be entitled to be discharged upon habeas corpus. I am inclined to think, too, that in those States where the Freedmen's Bureau is in operation, the officers of the Freedmen's Bureau would be authorized to interfere and liberate the child. All the legislation that has been had with reference to this class of subjects seems as full and ample for the evils suggested under this kind of State laws as any others that discriminate between blacks and whites, as far as we were able to judge with reference to it.

Mr. SUMNER. It strikes me the practical question is, whether recent incidents have not admonished us that there was a disposition to evade that statute and under the protection of State laws—

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is the very thing the statute guards against.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator says that is the very thing the statute guards against; but, sir, your statute was not effective to prevent those incidents.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Will any statute if it is not executed?

Mr. SUMNER. But when you are apprized of an evasion I ask whether, upon the whole, it is not expedient that you should go forward and counteract that evasion specifically and precisely, so that there can be no possible excuse? Liberty has always been won by these anxious trials. Those who have represented her have been accustomed to go forward and take case by case and difficulty by difficulty and overcome it if they could. Give us first the general principle as we have it in the constitutional amendment; then give us legislation just as extensive or as minute as the occasion requires. Let it be "line upon line and precept upon precept," so long as any such outrage can be shown.

I do not wish to seem pertinacious in this matter, though I do not know that I can err ever by any pertinacity on a question like this. I do feel, however, that we are painfully admonished by incidents that have occurred almost under our very eyes that we ought to do something in order to tighten that great constitutional amendment. It contains in its language, in its text, words which I regret; I regretted them at the time they were introduced; I proposed to strike them out; and now they return to plague the inventor. I think there should have been no recognition in the constitutional amendment of any possibility of slavery. The reply of course is, that that amendment, if properly interpreted, does not recognize the possibility of slavery being legal in any just sense. I am aware of that; but it is misinterpreted, has been so in an adjoining State; and who can tell that it will not be so now in every one of the States of the South? I am sorry that the committee has not reported the bill, which I believe was introduced by the honorable Senator from Maryland, [Mr. CRESWELL,] with a recommendation that it should pass.

What did the Senate do last night? It passed a bill, on the report of my colleague, to prohibit slavery and peonage in New Mexico. Under the constitutional amendment, I take it, that bill in a certain sense was unnecessary, it was superfluous; but we have found a difficulty there; there has been outrage; slavery in some form exists there; and therefore my colleague was right when he brought his committee to the conclusion that they must meet it by a specific enactment. Where the abuse appears we must root it out. That is radicalism, I take it. So long as there is a human being anywhere under this flag, from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, who is held as a slave, there is occasion for your powerful intervention; and if there is any ambiguity or any failure in existing statutes then you must give us another statute.

Mr. POLAND. I had not expected to enter into any discussion of this subject this morning. I cannot, however, concur in the idea of the Senator from Massachusetts, that every time a law of Congress is violated by anybody we are obliged to reenact the law. It seems to me to be a very singular and curious remedy that we are to make proclamation here against every offender against the law by reenacting it. It strikes me if we do that we shall have a great deal of superfluous legislation. Now, the first section of the civil rights bill reads as follows:

"That all persons born in the United States and not subject to any foreign Power, excluding Indians not taxed, are hereby declared to be citizens of the United States; and such citizens, of every race and color, without regard to any previous condition of slavery or involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall have the same right in every State and Territory in the United States to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, and give evidence, to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, and convey real and personal property, and to full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of person and property as is enjoyed by white citizens, and shall be subject to like punishment, pains, and penalties, and to none other, any law, statute, ordinance, regulation, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding."

In the view of the Committee on the Judiciary it was utterly impossible for us to frame a law using language more express, covering more completely and exactly what is alleged to be the fault in the State laws in reference to the apprenticing of black children; that if they had laws that authorized black children to be apprenticed under any different circumstances, for any other reason, in any other manner, or upon any other terms than the laws of the same State authorized the apprenticing of white children, they were perfectly abrogated by this statute, and full orders are given by applications to the courts of the United States, and in those portions of the country where the Freedmen's Bureau is in operation, to the officers of that bureau, to give complete and adequate redress and full remedy for any violation of this law. It seemed to us impossible to frame a law that could more completely uproot the evil that is alleged to exist in some States in respect to this apprenticing of colored children than the civil rights bill does. In addition to that, at the present session we have passed a bill authorizing the judges of the courts of the United States in all cases where persons are illegally held in custody in violation of the civil rights bill to afford relief by writ of habeas corpus, to discharge them out of any custody, either private and personal or official.

Mr. CRESWELL. It is something to have obtained from the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate so distinct an opinion that the practice which has been carried on so extensively in Maryland, to wit, the binding out of colored children without even the consent of a parent, many of them actually at the mother's breast, on a charge that the parents are unable to support them, is unlawful under the civil rights bill; but when the committee assert that the courts of the United States and courts established by the Freedmen's Bureau are ample to afford protection to this class of people I think the facts show clearly that they are mistaken. The bill which I had the honor to present some time ago to the Senate for the protection of colored children in the States where those children exist in considerable numbers, was introduced at the instance and solicitation of the officers of the Freedmen's Bureau. They represented that that evil was carried to such an extent in Maryland that they were unable to check it even with the aid of the military authority at their command, and with the assistance of which the courts of the United States were ready to yield to them. They seemed to think, having an actual experience in the matter covering several years, that it was absolutely necessary for Congress to declare specially and particularly against that offense, and not only to prescribe a remedy by which the parents or the children by their next friend may be liberated from this new kind of bondage, but also to fix a penalty that may stare every party in the face who may be disposed to violate any one of the principles of the civil rights bill. Unwilling as I am at this late period of the session to exact from that committee a more favorable report than they have given us, fearing even if they did that we could not pass upon it at length, yet I venture this prediction: upon the law as it stands the committee will find that ample protection will not hereafter be afforded, and that it will be necessary for that committee to give the Senate some bill by which we may more amply protect the rights of these people in the same manner as the Military Committee gave us a bill last night in order to abrogate virtual slavery as it existed in New Mexico under the Mexican law. I do not feel at all satisfied with the action of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. SUMNER. I hope the bill will not be indefinitely postponed, but will be allowed to take its place on the Calendar.

Mr. POLAND. If the Senator desires it to go on the Calendar, I have no objection to that.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope the bill will be allowed to take its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont withdraw his motion to postpone the bill indefinitely?

Mr. POLAND. No, sir.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Let the bill go on the Calendar, with the motion to postpone indefinitely as the pending motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be entered if there be no objection.

Mr. POLAND. The Committee on the Judiciary have also had under consideration a resolution of the Senate directing them to consider if any action is needed by Congress to prevent the sale of persons into slavery for a specified term by virtue of a decree of court, and recommend its indefinite postponement, and substantially for the same reasons that I gave in reference to the bill reported just now.

The report was agreed to.

BAILIFFS AND CRIERS.

Mr. MORRILL. I submit the following report from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House (H. R. No. 356) fixing the compensation of bailiffs and criers of the courts of the District of Columbia:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 356) fixing the compensation for the bailiffs and criers of the courts of the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, that the House of Representatives recede from its action in disagreeing to the amendments made by the Senate, and concur in said amendments.

JOHN CONNESS,
DAVID T. PATTERSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
HORACE MAYNARD,

The report was concurred in.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. TRUMBULL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 615) for the sale of the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MORRILL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 616) to reduce the number of the members of the levy court of the county of Washington, District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 617) to pay the levy court of the county of Washington, District of Columbia, for the coroner's fees on soldiers, sailors, and other employes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

MAPS AND DRAWINGS OF POTOMAC BRIDGE.

Mr. HARRIS. The chief of Engineers desires to withdraw from the files of the Senate certain maps and drawings relating to a bridge across the Potomac; and I offer the following resolution to enable him to do so:

Resolved, That the chief of Engineers be permitted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the maps and drawings accompanying the report of the Secretary of the Interior communicating the report and surveys made in obedience to a resolution of Congress respecting the construction of a new and substantial bridge across the Potomac, dated February 7, 1857.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

INTEROCEANIC CANALS AND RAILROADS.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That two thousand additional copies of the report of the Secretary of the Navy on interoceanic canals and railroads, with an additional chart, be printed and bound; of which five hundred copies shall be for the use of the Senate, and fifteen hundred copies for the use of the Superintendent of the Naval Observatory.

PUBLIC PARK.

Mr. BROWN. Last evening when the Senate adjourned there was a bill pending for the establishment of a public park near this city. The bill had progressed to its passage, upon which the yeas and nays had been ordered. There is nothing to do but call the roll upon it. I move that it be now taken up.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 549) for the establishment of a public park in the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass; and upon that question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRIMES (after having voted first in the negative) said: I ask leave to withdraw my vote. I did not remember until the name of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. JOHNSON] was called that I had agreed to pair off with him on this bill. If he were present he would vote for it, and I, if permitted to vote, would vote against it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the Senator from Iowa be permitted to withdraw his vote under the circumstances? No objection being made, the vote will be withdrawn.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 7; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fogg, Foster, Frelinghuysen, Hendricks, Howe, Morgan, Nesmith, Patterson, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Wilson, and Yates—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Fessenden, Harris, Kirkwood, Lane, Sherman, and Williams—7.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cattell, Cowan, Edmunds, Fowler, Grimes, Guthrie, Henderson, Howard, Johnson, McDougall, Morrill, Norton, Nye, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sprague, and Stewart—17.

So the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1039) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1868; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 293) authorizing the employment of a public vessel for the transportation of provisions to the people of the southern States.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 878) to quiet the title to land in the town of Santa Clara, in the State of California, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. D. C. McRuer, of California, Mr. S. T. Holmes, of New York, and Mr. A. J. Glossbrenner, of Pennsylvania, managers at the same on its part.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 474) for the relief of John C. McFerran, of the United States Army; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1039) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending 30th June, 1868, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

LAND TITLES IN SANTA CLARA.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill of the House of Representatives (H. R. No. 878) to quiet the title to land in the town of Santa Clara, in the State of California, disagreed to by the House; and

On motion by Mr. CONNESS, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. CONNESS, Mr. WILSON, and Mr. FOWLER.

NORTON'S MARKING AND CANCELING STAMP.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate postpone all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 582. I will state that the Post Office Department will be very much embarrassed unless this matter receives some action speedily. It is in reference to the marking and canceling stamp now in use in a large number of post offices throughout the United States, and the time is very short during which they can have the use of it, only until the 1st of April next. It is necessary to dispose of it now in order that the Department may give out contracts for the postal stamps that they desire to use. If this bill should be favorably considered the Postmaster General desires to enter into contracts for their manufacture. If not he will be deprived of their use, and be obliged to take some other. I hope, therefore, that the bill may be taken up.

Mr. SUMNER. I will inquire of the Senator if that bill will give rise to much debate?

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I can only say that the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads have reported it unanimously, and deem it very just. As I have already stated, it is highly important to the Post Office Department that the matter should be determined at least one way or the other. There is a printed report accompanying the bill.

Mr. RAMSEY. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that the Post Office Department require this bill absolutely, and cannot get along without it so far as the cancellation of postage stamps, &c., is concerned. Unless this bill is passed they will be enjoined by the parties who claim the patent. They cannot get along without some legislation on the subject.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not like to interpose any objection to such a bill; but there is another bill which I think the Senate ought to act upon, one way or the other, and that is the Louisiana bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Several of us want to get up some bills; and as the Senator from Massachusetts asked the Senator from West Virginia if his bill would probably excite any debate or controversy, I will ask the same question of the Senator from Massachusetts: whether the bill which he urges will probably excite any debate?

Mr. SUMNER. I should not suppose it would on our side. I take it that every good Republican must be for that bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator seems to object to any bill that excites debate; and of course he does not ask us to crowd another bill that his shall come up, if it is to excite debate. I take that for granted.

Mr. SUMNER. Indeed I should hope that I might have the vote of my friend from Indiana for the Louisiana bill. It is a great measure of peace.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 582) to provide for the payment of past and future use and purchase of the invention and patent upon "post-marking of letters, packets, &c., and cancellation of postage stamps thereon," made by and patented to Marcus P. Norton, of Troy, New York, April 14, 1863, and reissued August 23, 1864, was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Postmaster General to pay the sum of $100,000 to whoever shall appear to be the rightful owner or owners of the letters-patent of the United States granted to Marcus P. Norton, of the city of Troy, State of New York, on the 14th day of April, 1863, and reissued on the 23d day of August, 1864; but within thirty days from the approval of the bill, such assignees, owner or owners of the patent, are to duly assign and transfer the letters-patent and the invention therein contained to the United States of America for the use of the Post Office Department, and formally accept of the sum of $100,000 in full compensation for the past use, title to, and right to use the letters-patent and the invention therein contained.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend the bill by striking out "$100,000" and inserting "$20,000."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I ask that the report of the committee in this case, which is in print, may be read.

The Secretary read the following report, made by Mr. VAN WINKLE from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, on the 9th instant:

The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom was referred the petition of Jacob Shavor and Albert C. Corse, asking compensation for past and future use of "Norton's marking and canceling stamp," report:

That they have duly considered the same, and they find that letters-patent, dated April 14, 1863, were granted and issued to Marcus P. Norton, of the city of Troy, New York, and by him assigned to Jacob Shavor and Albert C. Corse, on the 20th day of April, 1863, and duly recorded as by law provided, and afterward a reissue granted to said Shavor and Corse, on the 23d day of August, 1864, as by law provided, which said invention, so patented, assigned, and reissued, was for and upon improvements in "post-marking and postage canceling device," and which invention has been in practical and continuously exclusive use, by and under the order and direction of the Postmaster General, since the 1st day of April, 1863, the said invention having previously been tested in the most thorough manner in the New York city post office for more than one year, and approved and recommended to the Postmaster General by that office, without any compensation whatever to the said inventor or said assignees, nor upon any other stipulation than his and their consent that the same might thus be used until its utility and advantages to the Government should be effectually tested, when a fair and equitable compensation for either its use or the patent should be made to them by the Government.

This invention having been sufficiently proven as a labor-saving instrument, and its utility in every respect satisfactorily tested by uninterrupted use in various post offices in the United States, application was made to the Thirty-Eighth Congress for compensation therefor, in accordance with the informal stipulation already referred to. Another claimant to said invention appearing, the House committee of that Congress who were then considering the subject of compensation decided that since the validity of the title to the same as well as that of prior invention was called in question, that should first be determined by the courts, and the case was accordingly thereupon remanded.

By a transcript of the proceedings and judgment, now submitted as rendered in the United States circuit court for the northern district of New York, it appears that the questions of invention and of the validity of title were tried and decided in favor of the patent and the assignees, Shavor & Corse. Again, therefore, the assignees appear before the present Congress, claiming a suitable remuneration for said invention and patent on condition of an assignment of all their right and title to the same to the United States.

The value and importance of this invention to the Government is verified in the nature and manner following, to wit:

Having used the said invention, the postmasters at Washington, District of Columbia; Baltimore, Maryland; New York city, Brooklyn, Albany, Troy, Syracuse, Rochester, and Buffalo, State of New York; Hartford, Connecticut; Boston, Springfield, and Worcester, Massachusetts; Cincinnati, Ohio; Detroit, Michigan; and Chicago, Illinois, formally certify that in their several offices the Government is thereby saved from one third to one half the stamping and canceling clerk hire theretofore required and employed, and that "it greatly facilitates the dispatch of letters for transportation in the mails;" that "it greatly economizes in the time in the making up of the mails for transportation;" that it "cancels, in the most perfect and permanent manner, the postage stamp on letters, packets, &c., and at the same time gives on the envelope an intelligent post-mark;" and that "it also contributes to prevent frauds on the revenue by the chemical cleansing or washing of postage stamps for reuse or reissue after once used."

Its utility, facility, and economy in labor are so far established that the invention is being put into use in the larger post offices of the United States as rapidly as they can be supplied by the Government manufacturers. The Government has contracted for their manufacture with Messrs. Fairbank & Co., of New York, at a price of six dollars each, whose contract bears date on or about the 1st day of April, 1863, and for a term of four years, and consequently it will expire on the 1st day of April, 1867. The Post Office Department is now supplying post offices at the rate of more than five hundred per annum.

The Government, in consulting its interest, has fully committed itself, through the Post Office Department to the adoption, general, and continuous use of said invention; and over four years' use determines it an indispensable requisite to the safe, rapid, and economical operation of marking, stamping, and canceling in the postal department.

It is shown by a letter from Postmaster General Dennison, under date of March 15, 1866, addressed to Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, that at that time the Government was saving by the use of said invention the compensation annually of two hundred and fifty-four clerks of the various salaried classes. At an average salary of $900 per annum, this saving for labor alone would amount to the sum of $228,600, and an aggregate at this rate for the four years which the Government has already enjoyed the use of this invention, it will amount to the sum of $914,400, to say nothing of the other benefits and advantages derived from this invention during the past four years. In view of this saving in labor, directly traceable to the use of said invention, the saving must be much larger annually, by its future and increased use in many more and other large post offices throughout the United States, where the Norton stamp is being rapidly substituted for the old, unreliable, and discarded device used prior to the making of the Norton invention aforesaid.

The present Postmaster General, in his letter to this committee, bearing date January 15, 1867, states that the Post Office Department has already saved several hundred thousand dollars by the use of said invention; that the question of value to that Department has long since been settled; that the continued use of the invention by that Department is a necessity beyond question; that it is the best invention there is for the post-marking of letters and packets, and for the cancellation of stamps thereon, and that there is no doubt but that the Government will continue to save large sums by its future use.

The committee, therefore, after a most thorough examination and consideration of the whole subject, have determined upon the sum of $100,000 as a full and just compensation to the assignees, Shavor & Corse, for the past and future use of said invention and patent, as in full compensation for the transfer of the said patent to the Post Office Department. To carry out such determination, the committee recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The letter of the Postmaster General referred to in that report I have before me, and it can be read if any Senator desires it. I think it fair and proper to state to the Senate what are the advantages of this invention. In the first place, as already intimated by the report, what formerly required two distinct operations is now done at one operation. Where the post-mark had to be put on and the postage stamp to be canceled, that required two separate clerks in order to effect it; but by the use of this invention one clerk suffices for that duty. The postmaster at New York says that nearly one half the clerk hire used for this purpose is saved in his office, to say nothing of the other advantage that he speaks of, enabling them to expedite the mails, so that when a large ship mail is received to be distributed over the country there is a great saving of time.

But, sir, this is not all the advantage of this invention. Whenever a clerk gets skilled in the use of it, he puts on the post-mark so that it can invariably be read distinctly and plainly. It has been a great fault heretofore that the post-mark was almost invariably blurred, and where anything was required to be proved by a post-mark it was very difficult to do it. But the chief merit in this invention, and perhaps the greatest saving to the Government, is in the fact that this stamp so defaces the post-mark that neither by washing nor by any chemical process can the defacement be extracted. It is known that thousands and millions perhaps of postage stamps have been used again, many of them simply by washing with water and erasing the canceling mark and leaving the stamp as it was before. But this invention breaks the enameling of the stamp, lets in the ink to the body of the paper, and it has been found impossible, either by the use of water or chemicals, to restore the stamp. It is impossible to estimate the saving to the revenue of the country by this simple thing; and it is exceedingly simple when we look at it, although a hundred experiments were made before the proper material was found that was adapted to the purpose; but the saving to the revenue in the prevention of frauds upon the revenue by the washing off of the canceling of these stamps must be immense. I suppose there is no way of calculating it.

It is thought that the saving in clerk hire to the Post Office Department during the last year by the use of this invention was about three hundred thousand dollars. It has been used up to the end of the fiscal year in two hundred and fifty-four offices, and I presume it would be a fair average to say that one clerk was saved in each office, as there were seven saved in the New York office. That, at $1,000 apiece, would alone amount to $254,000. The Postmaster General is desirous of introducing this invention more extensively. I am told in the different offices. He is desirous at this moment to issue proposals for contracts for making the stamps. These patentees, after having been thrown back to the courts, after having had to try their patent and fully proving it, the judge on the occasion being Judge Hall, a former Postmaster General, having permitted this contract with Fairbanks & Co. that is spoken of to be entered into with the reservation, of course, that Congress should be obliged to give them a suitable compensation, now ask for remuneration at the hands of the Government.

There are numerous other stamps invented, it is true; but the Post Office Department and all the postmasters, so far as I have heard, and this testimony is from the Postmaster General himself, and the late Postmaster General in conversation, uniformly preferred this as the most effectual. Those who have been in the habit of receiving letters and who have noticed how generally the post-mark is plain and intelligible and how thoroughly the stamp is canceled can have no doubt, I think, of its great use to the Government. The Government has been using this invention for nearly four years. Since they commenced using it these parties have been turned over to the courts to ascertain who was the discoverer, and at immense expense the patent has been substantiated. Out of the $100,000 proposed to be given by this bill, nineteen thousand and some odd hundreds, say $20,000 in round numbers, is for expenses that have been incurred in perfecting this patent and in defending these suits. This sum of $20,000 the late Postmaster General considered a fair allowance to them anyway, and it has never been disputed that that is a just consideration in fixing the amount which these persons are to receive. I think there can be no doubt of the truth of what Postmaster General Randall says:

"The Department has saved already several hundred thousand dollars by its use, and I have no doubt will continue to save large sums by its future use. The question of its value to the Department has long been settled."

Different sums have been proposed by different committees as a compensation for this invention. The Postmaster General says in a letter that I have before me that he does not think $50,000, the sum once proposed by a committee of the House, a fair measure of the great value of the invention. The parties now propose to transfer the patent to the United States. For a remarkable invention like this, and one so efficient, I think the sum proposed in the bill is not at all enormous. Certainly it seems to me, at least, to be very reasonable, and so it appeared to the committee. But in addition to payment for the free use of the patent forever hereafter, and with the design and intention perhaps of extending it to a thousand post offices in the United States, these parties ask for payment for the four years' use of their invention, which has been attended with so much saving to the Government. I cannot think that the Senate ought to hesitate upon this matter. The amount named is hardly satisfactory to the patentees as it stands. They have demanded a much larger amount from time to time; but I believe that this amount, if it is proposed by Congress, will be accepted. If it is not, the Government must cease to use the patent on the 1st of April next, and the parties will be compelled to go to the Court of Claims to get a fair valuation for the use of this patent that has been accepted by the Postmaster General on behalf of the United States. The difficulty with the Post Office Department is that they must either have the right to use this stamp from and after the 1st of April or some other. The time is growing short now. The usual time for advertising for contracts has already begun to run. When we consider the inconvenience to which the Post Office Department would be subjected by substituting for this stamp, with which they are so well pleased and which so efficiently and effectually answers their purpose, an inferior one, or, to say nothing of the inferiority, simply to compel them to use another stamp for the work of the Department through the vast region it covers, I think it would be worth more to the Government to avoid that inconvenience than the amount that is asked for these patentees by this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that the right of these persons, for whose benefit it is proposed to make this appropriation, to the patent has been established by a protracted and expensive litigation; so that, so far as that question is concerned, it has been finally and conclusively settled.

The only question that remains is as to the amount which these patentees are entitled to recover or receive from the Government in consequence of the unauthorized use of their patent. I have here a letter from the Postmaster General, part of which has been read by the Senator from West Virginia, in which he states that the use of this patent has saved to the Government several hundred thousand dollars. I would suggest to the Senate this consideration in connection with this bill: suppose the patentees in this case should bring a suit in the Court of Claims against the United States to recover damages for the use of this patent. If the representations made by the Postmaster General be true, it occurs to me that the criterion by which to determine the damages would be the amount which the use of this patent has saved to the Government; and the probabilities are that, in a suit of that description, these patentees would recover against the Government hundreds of thousands of dollars; and if the Government should continue to use this patent, and there seems to be, from the statements made by official authority, an almost absolute necessity for its use, or for the use of some similar or inferior invention, it would seem that this amount would accumulate, and the patentees would be entitled to recover from the United States what patentees would be entitled to recover from an individual for a violation of the patent.

Mr. WILSON. Have they violated it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. What right have the United States to take a man's patent and use it?

Mr. WILSON. What is it good for if the United States do not take it? It is not worth a cent. I understand that the patentees have the right; that the Government tried the experiment; and all the worth there is in the patent the Government has made; and if the Government should not use it it is not worth anything. We have tried it. We have found it works well. I do not know that these persons have any claim upon us at all. We have not violated this patent. We have not used it against their protest that I know of. We have tried the experiment of using a patent stamp the worth of which consists in the fact that the Government uses it at all. I am in favor of paying them a just sum. It may be that the sum of $20,000 is not sufficient. That may be as far wrong one way as I think the sum of $100,000 is the other. But suppose the Government should decide that it did not wish to use this patent, and should take another patent; suppose a new patent should be discovered immediately; what is this worth? Will the Senator say what it is worth if the Government does not use it?

Mr. RAMSEY. What would it cost the Government to dispense with the use of it?

Mr. WILSON. Suppose that to-day a gentleman should come here with a patent vastly superior, and the Government should take that, what would this be worth?

Mr. CONNESS. They have not done it.

Mr. WILSON. They may do it. The whole worth of this patent is the fact that the Government uses it and proposes to use it; but if it should decide to settle for its use heretofore and not use it hereafter what would it be worth?

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I should like to state for the gentleman's benefit that since this report was introduced I have received letters from two inventors, who say they have invented postal stamps, and one offers his for $50,000 and the other for $25,000. One of them is accompanied by a photograph of a drawing of his invention, and it is precisely, I believe, upon the principle, from outward appearance, of the one that is embraced in this bill; but what he seems to claim as its principal merits are two discarded features of the present invention. For instance, in the first place the object was to get something that would effectually cancel the postage stamp. They tried first to do it by fine steel points; but it was found that those points were very apt to go too far into the letter and perhaps injure valuable papers inside. After trying a great variety of articles in order to effect this purpose, it is now effected with a powerful spring behind it and some other fixings that I am not able to detail; but the fact is that it does what no other postal stamp has been effectual in doing, that is, it breaks the glazing on the face of the postage stamp, which must be glazed in order that it may stand the wetting that it subsequently receives, so that the ink used in canceling penetrates the body of the stamp. That is found to be an effectual protection (and I think that is its greatest merit) against the washing of a stamp with water, or with chemicals that were formerly used for the purpose. It was not perfected till after many years had been devoted to the purpose. These efforts were encouraged by the successive Postmasters General of the United States, and although there is no written testimony to that effect, at the very beginning Postmaster General Blair told them to go on and perfect the invention and that he would ask Congress to bestow this very sum of $100,000 upon them. That was four years ago. The Government has had the use of the invention for four years; and it is now provided in addition by this bill that the patent shall revert to the United States.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, if I were an inventor, and the value of my invention were to be tested, I should dislike very much to have the honorable Senator from Massachusetts one of the jury in the case. I have listened often to estimates of the value of things, but I confess that the mode of estimating the value of this invention presented by my friend this morning is the most curious that I ever listened to.

Mr. President, there can be no disposition on the part of a committee of this body to grant more of the public money to a citizen who applies to be remunerated for what he has furnished to the Government than is found to be due. The care and exactness with which the honorable Senator from West Virginia has examined this question reflects credit upon him. The ingenuity and at the same time the simplicity (for all valuable inventions are simple when you understand them fully) of this invention is very great. As has been explained by the honorable Senator, it does not simply cancel the stamp by blotting the face of it, but it cuts and penetrates the surface of the stamp and impregnates the body of the paper of which it is composed with the preparation or ink, and thus makes it impossible ever to use the stamp again.

Now, sir, to be possessed of this stamp by a right, and to provide in one of our bills, which the honorable Senator from Maine [Mr. FESSENDEN] will have before us, that it shall be required to be used, or it shall be used, for the cancellation also of revenue stamps, would save, I have no doubt, to the Government very large sums of money annually. The law now only requires those stamps to be canceled by writing on the face, which is easily removed by a chemical preparation, and so those stamps are being constantly used over again.

I rose, however, Mr. President, to say that it is exceedingly difficult for a citizen to establish a claim against a Government and get justice. I know that the contrary is the general opinion. When a claim comes before this body for investigation there is somehow or other a suspicion attaching to it that the party applying wants more than is his due, and often persons make it a merit to attack a claim and thus establish a character for economy in opposing claims. I wish to say that I do not attribute any such motive to my honorable friend from Massachusetts; but it is too much the case. I, for instance, reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads this morning a bill for the payment of D. B. Allen & Co. for carrying the United States mails; and knowing this disposition so well, the committee instructed me to report in favor of the payment of one half the sum that is justly due to that company. If the Government owes D. B. Allen & Co. forty-six cents, it owes them $46,000; and yet the committee, impressed with the general disposition to reduce claims, and the company agreeing thereto, reported a bill for half that sum. I hope that this case, in being considered, will be put upon its merits, and that a valuable invention will not be cried down simply because the amount seems to be large, when for four years the Government has saved double, treble, quadruple the sum by the use of the invention.

Mr. RAMSEY. I hope that the Senate before they vote on this question will fully appreciate its importance. If we do not make some arrangement with these parties, the Government of course will be responsible, as the Senator from Oregon has suggested, in the Court of Claims for the past use of the patent, the value of which the Postmaster General has estimated at some $200,000 a year to the Government. They have been using it for four years; and just at this time the Post Office Department conceive that it is very important that some legislation should be had. They are now about entering into new contracts for the manufacture of postage stamps previous to their distribution throughout the post offices of the United States, and unless some arrangement is made with these parties the Postmaster General apprehends, as he has cause to apprehend, that they will enjoin him from the use of their invention. If the saving has been, as he supposes, $200,000 a year, we must of course anticipate, if we refuse to pass this bill or some other bill satisfactory to these parties, the loss during the next year of $200,000 in this very small matter. He tells us that unless this thing is done and unless he has the right to use this patent he will have immediately to place seven new clerks in the post office at New York, and an increased number in proportion to the business in all the larger offices throughout the country. The Post Office Committee gave this subject a great deal of consideration. It is very difficult to arrive at the precise sum to be paid in such a case as this. The parties themselves ask for considerable more than the amount named in the bill; but, in weighing all the considerations that presented themselves, the committee thought this was about a fair sum to offer these parties. I think myself that upon the score of economy the Senate ought not to hesitate in passing this bill.

Mr. POMEROY. I think we should perfect the bill, at any rate, by striking out the words "Post Office Department" and inserting "Government of the United States," because if this invention is valuable it is valuable for the Government in other Departments as well as in the Post Office Department. In the internal revenue department we are losing by the fraudulent reuse of stamps more than all we shall save in the Post Office Department by this bill. The law, as the Senator from California has intimated, simply requires revenue stamps now to be canceled by writing on them with common ink and a common pen the initials of the name of the party using them.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to the language of the latter part of the bill:

Provided, That within thirty days from the approval of this bill, such assignees, owner, or owners of said patent, shall duly assign and transfer the said letters-patent and the invention therein contained to the United States of America for the use of the Post Office Department, &c.

Mr. POMEROY. My amendment is to strike out the words "Post Office Department" and to insert "Government of the United States."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. Very well; I shall not object to that.

Mr. POMEROY. As there is another amendment pending this can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. WILSON. I am willing to withdraw my amendment for the purpose of allowing that motion to be made.

Mr. POMEROY. I desire to say that in large institutions and corporations, where not only an enormous amount of stamps are used daily, but the largest stamps, where instruments of writing are executed daily, and stamps to the amount of $1,000 on a single piece of paper are used, at present there is no mode by law authorized for the canceling of those large revenue stamps except, as I have stated, the writing of the initials of the party with a common pen; which writing is easily effaced, and then they may be used over and over again. Where corporations require mortgages to be executed for the securing of bonds, after the mortgage is recorded and returned to the office the stamps may be taken off and used again, if any one is disposed to be dishonest. But if you have them canceled in a way that destroys the texture of the stamp, so that it cannot be again used, it would be a great saving of revenue to the Government, and ought to be done. In our banking institutions, where notes are canceled every day, and where stamps to a very large amount are used, after the notes are canceled, as the stamp contains nothing but the initials of the person, who put it on carelessly with a pen, it can be taken off by any clerk and used again, and it is no doubt done over and over. I want this canceling stamp, if it is to be owned by the Government, to be used throughout the internal revenue department, as well as the Post Office Department.

Mr. RAMSEY. The value of this invention is not only in canceling the stamp, as the Senator from Kansas seems to suppose, but it is that at the same time that it cancels the stamp, it puts on the post office designation. The great saving is in that, killing as it were two birds with one stone, executing two pieces of work at the same instant of time. It would be useful of course for the other purpose, but it is of special importance in the Post Office Department for this particular reason: that it executes these two pieces of work at the same time.

Mr. POMEROY. A postage stamp is only worth three cents, and there is not much temptation to use it over again. In the revenue department, where the stamps are large, the temptation of course is large, and there are likely to be more frauds than in the Post Office Department.

Mr. RAMSEY. I do not object to the view the Senator takes of it, but it has an additional value twice as great as that.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. As the intention of the committee was that this stamp and the whole invention should be conveyed to the United States for whatever use they could make of it, I will, if it is proper for me to do so, accept the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair it is not within the power of the Senator from West Virginia to accept the amendment as a part of the bill. The motion to amend the Chair will put to the Senate at the proper time. The question now is on the motion offered by the Senator from Massachusetts to amend the bill by striking out "$100,000," and inserting "$20,000."

Mr. WILSON. I propose to modify my amendment by saying "$50,000." I believe that the sum of $100,000 is more than we ought to pay. I am so informed by gentlemen who have examined this subject with the greatest possible care; men of practical talent and intelligence. I am willing to do what is just and right in a matter of this kind; but I do not think we ought to pay a larger sum of money than justice requires. I have noticed since I have been here, during the last twelve years, that a great many very shrewd business men come here, and they wind us around their fingers with perfect ease. We are not competent to deal with these men generally on these matters. They understand a great deal more about them than we do; and I have seen the Senate cheated over and over again by such men. I am willing to do justice to the men now before us or to any others; but I think we ought to be careful in making these large appropriations. I believe $50,000 is all we ought to pay, and indeed more than we ought to pay. I think it is liberal. I wish to vote, if I vote alone, in favor of this amendment.

Mr. POMEROY. I hope the Senator does not allude to me.

Mr. WILSON. Certainly not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion now is to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$50,000."

Mr. POMEROY. I do not know any shrewd business men that can get any advantage of the Senate. There may be some, but I have never seen them. I have been in favor of this sum of $50,000, in committee and out of committee, all the time. I think $50,000 a fair compensation.

Mr. RAMSEY. The Senator from Massachusetts desires to be just. Does he think it just to offer these men $50,000 for the use of an invention by which the Government has saved $200,000 a year for four years? Would that be just?

Mr. WILSON. I do not think that is a question to be considered at all. If it saved $50,000,000, that does not alter the case. The question is, what is a proper sum to pay these men? This is an invention already made, and the Government gave them a patent. It is worthless except to the Government—worthless to them. If we had not tried it and used it, what would it have been worth to them? Now, what I propose is to pay them a just and fair sum for the discovery. As I have already said, it may be that we shall not use this invention six months longer. It may be that something else, as much superior to this as this is to many others, will be discovered. I think $50,000 is as much as we ought to pay.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. POMEROY. I now move the amendment I suggested a few moments ago, in lines fifteen and sixteen to strike out the words "Post Office Department" and to insert the words "Government of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. SUMNER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Louisiana bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion cannot be entertained unless the Senator moves to postpone the pending measure and all prior orders.

Mr. SUMNER. I supposed this bill had passed.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I give notice to the honorable Senator from Massachusetts that as soon as this matter is disposed of we are going to take up the Indian bill, which is necessary to be acted upon before the Indian appropriation bill can be acted upon.

Mr. RAMSEY. I hope Senators will allow the action upon this bill to be completed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question as soon as debate ceases.

Mr. POMEROY. There are several bills from the Committee on Public Lands of very great and pressing importance which I should like to have considered after this measure is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill before the Senate having been read three times, the question is, Shall it pass.

The bill was passed.

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 204) to provide for an annual inspection into Indian affairs, and for other purposes.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope the Senator will allow me to call up the Louisiana bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. This bill must be disposed of.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that this bill was passed by the Senate and was amended by the House, and the amendment has been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, and they report it back with a recommendation that the Senate do not agree to the amendment made by the House. The question is upon the amendment made to the bill by the House of Representatives, on which the Committee on Indian Affairs have reported as stated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to inquire if this is the bill on which the House substituted a transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department, instead of allowing it to remain in the Interior Department?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment made by the House will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause and to insert the following in lieu thereof:

That from and after the 1st day of July, 1867, the Secretary of War shall exercise the supervisory and appellate powers and possess the jurisdiction now exercised and possessed by the Secretary of the Interior in relation to all the acts of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and shall sign all requisitions for the advance or payment of money out of the Treasury on estimates or accounts, subject to the same adjustment or control now exercised on similar estimates or accounts by the Auditors and Comptrollers of the Treasury, or either of them.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War shall be authorized, whenever in his opinion it shall promote the economy and efficiency of the Indian service, to establish convenient departments and districts for the proper administration of the duties now imposed by law on the superintendents of Indian affairs, and upon agents and sub-agents, and to substitute for such superintendents and agents officers of the Army of the United States, who shall be designated for that purpose, and who shall then become charged with all the duties now imposed by law upon the superintendents and agents thus superseded, and without additional compensation therefor. The Secretary of War shall also detail an officer, not below the rank of brigadier general, to fill the office and discharge the duties of Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Officers of the Army designated to perform the duties of Commissioner, superintendent, agent, or sub-agent, shall not be required to give the bonds now required of civil appointees, but shall be responsible for any neglect or maladministration according to the Rules and Articles of War.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all contracts for transportation connected with the Indian service shall hereafter be made in the same manner and at the same time provided for transportation for the use of the Army.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War shall be authorized to withhold all special licenses from traders, and, under regulations to be by him prescribed, to provide the times and places at which all traders complying therewith may present themselves for bargain, barter, and exchange with the several Indian tribes, according to the laws of the United States regulating the same.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. GRIMES. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs if this is a substitute for the bill, or merely an addendum to the bill?

Mr. HENDERSON. A substitute for the whole bill.

Mr. GRIMES. This strikes out and does away with that junction of church and state, by which we were to have the churches select commissioners?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, sir. I will state for the information of the Senate, that at the last session the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DOOLITTLE] presented a bill to the Senate which passed, providing for a division of the Indian country into inspection districts, and the appointment of inspectors whose duty it should be annually to visit the tribes and report their condition and the mode and manner of managing those Indians. That bill was sent to the House of Representatives, and the amendment that has been just read by the Clerk, in the nature of a substitute, was adopted by the House, which proposes to turn the Indian department over to the Secretary of War. That is the plain and simple proposition now before the Senate. The Senate has already acted upon the other bill, and the question now is whether we shall concur in the action of the House of Representatives. I am instructed by the Committee of Indian Affairs—unanimously I believe I may say—to ask the Senate to non-concur in this amendment.

While I am up, as there is no time to enter into a discussion of matters of this character,

I will state that under some circumstances I would not be averse to transferring the Indian bureau to the War Department; but under the present circumstances I am opposed to it, and I could give to the Senate various reasons for that opinion. The chief reason is that difficulties now exist with the Indian tribes, and a proposition of this sort, in my judgment—and all the information that the committee can obtain leads us to suppose so—will merely complicate our difficulties. We think it would be better not to make a change just at the moment of time when there is a threatened war between the Indians and the settlers in the West. We think that in all probability at some future time the proposed action of the House of Representatives may be adopted without producing the difficulty that it will now inevitably produce. Under the circumstances we think it would be unadvisable to adopt the proposed change at present. Whatever may be the design of the Senate hereafter, whatever may be thought the best policy in the future on this subject, it is deemed unadvisable to do so now.

I have given the subject some considerable attention, and, without taking up the time of the Senate, I can say that I believe it will be the very worst policy to adopt a measure of this kind now. It will produce a very violent change in the administration of our Indian affairs, and one that the Indians will not understand, one that they will regard as an act of war against them; and in all probability instead of having our war confined to two bands of the Sioux Indians—and it seems now to be the latest and best information on the subject that there are but two of those bands engaged in war—we may have others, and not only other bands of Sioux, but various other tribes of Indians connected with them. For the best protection of the western people, for the security of travel across the plains, we thought, and we were unanimous in the opinion, that it would be best to provide, as the bill of the Senate provides, for an inspection into Indian affairs, and at least for the present let other matters stand as they are.

There has been much complaint, and very justly, too, of the management of Indian affairs by agents. Those agents in all probability have failed to discharge their duties, and many of them have been corrupt. The Indian Committee are determined, all of us, if we possibly can, to root out that corruption, and to get a better class of men in these positions. We do not believe that a change at once into the hands of the military will be attended by any better results. The strong probability is that the very difficulties we now encounter will be encountered with them, and at least until we shall have had time, in a period of profound peace with the Indians, to prepare a measure that will be cautiously guarded in every particular, we deem it proper to non-concur with the House amendment.

Mr. POMEROY. No one can be expected to discuss this subject at any length at this period of the session, and I shall not do so. I shall only say that I agree with what the Senator from Missouri has said, and with the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs. I hold in my hand, and I have read the greater portion of it, the report made by a committee that was sent out from Congress, consisting of the then chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, the present Presiding Officer of this body and Mr. Ross, of Illinois. I have become convinced, if I was not before, that it will be anything but just to the Indian to turn him over to the War Department at this time.

I confess that it is a very dark problem, and one that no one can solve, why it is that the Indian tribes are wasting away and becoming extinct. I confess, too, that the present management of Indian affairs is often open to criticism, and on account of what the Senator from Missouri has alluded to, being badly managed, it has become very unpopular; but I submit that the remedy proposed of turning it over to the War Department will not cure the bad management.

It is said it is expensive to manage it as it now is. I cannot think it will be less so under the management of the War Department. I have seen a good deal of that management in the West, and I never saw any pecuniary saving by anything done by the military. I know there is a discipline in the Army, or ought to be; I know that they can hold their officers and agents to the strictest account; and yet, after all, I find that their discipline is not so strict and their accountability is not so perfect but that frauds and corruption and mismanagement are often seen even in the military department.

I hold in my hand a communication, in reply to a resolution of the Senate, from the honorable Secretary of War, presenting the correspondence of the Department that has been had during the last year with certain military officers since the war commenced with the Indians. I have noticed these dispatches. Their tone and temper have a peculiar significance. General Sherman, whom I regard as one of the most humane and one of the best generals in the Army, sent a dispatch on the 28th of last December to General Grant, which he closes by saying:

"We must act with vindictive earnestness against the Sioux, even to their extermination, men, women, and children. Nothing less will reach the root of this case."

That may be so; but I am not prepared to turn out the Army on the Indians and exterminate them, men, women, and children. I think communications of this character tend to make the matter worse instead of better. If any one will read the testimony of Colonel Bent, whom I know very well and who has long been familiar with these Indian difficulties and Indian tribes, as given to the committee, they will see that in almost every instance he traces the wars we have had with Indian tribes to some indiscretion or cruelty or outrage committed first upon the Indians themselves. We ought not to expect that Indians are better than white men. If white men would resent such things—and I say they would lose their very manhood if they did not do it—it must be expected that Indians will show some resentment. They are not going to see their privileges swept away, their women and children murdered, and have no resentment; and they have an idea that all white men are committed to the wrongs of an individual. If one officer of the Army kills an Indian woman or child they intend to make some white man suffer for it, if not the man who committed the wrong.

Sir, with such sentiments as these from the men highest in authority in the Army, what can we expect if the agents are dismissed, the missionaries turned off, and the schools abolished, and a lieutenant sent out with a squad of soldiers to guard and look after the Indians, when it is understood that if an Indian tribe is hostile, as most of the mountain tribes are, I am sorry to say, they must be pursued to extermination, men, women, and children?

There is a communication also from Colonel Carrington to General P. St. George Cooke, in which he closes a long dispatch by saying, "I spare none." You may look this correspondence through and you will find that that is the temper and tone of all the communications between the commanding officers of the Army.

I will not argue this question because I do not submit any one wants to argue it; but I submit that it is not the time now to turn these Indians over to the War Department. I am ready to correct any abuses that have grown up under this system of Indian agencies. I will go with him who goes the furthest to turn out bad agents and correct all abuses. But there is another lesson to be taught; there are other responsibilities upon us in relation to those tribes than simply turning them over to the War Department to shift for themselves in contact with the American Army. We have received lessons from those who have gone before us. I have had my attention lately called to the discussion that was had in the Senate when the charge of the Indians was taken from the War Department, and if any one will read the abuses that were then brought to light, practiced in the War Department, they will see that there is no reason existing now why we should return to those same abuses. But as I see that the Senator from Nevada is anxious to discuss this question, and as I feel no disposition to prolong my remarks, and I know the interest my friend feels in it, I will say no more on the subject.

Mr. STEWART. I am unwilling at this stage of the session to make any prolonged remarks upon even this subject, which has come under my personal observation for many years. I have seen the operation of the Indian bureau in the remote Territories, and I have known it to be a failure, a miserable failure in my State. By the time any appropriation for the Indians gets out there it appears in the shape of blankets, manufactured in Europe, that are of no account, and trinkets that are of no use to the Indians, and on one occasion a couple of old flintlocks. They could have got plenty of them out on the mountain side, but I believe they were brought from Europe. You could not get them to take them as a gift. They were of no use. They did not know what to do with them. The goods that are distributed there are bought in New York. There is no transportation provided at this time, and they are not received by the Indians for two or three years afterward. The agents are entirely unable to comply with any kind of arrangement or promise made to the Indians. There has been trouble all the time with the Indians in the northern part of my State, and between there and Idaho. Trains are constantly interrupted. The inhabitants are being murdered almost daily; there has been an Indian war there for years, on a small scale, it is true, but exceedingly aggravated. The Indian agents complain that they cannot do anything, for the reason that supplies are not sent to them, or if sent, are not sent in time. They have no means to go on and do anything with the Indians.

Sir, the whole Indian system, so far from affording any protection whatever to settlements in Idaho, Nevada, Utah, and Arizona, is a failure. East of the Rocky mountains it has not come directly under my personal observation to so great an extent; but even there I hear similar reports; and now, whether or not a better system can be devised than the present one, the one that has been in operation for the past thirty years, I think it would be an excellent thing to change the channels of corruption. It will be some time before the new agents learn all the tricks of this trade. I think it is time to break it up and turn it over to the War Department. It will be some years before it gets to be as corrupt and demoralizing as the present system, from what I have seen and know of it. It does not give us peace; it does not protect the inhabitants; it does not benefit the Indian; it does not preserve his life. The contracts with him are not complied with, and nobody is responsible. Money that we appropriate is absorbed somewhere. The Indian is deceived; he makes war on the frontier inhabitants and murders women and children constantly. The officers of the Army complain that it is the non-compliance of the Indian agents with their contracts that is making all the trouble, and they should bear the responsibility. They are constantly working at cross purposes, and the result is—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada will suspend his remarks to enable the Chair to receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 1143) to provide for the more efficient government of the insurrectionary States, and agreed to the same with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 356) fixing the compensation for the bailiffs and criers of the courts of the District of Columbia; and the enrolled joint resolution (H. R. No. 261) for the relief of Stephen E. Jones; and they were thereupon signed by the PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate.

GOVERNMENT OF SOUTHERN STATES.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate postpone the pending and all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of the bill that has just been received from the House.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1143) to provide for the more efficient government of the insurrectionary States.

The action of the House of Representatives was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 1143, to provide for the more efficient government of the insurrectionary States, and concur in the same, with the following amendments:

At the end of section five of the Senate amendment, insert:

Provided, That no person excluded from the privilege of holding office by said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States shall be eligible to election as a member of a convention to frame a constitution for any of said rebel States; nor shall any such person vote for members of such convention.

Add the following as an additional section:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That until the people of said rebel States shall be by law admitted to representation in the Congress of the United States any civil governments which may exist therein shall be deemed provisional only, and in all respects subject to the paramount authority of the United States at any time to abolish, modify, control, or supersede the same. And in all elections to any office under such provisional governments all persons shall be entitled to vote, and none others, who are entitled to vote under the provisions of the fifth section of this act; and no person shall be eligible to any office under any such provisional government who would be disqualified from holding office under the provisions of the third article of said constitutional amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What order will the Senate take on this action of the House of Representatives?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. The first clause of the addition to the fifth section is a proper one, I think. It simply applies the constitutional amendment in fixing the qualifications of delegates to a convention. I think there is no great objection to that. I do not think it wise to prevent the persons excepted from voting at the election; but it is a small matter, and I am not disposed to stand upon a difference in regard to it. The recital in the last section is merely a repetition of what is contained in the preamble, and therefore certainly no one of those who voted for the preamble can object to it. It simply declares that the existing State governments in the rebel States are provisional. That is precisely the theory upon which the preamble is founded. I therefore certainly shall not object to the amendment on that ground. The only material objection I would have would be to that clause which disfranchises ten or fifteen thousand leading rebels from voting at the elections; but for one I am perfectly willing to agree to the amendment.

Mr. GRIMES. Only at one election.

Mr. SHERMAN. It does not prevent them from voting on the ratification of the constitution. I shall therefore vote for the amendment.

Mr. SUMNER. I differ from the Senator from Ohio when he characterizes that as a small matter. It is a great matter.

I should not say another word on this bill but for the singular speech of the Senator from Ohio yesterday. He made what I may call an assault on me, because I required in this very bill the amendments which the House have now made; and yet he is going to support them. Very well; I am glad that the Senator from Ohio has seen light; but I hope that he will revise his speech of yesterday. The Senator shakes his head. What did I ask for? What did I criticise in this bill? It was that it provided no safeguards against the rebels. I did not say how many rebels I would exclude. I only said you must exclude some of them, more or less. You do not exclude any. That is what I said yesterday, and I brought down upon me the cataract of speech which we all enjoyed from the Senator from Ohio, who protested with all the ardor of his nature, and he invoked the State of Ohio behind him to oppose the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts. And now, if I understand the Senator from Ohio, he is ready to place himself side by side with the Senator from Massachusetts in support of that amendment which has come from the House. I am glad that the Senator is so disposed. I am glad that he sees light. "Live and learn!" To-morrow I hope to be able to welcome the Senator to some other height.

Mr. COWAN. Excelsior!

Mr. SUMNER. "Excelsior!" as my friend from Pennsylvania says, and I hope it may be applicable to him also. [Laughter.] But there was another remark which the Senator from Ohio founded upon that which struck me with astonishment. He complained that I was demanding these safeguards now, and said that I had already in the bill all that I had ever demanded before. He said that there was secured in the bill universal suffrage without any distinction of race or color; and said he, "the Senator from Massachusetts has never asked anything but that." Now, I can well pardon the Senator for his ignorance with regard to what I may have said or asked on former occasions. Of course I cannot expect him to be familiar with it; and yet, when he openly arraigns me with the impetuosity that he showed yesterday, perhaps I shall be justified in showing him how completely he was mistaken. I have in my hand a speech made before the Republican State Convention at Worcester, Massachusetts, September 14, 1865—some time ago, the Senator from Ohio will remark—which was entitled "The National Security and the National Faith; Guarantees for the National Freedman and the National Creditor." In that speech I insisted upon what I called at the time "irreversible guarantees" to secure peace and tranquillity in our country. And I went on to say how I would obtain those guarantees. The guarantees that I asked were: first, for the unity of the Republic; second, for enfranchisement or equality of rights; third, for the security of the national debt; fourth, a guarantee against the assumption of the rebel debt; fifth, impartial suffrage; sixth, security for the education of the people. These were the six guarantees that I proposed as long ago as the 14th of September, 1865. And how did I propose to obtain them? I will not go into details. There was one way in which I proposed to obtain them, to which I call attention by way of meeting the challenge of the Senator from Ohio. I on that occasion said:

"We must follow Congress in the present exclusion of all rebels from political power. They must not be voted for, and they must not vote. On this principle I take my stand. Let them buy and sell; let them till the ground; and may they be industrious and successful. These things they may do; but they must not be admitted at once into the copartnership of our Government. As well might the respectable Mr. Ketchum reinstate his son at once in the firm which he has betrayed, and invest him again with all the powers of a copartner. The father received his son with parental affection, and forgave him; but he did not invite the criminal to resume his former desk in Wall street. And yet Edward Ketchum, who had robbed and forged on an unprecedented scale, is as worthy of trust in the old banking-house as one of our rebels in the government of the country. A long probation will be needed before either can be admitted to his former fellowship. The state of outlawry is the present condition of each, and this condition must not be hastily relaxed.

"Congress has already set the example by excluding from 'any office of honor or profit under the Government of the United States,' and also by excluding as counselor-at-law, from any court of the United States, every person who has given aid or countenance to the rebellion, or who has sought or accepted any office whatever, under it, or who has yielded to it any 'voluntary support.' By this act (July 2, 1862,) and the supplementary act, all rebels are debarred from holding office under the United States, or from practicing in the courts of the United States. This exclusion, thus sanctioned by Congress, must be the pole-star of our national policy."

I referred to the test oaths required:

"If rebels cannot be officers under our Government they ought not to be voters. They should be politically disfranchised, purely and simply as a measure of necessary precaution, and in order to prepare the way for those guarantees which we seek."

Mark the limitation:

"Vipers cannot use their venom in the cold." These are words of political wisdom as well as of scientific truth; and a great Italian writer did not hesitate to inculcate from them the same lesson that I do now.

"Surely recent rebels, who led in secession, and held office under the rebellion, are poor professors to rally these communities to the support of the national freedmen and the national creditors, and generally to the establishment of those guarantees which are essential to safety. Reason and experience warn us to postpone our trust in any such persons. Overcome in battle, they wrap themselves in a mantle of loyalty, tied by an oath—

"As they who, to be sure of Paradise,
Dying, put on the weeds of Dominic,
Or in Franciscan think to pass disguised."

"But character is not changed in a day; and that 'southern heart,' which was 'fired' against the Union, still preserves its vindictive violence. Even if for a moment controlled, who can tell how long it will continue in this mood? There is an exquisite fable of La Fontaine, where a cat was transformed into a beautiful woman; but on the night of her marriage, hearing the sound of a mouse on the floor, she sprang from bed with all her original feline nature; and so a rebel, transformed by political necromancy into a loyalist, will suddenly start in full cry to run down a national freedman or a national creditor. So strong is nature. Horace tells us, 'Drive it out with a pitchfork, and it will return.' Therefore, I insist, do not put political trust in that man who has been engaged in warring upon his country. I do not ask his punishment. I would not be harsh. There is nothing humane which I would reject. Nothing in hate. Nothing in vengeance. Nothing in passion. I am for gentleness. I am for a velvet glove; but I wish the hand for a while of iron. I confess that I have little sympathy with those hypocrites of magnanimity whose appeal for the rebel master is only a barbarous indifference toward the slave; and yet they cannot desire more than I do the day of reconciliation. To this end I am with them so far as is consistent with safety; but I cannot see my country sacrificed to a false idea. Pardon if you will. Nobody shall outdo me in clemency. But do not trust the rebel politically. The words of Shakespeare do not picture too strongly the danger of any such attempt:

"Thou might'st hold a serpent by the tongue,
A cased lion by the mortal paw,
A fasting tiger safer by the tooth,
Than keep in peace that hand which thou dost hold."

Sir, that was the position I occupied as long ago as September 14, 1865. And yet I was told yesterday by the Senator from Ohio that I was asking something new when I simply proposed to insert in this pending measure some additional safeguards against the return of rebels to power. That was all that I asked. Thank God the other House has given us these safeguards! The House of Representatives has placed this country under everlasting obligations in doing what it has done to lay the foundations of permanent peace. Those foundations can only be laid on a loyal basis. Two Presidents—one always to be named with veneration, another to be named always most reluctantly—have united in that same sentiment. Abraham Lincoln insisted that the new governments should be founded on loyalty; that if there were only five thousand loyal persons in a State they were entitled to hold the power. His successor adopted the same principle when in different language he compendiously said "For the rebels back seats." All that we require could not be expressed better, "For the rebels back seats" until this great work of reconstruction is achieved.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I always listen with pleasure to the studied rhetoric of my friend from Massachusetts. And although the eloquent passage he has read to us was familiar to me, for I heard it when it was delivered—

Mr. SUMNER. I beg the Senator's pardon; it was delivered in Massachusetts.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thought it was in a speech delivered in the Senate; at any rate I had heard the same idea from the Senator before. He there states that he desires, as a protection to the Union people of the South in the work of reconstruction, that all rebels shall be excluded from that work; that all rebels shall be excluded from participation in all the steps made toward reconstruction; and he goes further, and says that rebels should have no political power, and especially all that cannot take the oath. I was justified, therefore, in the remarks I made yesterday, in saying that the Senator from Massachusetts was committed to the doctrine that all persons who had taken part in the rebellion should be excluded from the right of self-government; and I said that if you should attempt to reconstruct society in the southern States on that basis it would not be republican in form or republican in substance, because the great mass of the white people of the southern States had taken part in the rebellion, and therefore would be entirely excluded from the work of reconstruction.

The Senator says I have come to his standpoint. God forbid! There is the difference which a child can see. The amendment now proposed by the House does exclude a few people from voting, I think unwisely; but how many? It excludes about from six to ten thousand, and when? Only at the first election for delegates to the convention. After that they can vote. I think that is an unwise exclusion: I would rather have them all vote, white and black, under the stringent restrictions of this bill, and let the governments of the southern States that are about now to rise upon the permanent foundation of universal liberty and universal equality stand upon the consent of the governed, white and black, former slaves and former masters. I said I would not exclude any from taking part in this reconstruction. I was willing to see a few who had been most conspicuous in the work of rebellion excluded from holding offices, but none from voting. Now, the Senator who yesterday was in favor of excluding all rebels is willing to stand with me upon a platform which will exclude about six thousand out of a million. I congratulate him upon his clemency and benevolence, and that he has now come to a platform upon which I am willing to stand with him and to say to him "Excelsior." I trust now, as this amendment will probably be agreed to by the concurrent action of the Senate and the House of Representatives, that we may have a platform upon which the southern people can build up society in the southern States, and that our great and glorious Union may be again united, with all the States represented, with all the stars displayed upon our banner.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Massachusetts is to vote for this bill, and I am proud to return to him the congratulations which he extended to me on a former occasion. I congratulate him that he is willing to extend the right of suffrage, the ballot, to the great mass of the people of the South; that he is satisfied with having only a few of the leaders excluded from that blessed privilege. I congratulate him for having risen to a higher plane, for having followed out the logic of his argument in favor of the bill, so that he is now willing to come up to a higher standard and vote for this bill.

I congratulate the country that so sensible a measure as this is about to pass, a measure which, though it may not be perfect in all its parts, is certainly a measure of reconstruction, one that says to the country and to the world that we mean peace, that we mean to have an end of these difficulties, that we mean to reestablish the Union on the basis of liberty. I congratulate the Senator from Massachusetts that he has abandoned the idea of establishing governments in the South upon caste, that he has abandoned the idea of having colored governments exclusively in the South, and that he is willing to allow the great mass of the people who went into the rebellion blindly, or even driven into it, to still enjoy the ballot, to still enjoy civil liberty when they shall have proved their loyalty by complying with all the rigorous conditions that we have found it necessary to impose. I am willing to impose these conditions because I believe they are just. I do not think any man in the South has the least right to complain of this bill. I believe it is a grand measure of justice and generosity, and the passage of it is the greatest event, in my estimation, that has happened since the surrender of Lee. I believe it will give us peace and prosperity. It frankly says to the country that we have a plan of reconstruction, an honest, independent plan, in which all can see light, in which all can see justice, in which all can see mercy. Let the bill pass, and let the country be satisfied.

Mr. SUMNER. I am sorry to be obliged to say another word; and yet if I did not I might expose myself to some misunderstanding. I accept the amendments which have come from the House as the best that can be had now; but I desire it distinctly to be understood that I shall not hesitate at all times to insist in some more direct and practical way upon applying the true principles of reconstruction. You have already on your table a bill known as the Louisiana bill. The time, I presume, has passed within which it can be acted on at this session; but in the earliest days of the next session I shall press that subject upon the Senate as constantly as I can. I believe that you owe it to every one of these States to supply them with a government in the place of that which you now solemnly declare to be illegal. In supplying them with such a government it will be your duty then to lay down the true foundations of loyalty, and I wish to be understood as not in any way circumscribing myself by the vote of to-day.

It may be that on consideration it will be best to apply to every voter the same oath which is applied to every person who enters Congress, which we know as the test oath. It may be better to meet the requirement of the hour in some other form. I am not at this moment prepared to say the precise form which I would urge; but I shall insist upon greater safeguards than any that are supplied in this very hasty and crude act of legislation. I accept it for what it is worth, as containing much that is good, some things infinitely good, but as coming far short of what a patriotic Congress ought to supply for the safety of the Republic.

Do not let me, then, be compromised at all by this bill or by any of the blandishments of the Senators over the way, [Messrs. SHERMAN and STEWART.] I listen to them of course with great pleasure, and to all their terms of friendship I respond with all my heart. I like very much to go with them, but I like much better to go with what seems to me to be the safety of my country; and when Senators even as powerful as the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Nevada take a course which seems to me inconsistent with the national security, they must not expect me to follow them.

Mr. WILSON. During these six years we in these Halls have passed upon measures of transcendent magnitude. By our legislation we have created and governed mighty armies and navies, founded systems of finance and currency, emancipated and secured the equal civil rights of four million men. Grand as have been the series of measures of patriotism and liberty, justice and humanity, I deem this great measure the grandest of all, that series of acts that saved the Republic. I think it the highest duty of Congress, the first duty it owes the country, to turn out of office every rebel who is in office in the rebel States. I think, and I have ever thought, that the great mistake, to use no stronger word, made by the President was that he turned these rebel States over into the hands of rebels. No rebel, whether he be excluded by the constitutional amendment or not, should be permitted to hold office in those States for an hour. This amendment of the House of Representatives recognizes these governments as provisional governments, and excludes from office and from voting, while they are provisional governments, persons excluded from holding office by the constitutional amendment. So far so good; but I think the rebels in office should vacate the offices they now hold.

Sir, I have very little faith in excluding men from the polls. I have fought the battle of enfranchisement with all my heart. I believe in manhood suffrage for man, without distinction of color or race or property or education. I believe that the poorer a man is the more he needs the ballot to protect himself and maintain his manhood in this democratic Republic. I am a democratic Democrat on suffrage and the rights of man. I have fought the battle of enfranchisement; I can never fight the battle of disfranchisement. It is with the deepest regret that I consent as a necessity for a great purpose to disfranchise any human being even for a moment. I vote for this great measure as a whole heartily, but I should vote for it more joyously if no human being on earth was disfranchised by it.

I wish to say further that so soon as these rebel State governments are organized, and the evidences of loyalty and submission to the law are manifested, I shall hasten to vote to relieve from all disabilities nearly all, if not all, the persons excluded by the constitutional amendment. I wish to see in our country everywhere forgiveness and amnesty for the past, peace and kind feeling for the future. I am now and have been for universal amnesty and universal suffrage, for securing the equal rights of all and the protection of all. I am for lifting all men up, and against casting any down.

This great measure is in advance, far in advance of any position heretofore taken by the Congress of the United States. The pending amendments of the House of Representatives improve the measure, and I am grateful to the Representatives of the people for this action. I thank the House and the country, well thank it, too, for this distinct declaration that these rebel State governments are mere provisional governments, and that the freedmen shall possess and exercise the right of suffrage while these State governments remain provisional governments. I am especially grateful to the Democratic members of the House, who unwittingly contributed to this glorious declaration.

By this grand act we assure protection to loyal men, to the enfranchised millions menaced by lawless bands; we proclaim as the will of the nation, from whose verdict there is no appeal, that the people of the rebel States ere their representatives shall occupy seats in these Chambers, shall accept the constitutional amendment, modify their own constitutions and laws in accordance with its provisions, and secure equal and impartial suffrage to all men, without distinction of color or race. The enactment of this measure settles forever in America the great contest for the enfranchisement of the emancipated bondman. Tennessee, admitted at the last session, has gloriously redeemed the pledges made by her loyal representatives and her loyal Governor. She has given, by a great act of justice, suffrage to her freedmen and assured the triumph of patriotism, freedom, and justice in the years to come. When the act shall become the law of the land, as it will become the law of the land in spite of opposition here or elsewhere, three millions freedmen will be clothed with the full right of suffrage never to be taken from them. The passage of this great measure forever puts at rest the distrust and apprehension of cautious or timid friends who feared that the nation might shrink from demanding of the States lately in rebellion the acceptance of manhood suffrage as an indispensable condition of restoration to their practical relations.

I now deem the adoption of the constitutional amendment of vital importance to the enduring interests of the whole country and the permanent security of the personal liberties of the citizens of the United States, regardless of color or race. The provisions for the security of the rights of persons in the first section of the amendment, and the power given to Congress to enforce those provisions by appropriate legislation, are of priceless value to the nation. These provisions embodied in the first section of the amendment will be studied by the foremost minds of the country, be discussed in the legislative halls and judicial tribunals of the States, in these Chambers and in the high judicial tribunal of the nation, by the statesmen and jurists of the country, in other times when the history of the great struggle for the extension of suffrage to the freedmen will cease to be remembered by the masses of our countrymen.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I have felt a solicitude for the condition of the country consequent upon the exclusion of the southern States from their right of representation in this body that I want words to express. The view that I have entertained is that in their present condition they are entitled to be represented. But the Congress of the United States, from the termination of the rebellion to the present time, have taken a different view, and I have lost all hope of seeing them at any early day, if at any day, with the consent of Congress, reinstated in their original condition. Besides, the interest, the vital interest, which the people of the South necessarily have in the present state of things, the interest of the other States is almost as great. As long as it continues, more or less will the reputation of the country suffer, and more or less will its material interests suffer. I have been, therefore, from the first ready to agree to any proposition which I believed would result in bringing the southern States back, however much I may be opposed to the conditions which might be exacted of them. Nothing can be worse than the state in which they are now placed: desolation around them; all rights denied them of a political character; and on the floor of the Senate, to say nothing of another branch of the Government, their character as men has been aspersed in terms which have caused me nothing but the deepest regret. I think I know that they are not deserving of such aspersion. I think I know that the descendants of the men of the South, who upon so many occasions battled on the field for the honor and glory of the country, and contributed so much to the success of our civil government, cannot be such men as some of the members of Congress have designated them. I wish them here in our midst, to show by their presence that in all particulars, moral and political, intellectual and Christian, they are our equals. The very battles they have waged in seeking to destroy the Government exhibited deeds of valor of which Rome in her proudest days might have boasted. If I had my own way I would at once receive them in this Chamber, with a heart full of conviction that they would be true to their duty to the country, and that they would promote its permanent interest.

But I have not my way. I am obliged, therefore, to acquiesce in the decision of the majority of Congress, however erroneous or unjust I may believe that decision to be, provided I believe that it will end in a comparatively short time in restoring the southern States to the brotherhood of States. I am unwilling that this Congress shall adjourn without the adoption of some measure that holds out a hope, however distant, that this may be the result of our deliberations; and believing that this will be done by the adoption of the measure as it now stands before you, I shall give it my vote, not because I approve of it in the abstract or in the particular, but because I think I see in it a mode of rescuing the country from the perilous predicament in which it is now placed.

Mr. President, if there be a feeling which should animate the heart of every American, it should be one of generosity, magnanimity, and charity for the men who, although they sought to break asunder the cords of the Union, are now looking with solicitude to their being reinstated. If there be a feeling which should animate every American citizen, it is that we should be, and at the earliest period, a people one and indivisible, demonstrating to the world that however alarming the few last years may have been, and however they were calculated to cause the lovers of constitutional freedom to despond, the time has come, or the time will speedily come, when the feelings consequent upon that effort will have subsided, and we shall be brought together again and be seen in the undisturbed exercise of the duties imposed upon us, and exhibiting to the world a people great in war, and a people capable of being in the end, the war terminated, as great in peace.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. President, I think experience has shown us that the greatest difficulty in the way of the adoption of the constitutional amendment in the southern States was that provision which required the great body of the people there to do an act, as they supposed, of dishonor. That constitutional amendment proposes to exclude permanently from office, both in the government of the United States and in the States, all persons who had at any time taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States and who had subsequently gone into the rebellion. Many of those were the leaders in the southern cause, some of them more responsible than the great mass of the people of the South, but not all. And so when the people of the southern States came to consider that amendment, the great body of them thought, "if we adopt this it will be to relieve ourselves from political disability and to secure to ourselves political power, at the same time sacrificing in these respects the men that we encouraged in the rebellion," and they felt that it was a matter of honor that they should not agree to it. Now, this proposition, coming at this hour from the House of Representatives, has, I think, this same vice in it. Do Senators desire that the constitutional amendment or any terms shall be agreed to by the South? Why, then, present to them a proposition that they think conflicts with their personal honor?

Why ask one man in the South to turn his back to another who was no more responsible in connection with the rebellion than himself? How would I stand if I were in the South to-day, and if I had gone into this rebellion, but had never held any office before the rebellion, and therefore had never taken any oath of office? It is asked of me to vote for a constitutional amendment which will disfranchise and render incapable of holding office my neighbor who went into the rebellion with me, no more responsible for it than I was. How could I vote for it? I secure to myself political power and influence and position by this vote, cutting down a man by my side who went into the rebellion with me, and no more responsible than myself. I have felt all the while that that was the greatest difficulty in the way of the adoption of the constitutional amendment by the southern States. I may be mistaken, but I have supposed so. Now, this interposes the same difficulty without securing, as I think, any great good.

This section, number six, which is proposed to the bill, I cannot support, for I do not believe its statement. I do not believe the States now organized, the ten States not yet represented, are provisional governments. I believe that they are States, clothed with all the sovereignty that any State of this Union can enjoy except the right to be represented here, which is denied by the power of Congress. Some of these States helped to fight the battles of the Revolution and to form the present Federal Government. When, how, or by what act did they go out? Since the rebellion, since the act of secession, Congress has over and over again recognized them as States. By the resolution of July, 1861, they were recognized as States. By the law apportioning Representatives among the States in 1862 they were recognized as States. Have they ceased to be States since that time?

Then I think they are States. I believe the State constitutions now adopted by the people of the South received no portion of their validity from any act of the President. His appointment of provisional governors could not confer upon those governors any power to remodel the State governments of the South; but when the people acted under the governors appointed, and the people themselves remodeled their constitutions, from the people came the quality of validity and legality.

Nor, sir, can I vote to hold that these States are provisional States, subject to Congress in every respect, subject, as it is expressed, "to the paramount authority of the United States at any time to abolish, modify, control, or supervise the same." I think that would be bringing into Congress a power dangerous to the whole Union.

But, Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss this matter further. I merely intended to express my opposition to these two features of the amendment that comes from the House of Representatives. No member of this body is more desirous to see harmony restored between the two sections than myself. Anything that I can consistently do, with the oath that is upon me, I am ready to do, which holds out even a faint hope of a speedy restoration; but when I think that we are sowing the seeds of discord, I cannot give my vote to the proposition.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, I am of opinion that the exclusion from the right of suffrage under the first clause of the House amendment is much more extensive than it was stated to be by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] in his remarks. The amendment excludes from the right of suffrage in the election of members of the constitutional conventions all those persons who are excluded from the right of holding office under the constitutional amendment proposed by Congress at the last session. The language of that constitutional amendment on this point extends to every person "who having previously taken an oath as a member of Congress or as an officer of the United States or as a member of any State Legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States," shall have afterward engaged in insurrection. By the sixth article of the Constitution of the United States it is provided that—

"The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support this Constitution."

I believe the constitutional amendment upon this point has not been well understood. Its scope and effect, the extent of its operation, has not been duly appreciated in the country. It is not that persons who held office under the United States or under the government of a State at the date of secession shall be excluded from the right of holding office under the United States or under their particular States. It is that any person who at any period of past time has taken such an oath shall be so excluded. Now I presume that, instead of there being but six thousand persons excluded from the right of holding office under the United States or under particular States, by the language of the constitutional amendment, the number is more likely sixty thousand, or perhaps still more. The exclusion includes, observe, not only officers of the United States, but officers of the several States; it includes persons who may have served in the State Legislatures; it includes all judicial officers of the States; it includes all State magistrates, all State constables, no matter at what time they may have been selected for the duties of their offices nor how humble those offices may have been. This constitutional amendment casts a net over the southern States and sweeps within its fold all the local officers who may have held office under the several States at any period of time, be it forty or fifty years ago. Taking the whole mass of those persons, the number must be very great; and instead of being six thousand, as the Senator from Ohio supposes, the number must be ten times as great, or more. It will include every person of special intelligence, of peculiar qualifications for the discharge of public duties throughout that whole country—every man now alive who has ever been chosen even to a local neighborhood office, so humble as magistrate or constable, during the last half century.

Now, what does the first amendment from the House do? It proposes to disfranchise all these persons from the right of voting, and from the right of voting at an election the most important that can be conceived with reference to their interests, the formation of governments for themselves, to endure for all future time, or until the same power which establishes them shall modify or amend them. Instead of being an insignificant provision, a matter of little moment, it is a very important amendment; it is most sweeping and proscriptive in its character, and one to which the Senate ought not to agree.

There is no reason for excluding every man of note, of prominence throughout the whole community from this proceeding of forming constitutions. It is against public policy; it is against every sound reason which can be applied to that subject; and, observe, it does not exclude merely those few persons who were leaders in the rebellion, who carried their States out, but it goes into every neighborhood and ostracises every man of intelligence, of character, of influence, who at any former time may have been intrusted with any office whatever, however humble and however little connected it may have been with the Government of the United States.

Again, sir, there is an observation to be made upon the second amendment sent us from the House, which I consider to be decisive against its adoption.

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. BUCKALEW. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROWN. I understand the burden of the Senator's present complaint is that this amendment excludes all those named from participating in voting and from holding office. I believe the Senator voted against the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] which did not exclude them, and now he votes against this because it does. I should like him to reconcile the two positions.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I do not know that there is anything to reconcile. Because a man votes against one proposition, it does not follow that he may not vote against another.

Mr. BROWN. It follows in so far that that was a basis of restoration predicated on that ground, that there should be no exclusion.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio contained exclusions against which I voted because I thought they were unjust and inexpedient. The present amendment contains an additional exclusion which I believe to be unjust and inexpedient, and therefore I vote against it for precisely the same reason that I voted against the former ones. If the Senator from Missouri perceives any inconsistency in this, I shall be obliged to him if he will show me in what it consists.

This second amendment informs us that this bill is not a finality, is not a settlement, is not an adjustment of this subject of national difficulty and dispute. We are informed by it that after these governments are set up pursuant to the extraordinary provisions of the bill, they are to have no validity or force as State governments; they are to be subject still to our will and to our pleasure; we are to be bound by nothing. After they are set up, by a mere breath we may sweep them away. If any provision of one of the new constitutions is displeasing to us, we can annul it. If any new law which may be enacted displeases us, we can revoke it. Nothing, therefore, that is done under the provisions of this bill, if we enact it, will be binding upon Congress or upon the Government of the United States. The whole subject will stand, so far as our power is concerned, precisely as it does at present. We shall be bound neither in point of law nor in point of good faith to anything whatever. The original bill which we sent to the House contains the provision that, after these constitutions are formed, they are to be submitted to Congress, and Congress is to approve them before they have any effect or validity. The people in any southern State, proceeding under our law, may form their government and forward a constitution to Congress, with an application to be restored to their former place in the Union; but Congress is bound in no way whatever to admit them, to recognize anything which they have done. That provision remains in the bill unchanged.

I say, then, that instead of this being a measure of reconstruction, it is simply a step in the course of aggressive and violent measures against the southern section of the country which has been pursued by Congress from the time when the war came to a conclusion in 1865. Pass this bill, and no matter what takes place under it the general subject of reconstruction is still before us; we are bound to nothing which has been done, and next session measures in advance of this will be introduced and pressed. And why not? Why not pressed and passed as well as this? Upon the very face of this enactment you say that Congress is bound to nothing which may take place under it; you say that these constitutions, however strictly they may conform to the regulations you prescribe in this bill, shall not be valid and effectual unless in your sovereign pleasure you choose to approve them hereafter. The House of Representatives says in this second amendment which it sends to us that all that shall be done is to be subject to the pleasure of Congress; we are to be bound, and the public faith is to be bound, by nothing contained in this legislation.

I say, then, you are now passing a measure which will have precisely the character, in the respect in which I am viewing it, that your constitutional amendment has; and that was well described by one who, although belonging to the majority by position, is somewhat independent in his speech, when he said that it was a measure to bridge over the fall elections, that it was a measure to catch the ears of the people, and tide over the difficulties of a political contest in the country. That was a very accurate description of the amendment; the result has shown that it was accurate. And what is this bill? It is a bill to meet the pressing demands of public opinion at this juncture in public affairs. It is to please the fancy of men of the majority in the country, who desire Congress to do something, who are complaining of inaction. To meet that demand you have a measure proposed; but observe, sir, how carefully, providently it is drawn so that Congress shall not be bound; so that the passions out of which this bill has sprung shall not be curbed and checked for the future. Immediately after you have passed it that passionate demand which we have heard for measures against the southern section can be renewed. The newspaper press and the stump and the halls of legislation can be again used for purposes of agitation.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] gives us notice in this debate that he takes this measure as an installment, not as a finality. He proposes to go on with this work, and so do others in both Houses of Congress.

This bill does not assure to us reconstruction and peace. It meets to some extent the pressing demands of the time, without securing to us a harmonious future.

I say, then, sir, that upon these grounds alone which I have stated, to wit, the sweeping and proscriptive character of the first amendment, and the delusive character of the whole measure as exhibited by the second amendment, when considered in connection with the fifth section of the Senate bill, it becomes a simple act of duty to vote against concurrence in the amendments of the House.

Mr. COWAN. Mr. President, I have been uniformly against all these projects. In 1861 I was a Union man, in favor of preserving the Union at all hazards. What was it? It was the Government of the States of the Union, according to the Constitution. I was desirous of preserving that Constitution, whether it was a compact or whether it was an ordinance. I was desirous of preserving it whether it was a simple agreement between States or whether it was an enactment by peoples establishing a Government. I was in favor of doing that by force. In 1864 I was an unconditional Union man. What did that mean? "We have a right to insist upon the Constitution and the laws; we have a right to insist upon their enforcement; we have a right to compel obedience to them? And I insist that that obedience shall be rendered." I was opposed to any terms with those who opposed the Constitution and the laws. I would as soon have gone into the street and have made terms with a murderer upon it as to have made terms with those in rebellion against this Government. I had no terms except the Constitution and the laws. When the rebellion was over, and when they submitted and agreed to render obedience to the Constitution and the laws, I was satisfied; and I say here that all schemes and all projects and all contrivances for compromise and for settlement and for reconciliation except upon that basis will inevitably fail. Why not? They would fail between private men, much more between communities of men. If I have a difficulty with my brother McDUGALL, if I assert that he owes me twenty dollars and will not pay, and I go to work and give him a flogging till he says he will pay, what then? Then the fight is over if I accept that proposition; but suppose I say "You owed me twenty dollars; you admit that you are bound to pay it; but now I will not take twenty dollars; I find I can flog you; I have got my hand on your weasand and you shall pay me fifty dollars." Then the McDUGALL that was down becomes the Douglas of old that was up; instead of my being his master I make him mine. The world which looks on at that transaction understands it in precisely that sense, and it never will be justified and it never can be justified; and I say to the American people that when they insisted upon certain terms and conditions which are embodied in the Constitution and the laws, and the South agreed to submit to them, they are bound to accept that submission and they will never get anything better. But day after day, as our experience has taught us, it has been going on from worse to worse.

What more did anybody want than obedience to the Constitution and the laws? If anybody had committed a crime those laws would punish him, and he submitted to that punishment. What more had anybody to ask? But unfortunately that course was not taken. We have a certain number of persons who fancy that they can reform the world, that they can make a better Government than we had before this rebellion broke out; that they can make the people wiser; that they can make the people happier; and that they can introduce a better state of order into society than we had before. I mean to say they pretend that that is the motive. I do not know that that is the real motive; I am rather inclined to think it is not; but that is the alleged motive for an attempt to insist upon more than the Constitution and the laws from the southern people before they restore them back to the Union.

What is the proposition now? The proposition is that you must not let the people who took part in this rebellion vote, or large numbers of them, and you must let vote a great number of emancipated negro slaves, whom nobody pretends or ought to pretend really either have the right to vote or are fit to vote. These are the terms you impose upon this fallen foe of yours, six or eight or ten million people of the same race you are, the same blood, and enough of them to hold us, as they did, for years in a most dubious and uncertain war, enough of them to-day to furnish half a million of as good fighting men as there are anywhere upon the earth; and yet you stand over them and you say you are not content with their observance and maintenance of the Constitution, but you must have more. Gentlemen talk about guarantees, talk about securities, and all that kind of thing. Mr. President, that is all as idle as the wind. Compel a guarantee, compel a security, compel an acquiescence in a condition! Who ever heard of a people who were compelled into an acquiescence of that kind, or into a guarantee of that kind, who felt it binding? Does not the stupidest man in the country know that if you compel a man to do anything it is not obligatory upon him? That which people do under duress, that which they do under the heavy hand of the conqueror, is not obligatory upon them at any time.

Then, Mr. President, I have only to say, as said in the outset, that I am opposed to these or any terms except simply to ask the southern people to stand upon the Constitution and to obey the laws. That will bring to us peace and security, and nothing else will. It may bring destruction to certain individuals; it may bring a new party into power in the country; and that is the real trouble, that is the very trouble. In ancient times either of the great parties was good enough to rule the country. Why? Because the country was free; because it had virtue and intelligence; because it had charity and Christian forgiveness; and it had those virtues upon which alone a republic could rest. In old times, when the Democrats came in the Whigs went out peaceably, and they said: "These men will preserve the Constitution and the laws; they will not, perhaps, carry out our views upon a tariff, or our views upon a bank, or our views upon internal improvements, or something of that kind; but still the great destinies of the country are safe with them." So when the Democrats went out and the Whigs came in, the Democrats said: "Perhaps the Whigs may charter a national bank; they may invest money in internal improvements; they may pass a bankrupt law, or they may raise the tariff, or something of that kind, but the country will still be safe."

Mr. President, that is the touchstone. Whenever that state of things ceases in a republic all history teaches it is farewell to the republic; it has then ceased to be a republic; its soul has departed from it; the very idea, sentiment, and belief which give it life have gone. Now, what is the reason that the Union cannot be restored instantly? What is the reason that it meets with such opposition here and there and everywhere. Is it not obvious? Has it not leaked out here, has it not leaked out everywhere, does it not leak out every day in the speeches of the Radical Senators on this floor, does it not leak out in every radical journal in the land, has it not leaked out over in the other House? "Oh, if you do this you will bring a new party into power!" And to prevent this, to stave off the evil day, to postpone it, to bridge over, to tide over between this and some future contingency, these guarantees are sought, these securities for the future which are as idle as the passing wind.

How are you going to preserve a republic when you cannot trust the people of the republic? You might preserve a monarchy, because a monarchy does not depend on the people; you might preserve a despotism, because a despotism does not depend on the people. Having no trust, no confidence in the people, having no charity for the people of the South, no belief in their honesty and their desire to repent and go along civilly and peaceably as they did before they tried their unfortunate experiment of rebellion; having, I say, no charity for them, no faith in them, lacking the very elements of democracy, much as you talk about negroes and your faith in negroes that is the reason why you want to get up these contrivances; and they are nothing but mere contrivances, such houses as children make with cards, and which will be blown down by the breath of the first passer-by. You expect to prevent all this and the natural result by schemes of this kind, futile, fallacious, that will come back to plague the inventors. Be just, be generous, be true to the first principle of our Government. What was that? That the people had virtue and intelligence enough to maintain it. If you cease that belief, say so. If you have abandoned it, why not say so? Will you gain anything by this trifling? Do you expect to succeed under cover of a pretense—a lie, in other words? To me such a course seems most destructive. Have trust and confidence in the people.

We have heard to-day, and it is most extraordinary how the ideas of men come to be turned upside down, how everything we have ever thought comes to be reversed, that the word "excelsior" means higher and higher—in what direction? Higher and higher in the direction of barbarism; higher and higher in the direction of stupidity, ignorance, and folly; higher and higher in the direction of negroes instead of the more intelligent of white men. Think of it for one moment. Here is a fabric reared upon the virtue and the intelligence of the white people. Does any man doubt their superiority to the black people? By the distribution of political power among those white people carefully made it is supposed that this fabric can stand, that it can be preserved. Gradually, little by little, however, the demagogues widen the franchise and seek lower and lower, not for strength to the fabric, not for security to the existence of the superstructure, but to widen the field within which they, by means of their insidious arts, may gain power for themselves; and what then? They weaken it down until there is no qualification for the franchise.

A Senator rises in his place here to-day and says he is for manhood suffrage. Manhood suffrage! Because a man happens to be a man, because he happens to have arms and two legs, therefore he is entitled to have a share in the government of men! It seems to me if a man had just dropped on the earth for the first time, if he had come as Minerva did from the brain of Jove, full fleshed, and a question had been put to him, he could not have uttered a more supreme, a more ridiculous absurdity than that. Where are the people who possess manhood all over the world? Why do not these people, who if they had manhood suffrage would erect and maintain a republic, do it in Africa?

Mr. McDougall. Define "manhood."

Mr. Cowan. I suppose it is the masculine gender with two arms and two legs, perhaps over twenty-one years of age. That is what I suppose might be meant by manhood here. It seems that everybody having those two or three requisites are men, and therefore have manhood.

But I ask again, in all seriousness, if there is such virtue in this manhood, this fact of being merely a man; has it remained until this year of our Lord 1867 to find it out? Where else was there a republican form of government such as this in the world before? Who made it? Those people who had manhood simply? Why, Mr. President, it was the highest forms of men upon the planet, and not only the highest forms of men, but the highest forms of men working under the most favorable of all conditions, in a new continent, untrammelled by any of the difficulties which might have surrounded an older society, with illimitable, boundless territory at their disposition. They could form this Government. They did form it. Did it succeed by allowing the franchise to all the white males above the age of twenty-one, who had paid taxes within two years, and had a certain residence? Has it succeeded within the last six years? What is the reason that it did not succeed? I put that question. Why is it that we have had this rebellion? Is it because too few people were voting? Is it because you had not dived into the depths of human debasement to fish up the virtue and intelligence which you desire to sustain and invigorate your institutions? Had there been an intelligent, pure, and virtuous constituency in the North; had there been one in the South; had common sense thrown the ballots in either quarter, would this rebellion have taken place? Why, sir, if there is one thing in the world that is more easily demonstrated than another thing it is that it was owing to the fact that you had widened your franchise, that you had thrown the door open to all kinds of demagoguism, that you had abandoned all common sense and all decency in the conduct of your public affairs, that you had the rebellion. Does anybody pretend that there was real cause for the rebellion? Not a particle. The Government of the United States had committed no wrongs. It had inflicted no injuries. No man could come to it and ask for redress of the one or vengeance for the other. Why, then, that rebellion against this fair fabric under which men lived, under which the country prospered, under which it rose to its great height, and became one of the first Powers upon the earth? It was just because of this evil element of supposing that all men have virtue and all men have intelligence enough to do this thing which the whole world stands up to-day and lifts up its hands and swears at the altar of the most high and living God is a lie. It was because experience was abandoned and lost sight of; and you furnished a feast at which the demagogues and the politicians might eat, and at which they might achieve for themselves personal power and personal distinction at the expense of the great masses, and then you had the rebellion, because whenever that is thwarted by the two coming together war results as a matter of necessity.

Then, Senators, taught by the lessons of the past, assured especially by the lessons of the past two years, and they are pregnant with meaning to him who desires to understand them, leave off this attempt to compromise, leave off this attempt to settle, leave off your doctrine of guarantees and securities; turn yourselves back to your Constitution and your laws; turn away from this doctrine that the United States are superior to the States outside the range of the Constitution. Keep yourselves within it. Allow the States to be free as they were at the time they made the Constitution. Let them settle the question of suffrage for themselves. Let them preserve all their reserved rights. Ask the South to yield to the Constitution and they will yield, and peace will come, and another thing will not come which you fear. Do that to-morrow, do it in a spirit of magnanimity and generosity, and the dominant party now in power in the Senate and in the other House will maintain its dominancy. Disregard that, insist upon your new projects, and when ruin comes upon you, the longer you put it off the more fearful and terrible it will be.

That, Mr. President, I have no doubt would be the true wisdom; and I need say nothing further in support of that view than to refer my colleagues to the past. In the spring of 1865 the rebellion was suppressed and the people submitted. The golden opportunity was then had of restoring the Union instantly, without terms of any kind. That opportunity gone by will never come again, I fear, and certainly it will never come again by force; it will never come again by imposing conditions—never, never. It never has done so; it never will do so. The most dangerous thing in the world it would be for you if these conditions were accepted, for the moment these conditions were accepted you would lose your hold upon that very subject over which you desire to maintain control. Is not that plain and palpable? You stipulate with a man whom you have down and who is in your toils that if he does so and so you will let him up. You stipulate with the Geni who came out of the vessel, that if he does so and so you will let him out, and when he gets out he kicks the vessel into the sea. That has always been the case; it is the case to-day. Who ever succeeded in this career upon which the dominant majority would hurry the minority of the nation to-day? Nobody; and if you do not succeed, then all is lost. If, however, you take the lawful course, the course which you have a right to take, the course for which you made war, stand under the flag which gave you victory because you were right, you may maintain and perpetuate this fabric, and you may have peace and happiness under it. But go on with your Utopian schemes and your expectation of maintaining yourselves in political power, and your expectation of turning your barbarian man (who never did make anything on the earth and who never can make anything in his present form) into an American republican, and making him one of the props and pillars of a Government so complex as ours and so dependent upon virtue, intelligence, and independence in the people, and you simply invite your ruin and open a gulf into which you will inevitably fall and be swallowed up. When you make a bargain, stand upon it. When you bring an action of covenant and get your damages, take them. When men do to you what you demand of them, do not stop to inquire for more. If you do you will perpetuate the contest, and in the end, just as your demands and exactions rise in the scale of injustice, just in the same degree will you weaken yourselves. Where are you now? You are here attempting what?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Attempting to legislate.

Mr. COWAN. Attempting to legislate! No. I will tell you what you are attempting to do. You are attempting to achieve the impossible, and the impossible rises up before you and stares you in the face with such a terrible glare that you hesitate yourselves. The House sends a bill here, passed with great unanimity, and the Senate rises up and shrinks back from the specter, modifies it, sends it back in a modified form, and then it comes back here in a still further modified form. If there was nothing else to show the utter fallacy, the utter futility, and the revolutionary tendency of all these things, it is the multifarious plans that have been devised here to achieve, what? You want to restore the Union, you feel that that is your duty; but how restore it? There is, as I said before, only one way to restore it, and that is to trust the people, because they underlie the whole fabric. But that is what you cannot bring yourselves to do. You pretend that this sin of rebellion, this sin of engaging in war against a Government, which all nations of the earth have done over and over and over again, is such a one as will justify you in excluding the people who fell into it from all political power, and then, what is most singular, you are not safe with that, but you propose to make yourself allies with a parcel of barbarians, who, you are well aware, know nothing about this Government, nothing about its frame, its Constitution, its laws, or the means necessary to secure and sustain it. You persist in giving them the power, or a very large portion of the power, in eight or ten States of the Union.

All these difficulties make you hesitate; and well may you hesitate. Instead of quarreling with the veto power you ought to get down on your knees and thank God that it exists, and pray for even more checks and balances. If it had not been for the check and balance of the United States Supreme Court you would have established military commissions in your madness. You may think them very good when they apply to your enemies, forgetting that the next turn of fortune's wheel might have made your own heads tumble into the basket through the same agency. You ignore all history, especially you ignore all English history. You are shutting it up now and refusing to listen to a single lesson that it teaches.

When you undertake to debase the franchise and give it to such people as you propose to give it to, you are departing from everything which was taught you by your fathers, taught you by your historians, taught you by your teachers. To seek for safety, to seek for reconciliation, to seek for peace in that project, of all others the wildest, the most destructive, the one that has fewest arguments to support it, is certainly unworthy an American Senate in this age of the world. When before was such a proposition heard of anywhere? When before was it proposed to take the barbarian emancipated slave and make him the arbiter of the destinies of a Republic? Never on the earth before did such an idea get into the heads of men; or if it did, it never made a ripple upon the great sea of social intelligence. Nobody paid the smallest attention to it. Here it is: you hold in one hand tyranny, and you hold in the other negro government; and you ask the South to accept the one or the other. If I were a southern man and lived in the South, and you proposed to me your negro government, the chance that I might be governed by negroes on the one hand, or that I might be governed by your satraps, your military brigadiers, and your Army, I would take your Army a thousand times over. Who would not? Would you not all do it? To which could you appeal with the greatest show of receiving justice? Your military tyrant could of necessity have but few enemies; he could have but a few upon whom he would desire to avenge himself. But when you give political power to an antipathetic race, seated by every fireside, intermingled intimately with society everywhere, and make it your master, every man of a different race is a slave; just as that race under all conceivable circumstances are slaves. We have emancipated the slave; that is the language; but are these men less slaves than they were before? Your proclamation goes up every day from this Hall that they are still slaves, because the slave is inside the man, not outside of him. The slave is the man who dares not achieve his liberty. You cannot make a man free by legislative enactments; you cannot eliminate the slave out from him; that which made him a slave, which made him submit to slavery, which made him agree to wear chains and fetters, you cannot eliminate that out of him by a statute upon your books here. The race that submits to slavery will be slaves if you relieve them from their individual masters. It is only a change in that respect. The individual master of the negro who formerly owned him, who was then bound to provide for him and to protect him to a certain extent, has now ceased his functions, and in the room and stead of him there is the rule of the community; and that community will rule. Your enactments may provide to the contrary, you may legislate as you please, but to that complexion it will come at last. The wise and the strong will govern, and the weak must accept of their protection; and it is better that they should accept it than that they should struggle by undue means to obtain that equality, which, in the end, will prove far more disastrous to them than if they had submitted to the first fate that was allotted to them.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I have listened to the congratulations sent by the Senator from Massachusetts to the Senator from Ohio, and to those returned by the Senator from Ohio to the Senator from Massachusetts, and to those quite as cordial tendered to us all by the Senator from Nevada; and I wanted to indulge myself, in this season of mutual congratulation, in a reflection which I cannot deny affords me some encouragement. A year ago, on the 10th day of January last, I introduced a resolution into the Senate, and in support of that resolution I tried to persuade the Senate that these organizations which had been manufactured mainly by the President of the United States, and were strutting in the character of State governments, down between the Potomac and the Gulf, are illegal and unauthorized in point of law; and then I tried to persuade the Senate that they did not answer the purposes of a government at all since they did not furnish protection to life or liberty or property, which I understand to be the legitimate purposes of governments. Therefore my resolution proposed it as the duty of the Congress of the United States to establish provisional governments for all those communities. It was regarded as a pretty bold measure; it came very near fastening upon me for life the stigma of a radical; but I have survived; and to-day there is upon your table a bill which has received the assent of more than two thirds of this Senate and almost three fourths of the House of Representatives, declaring in terms precisely what I tried to demonstrate by argument, that these governments are illegal, and that they do not furnish protection to life or property. And although the bill on your table does not declare in the language of the resolution I introduced that it is the duty of Congress to set aside those governments and organize provisional governments in their place, your bill does declare that those governments shall be accepted as provisional governments, nothing more or less.

Now, Mr. President, this asserts the only three propositions that I ever was inclined to insist upon: first, that those organizations were illegal; second, that they were ineffectual for any good purpose; third, that it is the business and the duty of the Congress of the United States to remedy that evil, and that the way to remedy it is by putting provisional governments, governments whose authority emanates from the Congress of the United States, in charge of those communities, and holding those provisional governments responsible to the legislative authority of the nation.

These propositions have received the assent, as I said, of large majorities in both Houses of Congress. I ought to be content, and measurably I am content with this progress. I am not entirely content, because I would not have accepted those governments as provisional governments. I think those people themselves, if called upon to select provisional governors or establish provisional governments, would suit themselves and suit the country better than they have in the style of government which we see existing there. But, then, very few human governments answer the purposes for which they were created. It is enough for me to know to-day that we have at last come to the conclusion that those governments have no authority inherent, and can have none which is not sanctioned by the legislative authority of the nation.

I feel regret, in view of this declaration, that we had not adopted it long ago. If those governments are illegal now, they were illegal in January, 1866. Nothing has transpired since to make them illegal. If they were illegal then or are illegal now, they are simply nullities; and if they do not discharge the duty which is incumbent upon all governments—the duty of giving protection to life and property—then they are criminal; and having declared that they are both null in law and criminal in conduct I think the legitimate conclusion is, that they ought to be passed aside, turned into the abyss of things which were: ought to be dispensed with altogether; that we ought not to employ them nor suffer them to be employed in the work of Government. I would organize provisional governments in their stead; civil tribunals to some extent, responsible to the people. There is no difficulty, in my opinion, in employing the whole people of those communities in the work of making laws for the time being, if you reserve to the Congress of the United States the right to veto a law which operates oppressively upon any portion of the people.

And, Mr. President, if the idea which I had in my mind when I offered that resolution had been acted upon, every one of those communities would now have representation in the Congress of the United States. They could not have had Senators and Representatives here, because those can only be accorded to States under the Constitution; but they could have had Delegates here, representatives to speak for and advocate the interests of those several communities, although not clothed with the authority to vote in the enactment of Federal laws. And that, I conceive, would not have been a great advantage to those communities, and would have been of great advantage to us. That advantage they have lost; and that advantage we have lost, because, as it seems to me, that idea was not accepted and put in force at that time.

But, Mr. President, this is all I care to say by way of self-congratulation, and perhaps more than I ought to have said. I wish to touch very briefly upon one other point which has been dwelt upon at length in the course of this debate by different Senators. The allegations contained in this preamble are both denied. Senators on the other side of the Chamber say these governments are not illegal, and they deny the allegation that they do not furnish protection to life and property. The legality of those governments I am not about to re-argue; it has been stated over and over again, and I have never heard the statements upon which that allegation is predicated overthrown; and I not only have never heard them overthrown, but I have never known them to be met. Our authority under the Constitution to set aside those organizations is just as plainly given in the Constitution, in my judgment, as our authority to levy taxes or to raise armies or to maintain navies. It is the other denial that I propose to notice for a moment.

At last we find representatives of the American people here in either House of Congress affirming that these governments do answer the legitimate purposes of government, that they do furnish protection to life and liberty; and we have heard Senators go further than that, and affirm that every pretense to the contrary was a malignant fabrication circulated for the purpose of misguiding the public judgment and inflaming the public passions. This is a pretty important issue, and it is very clearly made. I have believed as firmly as I ever believed anything that these governments did not furnish adequate protection to property or life. If I am mistaken in that conviction I shall be gratified, and shall be grateful to any man who will disabuse me of the impression. I do not wish to arraign any great portion of my fellow-citizens as guilty of unjust or deliberately inhuman conduct, but I cannot believe, in spite of the solemn assertions which I have heard repeated here over and over again, that I am at all mistaken. When gentlemen tell me that these communities are as thoroughly subjugated as ever a people were I confess that I have not been able to see the evidence of it, and I have some evidence to the contrary in my pocket.

Mr. President, if these communities were subjugated; if they had done anything more to evidence their submission than the mere laying down of their arms and abandoning for the present the contest of force; if they had in fact given up the controversy in support of which they had embroiled this whole land in war, and drenched it in blood, we should see the evidence of it in their common conversation as well as in their everyday conduct; it would be exhibited in their newspapers; it would be exhibited in the daily speech of their people, and you would find evidence of it in their legislation and in their laws. I have looked in each of these directions for this evidence, and I have not found it, but I have found what to me seemed conclusive evidence of the contrary.

A short time since some one sent me the prospectus of a new paper about to be started in Richmond, in Virginia. A man proposes to publish a paper to make money out of it, and he cannot hope to make money by the publication of that paper unless he can sell it, and he cannot hope to sell it unless there is a reading community about him disposed to buy and pay for such sentiments and such ideas as he proposes to disseminate through his paper; and therefore I have read, and propose to read to the Senate, a couple of extracts from the prospectus to see what kind of ideas he proposes to sell in that community. He says:

"I propose to make this paper a true exponent of southern"— not American, but southern—

"thought and sentiment, and shall give to it, as its most appropriate title, the name of The Southern Opinion. Committing it to the support of no particular set of men or measures, I pledge it unreservedly to the South, in all her manifold interests, traditions, customs, and affections. While The Southern Opinion shall advocate such obedience to the Constitution and the laws as has been promised by the people of the South"—

not such as is due from the people of the whole country, but such "as has been promised by the people of the South"—

"and shall support the reconstruction policy of President Johnson as the only means by which the country can be saved from the savage and bloody rule of radicalism, it will accept the Yankee as a fact, and logically and forever as a foe; whether in war or peace, or in the field or forum, or the Legislature, always an enemy. There is a mutual and an inextinguishable hate between the Yankee and the Southerner; whenever and wherever they meet they will meet as foes at heart; and this feeling will live as long as there are two men on earth to bear it toward each other."

It seems to me that a people who have really submitted to the verdict of the war, had not only consented to lay down their arms but to abandon the controversy in which they took up those arms would not care to establish among them a periodical devoted to the work of perpetuating that struggle. Further on in the prospectus the editor says:

"In the first number of the paper, in addition to other attractive original matter of the same character, there will be a full and accurate description of 'Stonewall' Jackson's tomb and its surroundings, together with a prize poem commemorative of the valor, sufferings and sacrifices, of the confederate soldiers. The first number will also contain a true account of the health and general condition of our beloved ex-President, Jefferson Davis, whose wrongs but the more endear him to the hearts of his people, and whose greatness of soul seems to expand under the infliction of the torture and cruelty visited upon him while ironed and in a dungeon, by his brutal Yankee jailers."

Mr. President, that is only a proposition to publish a newspaper devoted to the advocacy of those sentiments. I hold in my hand a newspaper actually being published and disseminated, not in Virginia, and but for one circumstance I should not think of holding the people of Virginia or the people of any of these rebel districts responsible for the sentiments I am about to read from this newspaper because it is published in my own State; it purports to be an advocate of the sentiments which animate the party in opposition to the Congress of the United States and the Government of the United States; it pretends to be an exponent of the principles and of the views which animate the Democratic party. And yet I shall read it, and I shall hold for certain reasons, which I will state subsequently, these very communities who are said to be thoroughly subjugated and to have abandoned the whole controversy responsible for the sentiments I find here. It says:

"There is life in the land yet. There is a growing sense of honor coming upon the stage of life. If the South is out of the Union her secession acts were right and a success. If she went out we have no business with her back again except on such terms as she may propose. If she is in the Union her people are now, to-day, entitled to representation in Congress. The people of the South have paid enough, have suffered enough, have been wronged enough, have lost enough, have given up enough, given up all but their honor, and if they now give that up at the command of Congress or the threat of cowards they deserve to be slaves and wear the galling chains of servitude till doomsday."

Again, it says:

"We are in earnest!"—

Another earnest man!

"We are in earnest. There are of us in the North who demand equality of States; equal taxation and domestic tranquillity. There are two million Democrats in the North who will never bow the neck to Abolition bondage and a centralized despotism. There are of us in the North whose veins are full of blood; whose hearts never knew fear; whose faith is in Democracy; whose hope is in the people. We demand that now the war is over and the Union restored the people of every State shall have a fair voice in affairs. If the South wants to preserve her honor, wants her voice in the next presidential campaign, she shall have it and that as she now stands, without adopting any so-called amendments, or we will redden the land with blood and obscure the northern sky with smoke—will drive the traitors of the North beyond Plymouth rock and win back the law, liberty, and heritage left us by patriotic sires or die in the attempt, freemen instead of slaves."

Let no one say that these are the rantings of a madman; these are the sentiments of an editor publishing a paper for sale and selling it; nay, he tells us just to what extent he finds a market for it, and in this very number which I hold in my hand he says:

"The La Crosse Weekly Democrat was published during the war with a circulation of but six quires. It refused the bribes of Abolitionists; it defied the tyrants in power; it had for its defense 'Lux Talionis,' it was bold when others bent to the blast; it was born in obscurity, raised in poverty and continual danger, and now has a circulation thirty times larger than any English paper published in this city or in this congressional district; has a circulation greater than all the English weekly papers in Milwaukee, and a larger circulation than all the other Democratic papers of Wisconsin combined."

"We refer in this connection to the postmaster of this city, Leonard Lottridge, a Republican in politics, to our business men generally, and to our mailing books, which are open for inspection at any and all times."

"We send papers now to over four thousand post offices in the United States and Territories, and have subscribers in every State and Territory in the Union. And every subscriber pays in advance, and his paper is discontinued the moment his subscription expires."

And in this connection I have to say that I was told in that same city of La Crosse last fall that this paper was not supported to any considerable extent by the community in which it is published, but that the great bulk of its issue was sent off and circulated in those very communities which we are now told have accepted all the fruits of the recent victory. Mr. President, when those communities purchase and pay for such sentiments, when they declare that they are the irreconcilable and eternal foes of the Yankees, and include in that designation those who have administered the Government since 1861, I think we are called upon to distrust the accuracy of the information of those who say that they are thoroughly content with the issue of the late struggle.

But, Mr. President, this is only evidence of the opinion of individuals; it does not clearly establish the fact, but what in spite of those opinions, their governments do furnish protection to life and to property, and upon that point I wish to say one word. I have in my hand a slip cut from a Memphis paper, very brief but very suggestive. Let me read it:

"WENT THE WHOLE HOG.—Henry Thompson, a stout, able-bodied, greasy-looking nig, was yesterday arrested and taken before Squire Hall on a charge of having stolen and killed a hog weighing two hundred pounds. Thompson not being able to satisfactorily prove that such was not the case, was bound over in the sum of $1,000 to await a hearing at the next term of the criminal court."

This is published in the police reports of the city of Memphis. That I know is not in one of the States included in this bill. Tennessee has a government which we have ceased to regard as a provisional government. It has a government which we have acknowledged to be the government of a State. We made that acknowledgment because we believed it could more adequately protect property and life than any government representing the people of any one of the other of those lately rebellious districts; and yet there in Memphis not only is a man held to bail in the sum of $1,000 for stealing a hog, but he is held to bail simply because he could not prove satisfactorily that he did not do it, and that is published in the papers of the city, not as an extraordinary, but as an ordinary instance of the administration of justice. It attracts no comment in the way of dissent, but seems to be by the papers fully approved. That, however, is only evidence as to the conduct of a single tribunal, and that a judicial tribunal; but that it is not a solitary case I feel warranted in asserting upon testimony which my colleague introduced here the other day and read for the instruction of the Senate. He took it upon himself to vindicate the action of those governments in those several communities; and in their vindication he read a letter written to him, as he stated, by a citizen of Texas, formerly a resident of Wisconsin, a Mr. Willard, who was an officer, as he tells us, at one time in the Army of the United States. These facts, that he once lived in Wisconsin and that he now lives in Texas, and that he once served in the Union Army, altogether, do not convince me that we are absolutely safe in relying upon his testimony. There were men in the Army before the war commenced who deserted the Army and deserted the cause and went over to the enemy. There may have been some who have deserted and gone over to the enemy since the war. I do not know that Mr. Willard is one of these, and I will not stop to inquire, for I raise no question whatever upon the accuracy of the statement he has made here.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will allow me, I wish to say that I am informed by persons who are acquainted with this man Willard that he was a clerk in the Treasury Department here a year or two ago, and was then known as a venomous Copperhead, a man who was constantly abusing Congress for its course in reference to the southern States.

Mr. HOWE. The information does not shock me. I am not sure that I had not some suspicion of the kind, but that suspicion was not grounded at all upon any statements contained in his letter. Standing upon his letter alone, admitting it to be true, I arraign that government of Texas as a foul blot upon our history and upon the administration of human justice in this country. And what were the recitals in that letter? It is not before me, but I cannot forget them. I have not seen them, my eye has not rested upon them since they were put in print; I only heard them as pronounced by the lips of my colleague; and what were they? These: that a man by the name of Jones had a difficulty with one of the colored men in his employment; "had a difficulty"—not a word of explanation as to the character of that difficulty, not a word or an insinuation that the colored man was more at fault than Jones; but he had a difficulty; and in the succinct, concise terms of the letter, he said that he would put an end to the difficulty. How? By calling on his son to shoot the negro. Am I mistaken?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It went on to say that there was a difficulty between the father and the negro. The letter did not go into full particulars whether there had been a fight or not, but it said the son came and settled the difficulty by shooting the negro; not that the father called on the son to shoot him, but that the son came and settled the difficulty by shooting him.

Mr. HOWE. The letter can be found; but I am confident I have stated it correctly.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. My colleague will find himself mistaken as to that point.

Mr. HOWE. If some gentleman will refer to the letter I shall certainly correct myself if I find I am wrong; but I think I cannot be mistaken in saying that the letter stated that the father put an end to the difficulty by calling on the son to shoot the negro. At all events, the son shot the negro to put an end to the difficulty. He was arrested. My colleague says he was tried. I think he ought to have been. The letter says that the court charged the jury to find according to the evidence; and the letter specifies that the judge had been a slaveholder, had believed in the divinity of slavery, and the writer seemed to think it a most miraculous thing that such a judge should charge a jury trying a man for the crime of murder to find according to the evidence. Could he have instructed them in any other way? But the jury did find, what? A verdict of guilty; and upon that verdict the judgment of the court was pronounced. And what was the judgment? That that young man, having shot down a man in cold blood, should be sentenced to five years' confinement in the penitentiary. There is not an intimation in the letter that that sentence was ever executed; there is not an intimation in the letter that the man ever lay in jail a day. But the fact to which I wish to call attention is, that the father has not been arrested. I do not think that five years' imprisonment in a penitentiary is adequate punishment for the crime of murder. It would not be so considered in any of the States which any of us represents; and no such judgment would be pronounced, and no such judgment would be tolerated. But I will not delay longer on this. It is only a single instance of what I think very delinquent conduct on the part of a single tribunal, and that a judicial tribunal in the State of Texas.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOWE. Certainly.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If he thinks that single case in Texas casts a foul blot upon the State, what does the Senator think of that case which recently occurred in Chicago, where a courtesan killed a man because he loved another woman better than herself; coolly and deliberately killed him, and being tried by a jury, was found guilty of manslaughter, and sentenced to one year in the penitentiary, and the Governor of that State pardoned her within a month?

Mr. HOWE and Mr. TRUMBULL rose.

Mr. HOWE. If the Senator from Illinois prefers to answer I will yield to him.

Mr. TRUMBULL. As the Senator from Indiana has now for the second time brought before the Senate the trial of a harlot in Chicago—he seems to be very familiar with it—I think it proper to state to the Senate that I understand that a woman was tried in Chicago, and convicted of manslaughter, and sentenced to the penitentiary for a year, and after serving a part of her time was pardoned. Has the Senator from Indiana any fault to find with that? He has asserted here she killed a man because he liked somebody else better. He may be advised about it; I have no such information. It is the first time I ever heard of it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then the Senator has not read the papers of his own city. The information that I have on the subject is what I receive from the papers published in Chicago. I do not find any fault with the jury in Chicago; I do not find any fault with the Governor. It may be all right; but courts in other States are denounced because in cases of manslaughter they render more severe verdicts and judgments; and I asked in that connection simply what the Senator from Wisconsin thinks of this verdict and judgment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is a kind of reading in which I do not particularly delight, and I am not probably as familiar with the case as the Senator from Indiana, who seems to have read all that the newspapers have said in reference to it. It is the first time I ever heard such a reason, as the one he alleges, given for the killing. It may be that that was the reason. At any rate a trial was had before a jury; the party was convicted; and the Governor, for reasons I presume satisfactory to himself, and upon a proper showing which I have not seen, thought proper to pardon the criminal after she had served out a month of her time. I am not prepared to say whether the conviction in the first instance was right, or whether the pardon when it was granted was proper. I presume that both were; but the Senator from Indiana has twice paraded the case here as if it was a stain upon the State of Illinois.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator from Illinois spoke of my reading. I am not responsible to that Senator for what I read or what I do not read, and I am entirely indifferent what he reads, whether he reads excellent books or newspapers or other matter. I read what I read on this subject in a very respectable newspaper. I thought it was a little curious, but I bring no charge against the tribunal. I presented it as a case in comparison with the one the Senator from Wisconsin was commenting upon.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator from Indiana simply mistakes the point I make. It is not because Mr. Jones was sentenced to five years' imprisonment in the penitentiary for manslaughter that I arraign the government of Texas. I do not know but that there may have been extenuating circumstances which would have justified his being tried for manslaughter instead of murder, and extenuating circumstances which would have induced a pardon. I simply judge of the transaction upon the statement read to us the other day from this letter, and that gave no extenuating circumstances whatever. It simply appeared from it that there was simply a difficulty between Jones and a colored man, and a son of Jones interfered, for what? Not to save his father from any outrage, that was not the pretense, but to put an end to the difficulty; and he shot down coolly the negro. That is not manslaughter; that is murder. That is, it would have been murder if the Senator from Indiana had been shot, murder if any man about me had been shot, and I do not know that it was not murder by the laws of Texas; the letter does not inform us; I do not know how the fact is. That was the offense, and for that he was convicted of something and he was sentenced to five years' imprisonment in a penitentiary. That is what I am speaking of. If there were extenuating circumstances I should have thought the author of this letter would have detailed them, and I should have thought my colleague would have put some stress upon those details.

Mr. President, there is only one instance, as I said before—

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, I desire to ask my colleague—

Mr. HOWE. I am anxious to conclude before the hour for a recess, and I decline to give way. I beg to be indulged in alluding to two other incidents. I introduce these as specimen bricks, as examples of the action of these governments. I have pointed you to the action of their judicial tribunals in two instances, now let me call your attention to a piece of legislation. I might call your attention to a great many; I might call your attention to the fact that whole codes in the State of Virginia and in the State of South Carolina were set aside by military proclamation, because they were so unjust and so inhuman that they could not be tolerated; but I will call your attention to a piece of legislation which was not set aside by military proclamation, a piece of legislation in the State of Florida; and I want to call your attention to the fact that in the State of Florida, as you call it, one of the first steps they took was to devise a special code for the government of the freedmen, as they were called, for the government of their people of color. There could be no possible justification for a special code. It must be better or worse than the code which governs the rest of the people; and if either better or worse it ought to be condemned. But, sir, I ask you to judge of that code by just one feature in it. The Legislature of Florida enacted a law for the education of its negro children. They have laws for the education of all their children; but this was a special law for the education of the colored children. It provided for the creation of a fund for that purpose. That fund was to consist of a dollar paid by each colored man, poor or rich, between the ages of twenty-one and fifty-five years. According to the census of 1860 that would give them a fund of about twelve thousand dollars for the education of the colored children in Florida. The law provided for the disposition of that fund in this way: $2,000 of it was appropriated to pay the salary of the superintendent of colored schools, and $200 was appropriated to pay the salary of the assistant superintendent in each county in the State. There are thirty-seven counties in the State, so that it would take $7,400 out of that fund to pay these assistant superintendents. Then out of the fund of $12,000, $9,400 is to be appropriated to pay the salaries of superintendents. That is a specimen of their legislation in reference to the interests of the colored people.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to call your attention, I do not hope to call the attention of the Senate, to one example of the action of the executive departments of their government. In the city of New Orleans in July last there was what is popularly called a riot, but which had none of the features of a riot in it. There was an assemblage of people calling themselves a constituted convention, unarmed, met for the purpose of deliberation; and that body of men were set upon by the authorities of the city of New Orleans, who were armed, not going there with warrants to arrest them, but they were set upon and shot down, great numbers of them; some were told were shot after they were arrested, others in the attempt to escape through the streets of the city. But I shall not go into the particulars, the details of that transaction. An officer of the Army of the United States, on the spot within two days after it occurred, tells you and tells the American people that that slaughter was so wanton and so needless that he cannot fail to characterize it as murder. Who committed the murder? The municipal government of this city of New Orleans, existing under this government of Louisiana. If any murder was committed there the municipality of New Orleans did the murder. No man has ever disputed General Sheridan's statement that that transaction was properly characterized as murder. I do not know whenever a municipal government in this country has before been found guilty of engaging in the work of murder. Sir, a government which murders does not afford adequate protection to life and property; and you must convict General Sheridan of inaccuracy or falsehood or misapprehension, or you must agree that that government is guilty of murder, and I take it no one here will insist that a government which does not protect life, but which does feloniously take life, does not afford adequate protection either to life or property. I am sorry to have detained the Senate so long.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1182) to establish certain post roads;

A bill (H. R. No. 1185) to render applicable to seamen in the United States Navy and to marines the provisions relating to pensions in the act making appropriations for the civil expenses for the year ending June 30, 1867, approved July 28, 1866;

A bill (H. R. No. 1186) to establish the offices of civil engineer and master mechanics and master laborer in navy-yards of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 1187) to compensate the officers and crew of the United States steamer Kearsarge, for the destruction of the rebel piratical vessel Alabama; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 290) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to grant the use of guns for trial of Ridgway's battery.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution of the Senate No. 149, to extend aid and facilities to citizens of the United States engaged in the survey of a route for a ship-canal across the Isthmus of Darien.

RECESS.

Mr. WILLEY. I move that the Senate take a recess till seven o'clock p. m.

Mr. CONNESS. Why can we not take a vote now on this subject which has been discussed?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Because there is an amendment to be proposed and discussed.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire to inquire of the honorable Senator from Oregon whether he is serious in stating that there is an amendment to be offered to this bill, coming from its friends.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No. I am advised by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DOOLITTLE] that he has an amendment to offer.

Mr. CONNESS. I have nothing further to say. I trust the Senate will come to a vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to amend the motion of the Senator from West Virginia by fixing the time for reassembling at seven and a half o'clock; it is now near five o'clock.

Mr. WILLEY. I accept the amendment.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate took a recess till seven and a half o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolution from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 1182) to establish certain post roads—to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

A bill (H. R. No. 1188) to render applicable to seamen in the United States Navy and to marines the provisions relating to pensions in the act making appropriations for the civil expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1867, approved July 28, 1866—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

A bill (H. R. No. 1186) to establish the offices of civil engineer and of master mechanics and master laborer in the navy yards of the United States—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (H. R. No. 1187) to compensate the officers and crew of the United States steamer Kearsarge for the destruction of the rebel piratical vessel Alabama—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 290) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to grant the use of guns for the trial of Ridgway's battery—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

TRANSPORTATION OF PROVISIONS SOUTH.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 293) authorizing the employment of a public vessel for the transportation of provisions to the people of the southern States was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, if there is no objection.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope that that joint resolution may be disposed of without a reference; I think there can be no objection to it.

Mr. RAMSEY. What is it?

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to furnish a vessel to transport the gifts of the benevolent to the destitute and suffering people in the South. There is an organization in the northern States, and I have here some of the evidences of what they are doing, who are contributing provisions for the supply of the destitute and suffering in the South. This is a joint resolution which comes from the House authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to furnish a vessel to take these supplies to the people in that portion of the country. I hope there will be no objection to it, and that it will pass at once.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the resolution may be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Be it resolved, &c. That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, upon the application of the contributors, to assign a public vessel for the transportation to Charleston, Savannah, and Mobile of any supplies of food or clothing which may be contributed by the people of the United States for the use of any portion of the people of the southern States who may be suffering from the failure of crops or other causes, under such regulations as may by the Secretary of the Navy be prescribed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I certainly agree with the Senator from Illinois, that that is a resolution fit to be passed now. It is perfectly simple, and I hope there will be no objection to the present consideration of the resolution and to its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the joint resolution at this time. No objection being made, it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILLEY, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to whom was referred the memorial of Joseph Nock, reported a recommendation that the further consideration of the memorial be postponed indefinitely; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Jonathan Ball, praying for an extension of his patent, reported a recommendation that the further consideration thereof be postponed indefinitely; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 526) to extend the time of letters-patent issued to Daniel Woodbury, reported adversely thereon and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1059) for the relief of Sylvanus Sawyer and William E. Ward, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CRESWELL, from the Committee on the Library, to whom the subject was referred, reported a joint resolution (S. R. No. 179) to provide for the exchange of certain public documents; which was read and passed to a second reading.

Mr. SUMNER, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 457) to provide for the defense of the northeastern frontier, reported it with amendments.

JAMES C. COOK.

Mr. WILLEY. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 760.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 760) for the relief of James C. Cook. It proposes to grant him leave to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for an extension of his letters-patent, which were issued for the term of fourteen years, from the 27th of July, 1852, for an improvement in machines for forming button-backs and connecting the eyes thereto, in the same manner as if he had filed his petition for an extension at least ninety days prior to the expiration of the patent, and the Commissioner of Patents is authorized to consider and determine the application in the same manner as if it had been filed ninety days before the expiration of the patent.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE B. SIMPSON.

On motion of Mr. WILLEY, the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill (S. No. 151) for the relief of George B. Simpson, which had been reported adversely by the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. WILLEY. I move that the further consideration of the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

HEIRS OF GEORGE FABER.

On motion of Mr. WILLEY, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 392) for the relief of the heirs of George Faber, which had been reported adversely by the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. WILLEY. I move that the further consideration of the bill be indefinitely postponed. The motion was agreed to.

DELIA A. JACOBS.

Mr. WILLEY. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 589.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 589) for the relief of Delia A. Jacobs, late Delia A. Fitzgerald. It authorizes Delia A. Jacobs, (late Fitzgerald,) administratrix of Jesse Fitzgerald, deceased, who obtained a patent for an improved method of dressing treenails, dated August 28, 1849, for fourteen years, which expired August 28, 1863, to apply to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of the patent for seven years, under the rules and regulations now in force for the extension of patents, as if she had made application previous to its expiration as required by law; and the Commissioner of Patents is to investigate and decide the application for extension on the same evidence and in the same manner as other applications for extension are decided; but the application for extension is to be decided within thirty days after the approval of the act, and the decision of the Commissioner to be rendered within ninety days from the filing of the application in the Patent Office. Nothing contained in this bill is to be so construed as to hold responsible in damages any person who may have manufactured treenails or built or used machines containing the improvement between the expiration of the patent and the approval of the act; and the Commissioner is to be satisfied before granting such extension that it will inure entirely to the benefit of Delia A. Jacobs.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Is there a report in that case?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that there is no report.

Mr. POLAND. This is a bill that passed the House of Representatives at the last session, and was reported by the Senate Committee on Patents at the last session. Application was made for the extension in proper season to the Commissioner of Patents, but it was denied by the Commissioner upon the ground that no proof was furnished that the extension of the patent was for the benefit of Mrs. Jacobs. It turned out that that evidence was furnished in season and was in the office, but it had in some way become mislaid. It was the mistake of the Commissioner or some one in the office that the proof, which the Commissioner himself stated was in the office and was in proper season, was in some way mislaid, so that it did not come to his attention in time. This bill is merely to remedy that mistake, and it merely authorizes the Commissioner to hear the application and grant the extension if he thinks proper.

The bill was reported to the Senate, without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH R. MORRIS.

Mr. POLAND. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 66) for the relief of Joseph R. Morris.

The resolution was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The preamble recites that it appears from the records of the Patent Office that Joseph R. Morris, of Houston, Texas, on the 13th of April, 1861, filed his petition, affidavit, specification, and drawing, and made application for a patent for "a new and useful improvement in furnaces," and paid the customary fee on such application; that on the 15th of April he deposited his model of the improvement according to law in the Patent Office; that on the 8th of June thereafter the invention was examined by the examiner, and a patent duly ordered to be issued; that on the 11th of June thereafter a circular was issued by the Patent Office to the effect that the patent was ordered to be issued in accordance with the application upon the payment of the final fee of twenty dollars; and that it appears that he was prevented from obtaining his patent by the state of civil war which interdicted all communication between the State of Texas and the Patent Office at the city of Washington. The joint resolution, therefore, authorizes the Commissioner of Patents to issue the patent to Joseph R. Morris as of the date and with like effect as though it had been issued on the 8th of June, 1861, except that the patent may be issued to run the usual number of years from the usual time of its issuance, any law to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Committee on Patents and the Patent Office reported the joint resolution with an amendment to add the following proviso:

Provided, That if, at or prior to the day when said patent shall actually be issued, any person or persons shall be actually issuing said improvement in furnaces, such person or persons shall not be made liable in damages for such prior use, or for the continuing use of such as have already been constructed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I should like to know if it is certain that this person was a loyal man.

Mr. POLAND. The proof before the committee in relation to that matter was very abundant. Judge Sherwood and one or two other gentlemen appeared before the committee and testified that this man was undoubtedly loyal. There is no report in this case, but the facts are very shortly and concisely stated in the preamble to this resolution. This was an application for a patent for an improvement in furnaces; and I have here a certified copy of the records of the Patent Office. The application was filed on the 13th of April, 1861, and it went along in the Patent Office until the 8th of June, 1861, when the patent was ordered to be issued. The law requires that within six months after a patent is granted the applicant shall pay a fee of twenty dollars in order to obtain his patent. Before the 8th of June, 1861, communication between Texas, where this patentee lived, and the Patent Office had been cut off, and it was impossible for the Patent Office to get the patent to him or for him to make payment of this fee. This application was made immediately upon these impediments being removed; and the committee thought it was a clear case, that he ought to be allowed to pay his fee and have the patent. Although we had no evidence whatever that this patent had been in use by any person, still for caution's sake we inserted this amendment, that if any persons had gone into the use of this improvement their rights should be preserved.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1126) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1868, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

WILLIAM MANN AND JACOB SENNEFF.

Mr. POLAND. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 590.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 590) for the relief of William Mann and Jacob Senneff. It authorizes the Commissioner of Patents to hear and determine upon the application of William Mann for an extension of his letters-patent, dated January 11, 1863, which expired July 11, 1866; and upon the application of Jacob Senneff for an extension of his letters-patent for wire heddles, dated January 13, 1852, which expired January 13, 1866, and to decide upon the applications with like effect as though they had been duly filed ninety days before the expiration of the letters-patent; and the Commissioner of Patents is directed forthwith to publish the application for the extension of the letters-patent with like effect as though the publication had been made sixty days before the expiration of the letters-patent. But no person is to be held liable for damage for using or making the heddles after the expiration of the original term of the patent and before the renewal.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will inquire if there is any report in this case?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that there is no report.

Mr. WILSON. I hope we shall have an explanation of this matter. I think bills of this character should always be explained, and I think we should proceed with great caution in regard to them.

Mr. POLAND. I commend my friend from Massachusetts for his caution, but I think there will be no occasion for its exercise in this case. These two cases of Mann and Senneff have no connection with each other; they are for different things; but the House saw fit, for brevity sake, to put them together in one bill. This bill does not grant an extension of either patent. It merely authorizes the Commissioner to hear the cases and determine whether there shall be an extension or not. The law requires that an application for an extension of a patent should be made to the Commissioner ninety days before the expiration of the patent. In one of these cases, the case of Mann, and that is for an improvement in copying paper, the patentee was in Europe, was not aware of the time when his time expired, and did not return from Europe in season to make his application within the ninety days. He made his application to the Commissioner before the expiration of the patent, but not more than ninety days before the expiration of it. There was not time enough to give the notice required and have the hearing before the expiration of the patent.

In the other case, the case of Senneff, his application to the Commissioner was not made until the patent had expired. Senneff had enlisted in the Army, and was with our Army in the South at the time of the expiration of the patent. That is his excuse for not making his application to the Commissioner more than ninety days before the expiration of the patent. This bill merely authorizes both of these patentees to apply to the Commissioner and have a hearing now, as they would have been entitled to by law had they made the application ninety days before the expiration of their patents, and for the Commissioner to hear the case and determine whether there ought to be an extension of the patent or not. In this bill also, for the sake of caution and for the protection of the rights of everybody else, if anybody has gone into the use of either of these patents in this interim of time, a clause has been added to the bill saving the rights of any such person, if any there be.

Mr. TRUMBULL. In former years we have been very particular about authorizing the extension of patents. The Senator from Vermont tells us that this is merely to authorize these parties to go before the Commissioner and submit the question to him as to whether the patents should be extended. That is all we have ever done, or at least all that we have done for many years. Congress has not for a long time by direct act extended any patent. There are two objections to this. One is that we are excusing parties for not applying within the time required by law. If I understand the Senator from Vermont correctly, he said the reason that one of these parties did not apply for the extension within the time required by law was that he did not know when his patent expired, and he was abroad. Is that any reason to excuse a man, that he did not know the requirement of the law? You will always excuse parties if you act on such a principle as that.

But there is another objection. The Senator says there is a clause put on this bill to protect parties who may have engaged in the manufacture of the patented article since the patent expired. It needed no such clause as that. That clause, if I understand it correctly, is perfectly nugatory. What is it? It is to protect those parties in the articles they have manufactured in the mean time. Why of course they are protected. There is no patent existing, and they had a right to manufacture them. I know nothing about these particular patents; but if they be valuable discoveries it is altogether probable that parties have engaged since the expiration of the patents in the manufacture of the articles. They may have erected establishments and may have invested large amounts of capital in the manufacture of these articles; and what then? You come in here and by an act of Congress authorize these patents to be extended; and then what is their condition? They are perfectly at the mercy of the patentees. Their capital is invested in this establishment, and they are at their mercy, because they may break them up, or make them pay whatever sum they please before they can be permitted to go on and manufacture the articles.

I do not think any sufficient excuse is given for the non-application within the time allowed by law in the case of the party who was abroad. The case is a little stronger as to the soldier who was in the Army; still his application could have been made I suppose through others without his personal attendance. I should feel more inclined to sustain that case than the other; but this is a species of legislation altogether more loose than we have been in the habit of indulging in for many years.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the regular order of business, the bill from the House of Representatives which was under consideration when the recess was taken. I think it desirable to proceed with that.

Mr. POLAND. I hope we shall be allowed to proceed and finish this little bill. I think the country is in no such state of suffering as will put it to any great damage if we are allowed to complete the bill now before the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It will be remembered that by resolution this evening was set apart for the business of the Committee on Patents, and I agreed with the chairman of that committee that he might proceed for half an hour or so until the members of the Senate arrived. As soon as this matter is disposed of, I propose to call up the regular order of business.

Mr. POLAND. I have another small case from the Patent Committee that I should be glad to have disposed of also; but I will not insist upon that if gentlemen will allow me to proceed with this bill and dispose of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As far as I am concerned I have no objection.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Let me inquire what this patent of Mann's is for?

Mr. POLAND. It is for an improvement in copying paper, and the other one of Senneff is for an improvement in heddles, if you know what that is.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know that I do.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the Committee on Patents tell us what it is.

Mr. POLAND. As I understand, heddles is a part of the harness which separates the threads. Precisely what the advantage of it is, and how much better this is than any other, I am not able to tell.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be glad to be informed what is the regular order of business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business which was before the Senate at the time of the recess is the proper business before the Senate; but by common consent other business has been transacted since.

Mr. WILLEY. I said awhile ago to the Senator from Oregon that whenever he saw proper to insist upon the consideration of the reconstruction bill I would give way, although it will be within the recollection of the Senate that this evening was specially set apart for the consideration of business from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office. If that Senator says so now, of course I will give way now; but I suggest that he allow us to finish this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have stated that so far as I am concerned I have no objection that this bill may be disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont make any motion on the subject?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to proceed to the consideration of the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendment proposed by the Senate to House bill No. 1143.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was not aware that the honorable Senator from Vermont had charge of this bill. If he has, he has suddenly attained that position. I supposed that I had charge of the bill. At any rate, I have had charge of it since it has been pending before the Senate; and as this evening was set apart for the consideration of business from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, and as the members had not all arrived at the hour of half past seven o'clock, I agreed to give way to the Senator from West Virginia to take up some patent cases till the members had all arrived; and I am willing that he should conclude this case unless it will lead to discussion and controversy. If it does, then of course it is desirable to go on with the regular business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was not aware that the bill from the House of Representatives was a patent bill, and that my friend from Oregon had a caveat on the subject. I had the impression that the bill which was before the Senate when we took the recess was then in the charge of my friend from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] and I was not aware that it was now specially in the charge of my friend from Oregon. I certainly did not intend to interfere with his patent or copyright or whatever it may be; but feeling myself that this was the last of the days when we could send a bill to his Excellency the President, which might be acted upon by him and returned to us, (because I am one of those who believe that this is the last day, and not yesterday,) I was not aware that I was interfering with any Senator's privilege when, as one of the members of this body, I asked the Senate to proceed to the consideration of that bill, if it is a bill of importance and one that ought to be considered more than this little patent bill, so that it might be sent to him to-night. I disclaim any intention to take the charge of any bill in the care of my friend from Oregon, who, I know, is much better capable of having charge of any bill than I am, or indeed than any other Senator; but I felt that I had a right to ask the Senate to take up and proceed with business that it had commenced and had under consideration when we took the recess until this time. Disclaiming, therefore, any charge of this bill, and simply acting as one Senator, desirous that we should vote upon a bill of this great importance, I have made the motion.

Mr. POLAND. I hope that gentlemen who have charge of matters of national concern, and cannot agree whether they shall be taken up or not, will voluntarily retire, and allow me who have charge of humbler measures to have them proceeded with; at least to dispose of this small one. I trust that this motion will not prevail until this bill is disposed of.

Mr. POMEROY. I submit that it requires no motion to proceed to the regular order. We have been proceeding informally, by common consent, with business reported from the Patent Office Committee; but it requires no motion of the Senator from Vermont to proceed to the regular order. I do not suppose any Senator has control of the business of the Senate; but it is in the power of any Senator to call for the regular order of business, and whenever that call is made the other business is not being proceeded with by common consent.

Mr. POLAND. I understand that, by a vote of the Senate, the session this evening was to be devoted to the special order, and the regular order of business for this evening was business from the Patent Committee.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I understand that this bill, the reconstruction bill as it is called, was before the Senate, and that informally and by common consent, being the unfinished business when we took the recess, it gave way for the patent business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let us take a vote on this bill, and then I will call up the special order; I do not want to cut off these gentlemen in the middle of its consideration, though I shall call up the other bill if there is to be any more discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, to postpone the present and all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of the bill which was before the Senate at the time of the recess.

The question being put it was declared that the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is some misunderstanding about this matter. I understand that the debate is exhausted on the patent bill, and that we were about to take the vote upon it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The debate is not exhausted. I think the bill ought not to pass. I have something to say upon it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well. If the Senator is opposed to it we had better take up the other bill.

Mr. WILLEY. I trust that my friend from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] who has charge of this bill, seeing that it is going to lead to delay, will consent now to give way to the other measure. We do not want to exhaust the whole time of the evening about matters that have no particular merit in them.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HENDRICKS (after first voting in the affirmative) said: As I am a member of the Committee on Patents, and expect that we shall soon finish the bill that is before the Senate, I shall change my vote and vote "nay."

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will state that the Senator from Iowa who sits near me, [Mr. GRIMES,] not being well this afternoon, asked me to pair off with him on this reconstruction bill. I thought perhaps that this motion might be regarded as a question upon that bill, and I have therefore withheld my vote.

The result was then announced—yeas 23, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fogg, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Henderson, Howe, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, and Williams—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Hendricks, Lane, Nesmith, Patterson, Poland, Ramsey, Van Winkle, and Willey—12.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Doolittle, Foster, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Howard, Johnson, Kirkwood, Norton, Nye, Biddle, Saulsbury, Sprague, Wade, Wilson, and Yates—17.

So the motion was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT OF SOUTHERN STATES.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1143) to provide for the more efficient government of the insurrectionary States.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I now offer an amendment to the amendment, which I send to the table and ask to have read.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was to add to section six of the House amendments the following:

Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to disfranchise any persons in either of the said States from voting or holding office who have received pardon and amnesty in accordance with the Constitution and laws.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, for the good faith of this Government I hope that I can get the ear of the Senate and the ear of every Senator; for I believe that if this amendment be considered in the light of the law and the Constitution it will be adopted. I could hope that it would be adopted unanimously by the Senate.

I must say, Mr. President, after what occurred just before the recess, the temptation is exceedingly strong upon me to enter into that field into which my colleague invited me in this discussion; but I am not disposed to take up the time of the Senate, and will not follow him any further than to say that I think he has not done entire justice in the remarks which he has made on this occasion in relation to a young gentleman, an officer in our Army, who fought for two or three years in the war, and one of the best soldiers in our Army, from the county of Racine, in the State of Wisconsin. My honorable friend from Oregon, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] in rising and stating that he had ascertained that this young man, Mr. Willard, was one of the most venomous kind of Copperheads, has also, I think, done him injustice. For myself I state frankly I do not know, and never have known, what his political views were; but from the fact that he enlisted in our Army, fought bravely, was promoted to be an officer, and was regarded as one of the finest young officers in that section of our country, I believed that he was a patriot and a good Union man; and I supposed he was a Lincoln and Johnson man in 1864. But I profess to have no knowledge on that subject, and may be mistaken as to his political views.

My colleague also thought proper to go over the ground of the New Orleans riot. I shall not follow him there on this occasion. In relation to the condition of the South, which he discussed at some considerable length, I wish not to be misunderstood. I have never assumed before the Senate that no outrages existed in the southern States. What I claim is that the statements which we have in the public press throughout the northern States are many of them, if not the most of them, gross misrepresentations of the facts. I will conclude all I have to say on this occasion on that branch of the case by reading a letter which I have that does not concern Wisconsin at all, and will not invite a discussion of anything concerning the affairs of Wisconsin or the men of Wisconsin. It is a letter from a gentleman from Vermont, who, about a year and a half ago, after the rebellion was over and peace had come, removed from the State of Vermont with his family to purchase lands and make his home in the State of Alabama. I refer to Mr. J. De Forrest Richards. I will read what he says:

"You inquire with regard to the political and social condition of things at the South, and whether northern men are safe there. I can speak more particularly of the State of Alabama where I have resided a large share of the time for more than a year past. I have traveled somewhat extensively during this time in the adjoining States, and have been thrown in company with men in almost all conditions of society. I am happy in being able to say that I have uniformly and without exception been treated with respect and kindness. There are a large number of northern men in the State of Alabama. With many of these I am personally acquainted."

The letter bears date the 10th of this month:

"I have never seen or heard of an instance where a northern man has been treated with violence or has been disturbed in the prosecution of his lawful business. I say what I know to be true when I affirm that northern men are as safe in Alabama as they are in Massachusetts or in New York; and their rights are as safely guarded by the civil authorities. All reports to the contrary are false and slanderous, and are suited to disturb the peace of both sections of the country and prevent the restoration of mutual confidence and good will, so necessary at this time for the reconstruction of the late insurrectionary States and the prosperity of the whole country. This statement is corroborated by a resolution passed a few days since by the Legislature of Alabama, in which they invite immigration from the northern States, and pledge the civil authority of the State for the protection of all such as come to engage in lawful business and help to develop the resources of the Commonwealth. The civil courts take cognizance of all cases of crime and misdemeanor and punish such offenses according to law. Crime is not more prevalent here than at the North."

My honorable friend from Massachusetts will bear this testimony in mind:

"I think not as much so; and the freedmen are on an equality with the white men before the law. I have known very few cases where colored men have been treated with abuse or violence. In all such cases their rights have been maintained before a civil tribunal with as much justice and promptness as in the case of white men."

Very respectfully and truly yours,

"J. DE FORREST RICHARDS."

This gentleman, who is a clergyman, removed from the State of Vermont with his sons at the close of the war to purchase lands in the State of Alabama, and has been residing there ever since.

Now, Mr. President, I do not propose to go any further into that subject by way of reply to anything that fell from my colleague, but come directly to the question pending before the Senate, and to the amendment which I have now offered. Let us understand precisely the position of this measure before the Senate. For the House bill the Senate substituted its amendment. The House have agreed to the Senate amendment with an amendment, the substance of which amendment, both sections taken together, is this: first, that no person shall vote or hold an office within any of those States who would be disqualified from holding office if the constitutional amendment should be adopted; secondly, that those States are to be regarded as mere Territories or provisional governments, subject to the paramount and exclusive authority of the Congress of the United States. The amendment which I propose provides that nothing contained in the provisions of this bill shall disfranchise any man who has received pardon and amnesty under the proclamations of the President according to law.

The Congress of the United States in July, 1862, passed a law in which it was provided, among other things, that one part of the punishment for the offense of treason should be as follows:

"That every person guilty of either of the offenses described in this act shall be forever incapable and disqualified to hold any office under the United States."

By the thirteenth section of the same act it was enacted:

"That the President is hereby authorized at any time hereafter by proclamation to extend to persons who may have participated in the existing rebellion in any State or part thereof pardon and amnesty, with such exceptions and at such time and on such conditions as he may deem expedient for the public welfare."

To say nothing of the power of the President to extend pardon under the Constitution, as the Chief Executive Magistrate of the Republic, there is no doubt whatever that the Congress of the United States by this act, passed in 1862, authorized the President by proclamation to grant pardon and amnesty to any and all persons who had participated in this rebellion, upon such terms and conditions as he should deem expedient for the public welfare. Pursuant to this law of Congress, which remained upon the statute-book in full force and unrepealed until January in the present year, Mr. Lincoln, as President of the United States, issued two proclamations, in which he invited those who had participated in the rebellion to return to their allegiance to the Government, promising them that if they took a certain oath they should have full pardon. Mr. Johnson, in 1865, in pursuance of the same authority with which he was clothed by Congress, following the example of Mr. Lincoln, renewed this offer of pardon and amnesty upon the condition of taking the oath, which he prescribed in his proclamation, with certain exceptions which were specified by him, and which he had a right to specify under the statute. I have those proclamations before me, and as I propose to leave no doubt on this subject I will refer to the language of the proclamation of Mr. Lincoln in December, 1863. I will read a portion of the recital:

"Whereas, with reference to said rebellion and treason, laws have been enacted by Congress declaring forfeitures and confiscation of property and liberation of slaves, all upon terms and conditions therein stated, and also declaring that the President was thereby authorized at any time thereafter, by proclamation, to extend to persons who may have participated in the existing rebellion, in any State or part thereof, pardon and amnesty, with such exceptions and at such times and on such conditions as he may deem expedient for the public welfare; and whereas the congressional declaration for limited and conditional pardon accords with well-established judicial exposition of the pardoning power; and whereas, with reference to said rebellion, the President of the United States has issued several proclamations with provisions in regard to the liberation of slaves; and whereas it is now desired by some persons heretofore engaged in said rebellion to resume their allegiance to the United States and to inaugurate loyal State governments within and for their respective States: Therefore

"I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, do proclaim, declare, and make known to all persons who have, directly or by implication, participated in the existing rebellion, except as herein-after excepted, that a full pardon is hereby granted to them and each of them, with restoration of all rights of property, except as to slaves, and in property cases where rights of third parties shall have intervened."

Now, what is the condition?

"And upon the condition that every such person shall take and subscribe an oath and thenceforward keep and maintain said oath inviolate; and which oath shall be registered for permanent preservation, and shall be of the tenor and effect following, to wit:

"I ——— do solemnly swear, in presence of Almighty God that I will henceforth faithfully support, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States, and the Union of the States thereunder; and that I will, in like manner, abide by and faithfully support all acts of Congress passed during the existing rebellion with reference to slaves, so long and so far as not repealed, modified, or held void by Congress, or by decision of the Supreme Court; and that I will in like manner, abide by and faithfully support all proclamations of the President made during the existing rebellion having reference to slaves, so long and so far as not modified or declared void by decision of the Supreme Court. So help me God.

"The persons excepted from the benefits of the foregoing provisions are all who are, or shall have been, civil or diplomatic officers or agents of the so-called confederate government; all who have left judicial stations under the United States to aid in the rebellion; all who are, or shall have been, military or naval officers of said so-called confederate government above the rank of colonel in the army or of lieutenant in the navy; all who left seats in the United States Congress to aid the rebellion; all who resigned commissions in the Army or Navy of the United States and afterward aided the rebellion; and all who have engaged in any way in treating colored persons or white persons in charge of such otherwise than lawfully as prisoners of war, and which persons may have been found in the United States service as soldiers, seamen, or in any other capacity."

Pursuant to a law of Congress, by the authority of Congress, in the name of Congress, and in the name of every member of Congress who voted for that bill, Mr. Lincoln, before the whole American people, before the whole civilized world, pledged the faith of this Government that every man who was then in rebellion who would come forward and lay down his arms and take that oath, with the exceptions named, should have full pardon and amnesty. This proclamation, which he made in 1863, he renewed in substance on the 26th of March, 1864, by recognizing it in another proclamation, in which he goes on to specify one other additional exception, specifying persons who were held in confinement as prisoners of war or held for certain offenses, which it is not necessary for me to read.

In pursuance of these proclamations of Mr. Lincoln, thousands upon thousands and hundreds of thousands came forward and took the oath of allegiance and accepted pardon and amnesty. Can you take it away? No, sir; you have no right, no power to take it away; and the attempt to take it away by Congress is in violation of the Constitution and in violation of the express decision of the Supreme Court on this very question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What decision is that?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will read to my friend from that decision. In a late case decided by the Supreme Court, what do they say about this matter of granting pardons, and what do they say about the effect of a pardon? Some gentlemen in Congress say, "What is the Supreme Court? we can blow it away with a breath; we can construe the Constitution for the Supreme Court," when everybody knows that the Supreme Court was made on purpose to construe the laws of Congress and determine whether Congress had exceeded its authority or not. What do they say about pardons?

"The Constitution provides that the President shall have power to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States, except in cases of impeachment." The power thus conferred is unlimited, with the exception stated; it extends to every offense known to the law."

For every offense against the United States, except impeachment, the President of the United States has the power to pardon.

"This power of the President is not subject to legislative control. Congress can neither limit the effect of his pardon, nor exclude from its exercise any class of offenders."

That is what the Supreme Court say; that Congress cannot limit the effect of a pardon which has been granted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Nobody doubts that; but the question is, what is its effect?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The effect of a pardon is to restore a man to his full rights the same as if he never had been guilty of an offense. He stands restored to his rights as a citizen of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President—

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I shall soon be through, and my friend from Vermont will have the floor and can go on then. I want to read what the court say.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not blame you for not wanting to be interrupted.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. My friend, of course, is well aware that it withdraws the mind from the line of argument to be interrupted. It is with no discourtesy or disrespect to my friend that I do not yield.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not take it in any such sense. I think if I were in your position I should do the same thing.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The court say:

"This power of the President is not subject to legislative control. Congress can neither limit the effect of his pardon nor exclude from its exercise any class of offenders. The benign prerogative of mercy cannot be fettered by any legislative restriction."

"A pardon reaches both the punishment prescribed for the offense and the guilt of the offender, and when the pardon is full it releases the punishment and blots out of existence the guilt, so that in the eye of the law the offender is as innocent as if he had never committed the offense."

That is the effect of a pardon according to the Supreme Court.

"If granted before conviction it prevents any of the penalties and disabilities consequent upon conviction from attaching. If granted after conviction it removes the penalties and disabilities, and restores him to all his civil rights. It makes him, as it were, a new man, and gives him a new credit and capacity. There is only this limitation to its operation: it does not restore offices forfeited, or property or interests vested in others in consequence of the conviction and judgment."

Then the court, speaking of the particular case before them, the Garland case, go on to say:

"The pardon produced by the petitioner is a full pardon for all offenses by him committed, arising from participation, direct or implied, in the rebellion, and is subject to certain conditions, which have been complied with. The effect of this pardon is to relieve the petitioner from all penalties and disabilities attached to the offense of treason committed by his participation in the rebellion. So far as that offense is concerned, he is thus placed beyond the reach of punishment of any kind; but to exclude him, by reason of that offense, from continuing in the enjoyment of a previously acquired right, is to enforce a punishment for that offense, notwithstanding the pardon. If such exclusion can be effected by the exaction of an expurgatory oath covering the offense, the pardon may be avoided, and that accomplished indirectly which cannot be reached by direct legislation. It is not within the constitutional power of Congress thus to inflict punishment beyond the reach of executive clemency."

I have read to you that one of the consequences specified in the very statute of 1862 as a part of the punishment of the crime of rebellion is that the person shall not hold an office; but, according to this decision, the pardon and amnesty of the President wipes it out and he stands just as he did without the commission of any offense.

Now, sir, let me go a step further. In 1863 Mr. Johnson issued a proclamation, which I think received as unanimous an indorsement by the whole Union Republican party of this country, by all its press, by all its political organizations, as any proclamation or any act of a President of this country ever did receive. What did Mr. Johnson do? He issued a proclamation following in the line of the proclamation of Mr. Lincoln, but he made his proclamation more stringent against the rebels than the proclamation of Mr. Lincoln. Although he did not take away the amnesty which had been accepted under Mr. Lincoln's proclamation, for he had no power to take it away, yet in applying his proclamation of pardon and amnesty to those who were excepted and who had been engaged in the rebellion and had refused Mr. Lincoln's proclamation, Mr. Johnson made six additional exceptions which Mr. Lincoln did not embrace in his proclamation. Gentlemen sometimes say—and it is very amusing to hear them talk about it—that Mr. Johnson's proclamation of amnesty was much more liberal toward the rebels than Mr. Lincoln's.

Mr. WILSON. Who says that?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I do not know that the Senator does; but the other Senator from Massachusetts to-day insisted that he and Mr. Lincoln stood precisely on the same ground; that they were for reconstructing the South upon the basis of loyalty and the exclusion of the rebels. Mr. Lincoln did no such thing. Mr. Lincoln invited all rebels who would come in and take his oath of amnesty to join in the reconstruction, with the exceptions which he named. He specified eight exceptions; Mr. Johnson specified fourteen. Mr. Johnson's proclamation of amnesty was more stringent than the proclamation of Mr. Lincoln. The proclamation is before me, and here are the fourteen classes which are specified. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] concedes that I am right; that Mr. Johnson's proclamation of pardon and amnesty was more stringent toward the rebels than the proclamation of Mr. Lincoln.

In pursuance of this proclamation of Mr. Johnson, issued in 1865, and which has been, with the consent and approbation of Congress, in full operation from that time down to the 1st of January last, thousands and tens of thousands of men in the southern States have come forward and have accepted amnesty and pardon upon the grounds therein specified and have taken the oath of allegiance. Now, what is proposed? It is proposed, substantially, by an act of Congress, to say that these very men who have thus received pardon and amnesty shall be deprived of pardon and amnesty. The pardon and amnesty which you gave in the name of the United States, to which you pledged the good faith of this Government; you now undertake to snatch from their hands and to disfranchise them.

Mr. President, I shall make no long speech on this subject. I simply propose to present the question for the consideration of Senators. I maintain, earnestly maintain, that you cannot justly refuse to sanction the principle embodied in this amendment. The decision of the Supreme Court requires it. Let me suppose a case. Suppose that a man in the State of Louisiana who had formerly been a justice of the peace or held some other position, either State or national, requiring him to take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and who had accepted Mr. Lincoln's proclamation of pardon and amnesty, should be elected by the people to an office in one of these States, and should bring a suit and the case should be carried from the courts of the State to the Supreme Court of the United States; is there a man sitting in this body who doubts for one moment that the Supreme Court would say that he had a right to that office and Congress had no power to take it away from him? To remove all doubts as to the vast number of persons to be disfranchised under the operations of this bill, I call attention to the first statute ever passed by Congress. It is not confined to a few, but extends to all members of State Legislatures, and to all executive and judicial officers of the States, who by the express provisions of the law of Congress are all required to take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States. I have no doubt it would reach the number of one hundred and fifty thousand in these States. Mr. President, I do not know but that it is fore-ordained that this bill must pass precisely in this shape, right or wrong.

Mr. CONNESS. It is.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. A Senator behind me suggests that it is. Right or wrong, he says it is fore-ordained to pass.

Mr. STEWART. That is true.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. "That is true," says the Senator from Nevada. It may be an unavailing effort on my part to reach the reason, the judgment, and the consciences of the men sitting around me, lawyers, members of the Judiciary Committee, men who know that when a pardon is once granted pursuant to law Congress has no power to take it away. Perhaps right or wrong they are determined to pass this bill, and not recognize that the pardon which has been granted under the laws of Congress, laws passed by themselves, is to have any effect whatever. King Caucus rules the hour, right or wrong. Constitution or no Constitution, law or no law, his mandates must be obeyed. I did not suppose that that could be so; but all things are possible under the sun. I expected no such thing as that in the Senate of the United States. Here of all other places in the world the public faith must be maintained. The faith of this nation has been pledged. The faith of a nation when pledged, even if pledged to an enemy, is just as binding upon the nation as if it were pledged to a friend.

Mr. President, I have thus presented in brief my views on this subject. I have no disposition to trespass upon the time of the Senate, and shall not now enter into the discussion of any other feature of the bill; but this amendment I hope the Senate will adopt. If this bill is to pass, you certainly desire to make it as acceptable to the people of the South as possible. Is it likely to be acceptable when the faith of the nation has been given for us to break it; when pardon and amnesty has been pledged and accepted, and all the conditions have been kept, for us now to trample them under our feet? Others may think it the best way to make this most extreme measure acceptable to the people of the South to pledge your faith and then to break it. I cannot see it in that light.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I should not have occupied even the two or three moments of the time of the Senate on this question that I now propose to do if my friend from Wisconsin had permitted me to ask him a question, which he thought it fit not to do, and I do not blame him for it. The question is not what is the effect of a pardon constitutionally granted, which I admit purges the offender of all guilt in a legal sense, but assuming the ground that Congress necessarily and rightly assumed, that the governments of these rebel States are disorganized and are only in temporary effective operation from the mere powerful force of the military arm of the Executive in suppressing the rebellion, the question is, when Congress interferes and undertakes to authorize the people of those districts to form governments or reform them, whatever you call it, to whom shall be intrusted the high duty of resuscitating those governments? That is a question that appeals to the legislative discretion of the law-making power, if the law is to operate upon it at all; and, of course, that we act at all assumes the fact that the law is to operate upon it.

Then the question is, to whom among the whole people, black and white, from the infant to the aged man, is to be intrusted the exercise of that function? Now, it appears to me we are to act on that question as we deem just and right, as a matter of political expediency over which the Supreme Court has no control. To whom shall we intrust it? We think it fit to intrust it, not to the females, not to the infants, not to the idiots, not to the insane, not to the head rebels, but to a certain other class of persons. Therefore it is that we give full effect to all the proclamations of the President; we do not disturb them at all, but exercising our legislative political prerogative as the law-makers of the nation, we choose from among that people the persons to whom we think it fit to intrust this high power of reorganizing those governments. Whether it is right or wrong, as a matter of morality, to choose this particular class of persons that this law chooses is another question. I think it is; my friend thinks it is not. That is a question of political and legislative expediency. The courts have nothing to do with it. That is all I have to say, sir.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to make but one or two remarks on this question: it is one of some importance as I think. I shall support the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin, because, regarding the effect of a pardon as I do, I cannot vote otherwise. The effect of a pardon is to wipe out the offense itself; it goes to the offense, not to the judgment of the court; the man pardoned stands in the eye of the law, as has been stated by the Senator from Wisconsin, as if he had not committed the crime at all. The Constitution conferring the power of pardoning upon the President, when the President exercises the power, Congress and each Senator, in my judgment, is bound to give all the force and effect to the pardon that the Constitution itself gives and that the laws give. If the effect of the pardon is to remove all responsibility and all legal consequences whatever of the crime, Senators, in my judgment, are bound so to regard it.

Then, Mr. President, if this is intended as punishment, clearly we cannot do it upon two grounds stated so well by the Supreme Court. If the party be pardoned we cannot punish him afterward. If this be a punishment not prescribed at the time the offense was committed we cannot prescribe it now. It is said that these men are denied the right to vote, because it is not safe to allow them to vote, for political considerations. But we take away from them a privilege that they now enjoy because of a crime committed by them. That is the effect of our act if we pass this bill. The Supreme Court has said that that cannot be done in the decision upon the test oath as applicable to lawyers.

But, sir, if it has not that legal effect binding upon us; in other words, if it has not the effect under the Constitution to make this enactment void so far as part of the persons are concerned, yet as a political question how does it address us, how does it address our consciences? Under the Constitution a man is pardoned by the act of the President; he stands as if he had committed no offense in the eye of the law; can we, then, in the enactment of laws say that he shall be treated as one who has committed an offense? Suppose in fact they had never committed an offense, would any Senator dream of excluding them from participation in the formation of a State government, from the exercise of political power under the existing government? Clearly not. Then if the act of the President has been to place them as if they had never committed an offense it seems to me that it addresses our consciences as I have suggested. I do not think we can strip a man of his citizenship as a punishment for crime after the crime has been committed. I think that is too well settled by the Supreme Court to be doubted; and I think we cannot punish him in any way after he is pardoned. Now, it is a mere evasion, as I think, to say that this is not done because a crime has been committed. You may call it thus, but in fact it is because they committed a crime—

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If the honorable Senator from Indiana will give way, I will read a few sentences from the recent decision of the Supreme Court bearing on the precise point with which we are now dealing.

Mr. HENDRICKS. With pleasure.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. "The Constitution," says Judge Field, delivering the opinion of the court—

"The Constitution deals with substance, not shadows. Its inhibition was leveled at the thing, not the name. It intended that the rights of the citizen should be secured against deprivation for past conduct by legislative enactment, however disguised. If the inhibition can be avoided by the form of the enactment, its insertion in the fundamental law was a vain and futile proceeding."

"Now, the clauses in the Missouri constitution which are the subject of consideration do not in terms define any crime or declare that any punishment shall be inflicted, but they produce the same result upon the parties against whom they are directed as though the crimes were defined and the punishment declared. They assume that there are persons in Missouri who are guilty of some of the acts designated. They would have no meaning in the constitution were not such the fact. They are aimed at past acts, and not future facts. They were intended to operate upon parties who, in some form or manner, by action or words, directly or indirectly, had aided or countenanced the rebellion or sympathized with parties engaged in the rebellion, or had endeavored to escape the proper responsibilities and duties of a citizen in time of war. And they were intended to operate by depriving such persons of the right to hold certain offices and trusts, and to pursue their ordinary and regular avocations. This deprivation is punishment; nor is it any less so because a way is opened for escape from it by the expurgatory oath."

And then they discuss the question as to the effect of the oath. The court lay down the general principles that—

"The deprivation of any rights, civil or political, may be punishment, the circumstances attending and the causes of deprivation determining this fact. Disqualification from office may be punishment, as in cases of conviction upon impeachment."

I also wish to call the attention of the honorable Senator to the fact that the statute which defines the crime of treason makes the deprivation of office a part of the punishment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. There is no question about the fact that both Congress and the States have made disfranchisement and ineligibility to hold office a punishment for crime. It is a very high punishment to a man of sensitive feelings, perhaps not as severe as to be imprisoned at labor, and yet it is a high punishment to take away from a man the power which the citizens enjoy in the making of their governments, in the enactment of their laws, and to place him in a position of political inferiority. It is a high punishment and was so treated by Congress in declaring that it shall be one of the punishments of the crime of treason, in declaring that it shall be one of the punishments for desertion from the Army. It is so treated by the States in providing that it shall be a part of the punishment for high crimes.

This bill as it stands proposes that a class of men, because of their participation in the rebellion, shall not be allowed to hold office nor to vote. If the President has pardoned these men, I submit to Senators, can we do this? Independently of the decision of the Supreme Court, which is directly upon the point, can we do it? If they have been restored by the act of pardon under the Constitution of the United States to the position in the eye of the law which they occupied before the offense, can we treat them as yet guilty? Does the Constitution not address the judgments of legislators as well as of courts? A court could not punish a man after he had been pardoned. Suppose a person guilty of participation in the rebellion were indicted for it, and he should present to the court in support of a plea to that indictment his letters of pardon or the proclamation of the President of the United States, with proof of the acts on his part which brought him under the proclamation, would the court have any discretion? Certainly not, because the Constitution gives to the President the power to relieve this man from the responsibility for his crime. If, then, the court could have no discretion, how can Congress, how can any Senator refuse to give the act of pardon the full force which under the Constitution and laws it does have?

Mr. STEWART. I do not wish to occupy the time of the Senate; but I think the Senators from Wisconsin and Indiana have mistaken the ruling of the court in the cases referred to. It will be observed that we are now creating certain officers for the purpose of making a preliminary organization. The court say in their opinion, and the same distinction is drawn in several places, "The profession of an attorney and counselor is not like an office created by an act of Congress," "the possession of which may be burdened with conditions." A question of that kind was once presented in a case from the State of Massachusetts, and Mr. Webster drew the distinction very clearly that it was within the power of the State to prescribe qualifications for offices created by the State. So with Congress. Congress desires agents for the purpose of carrying out its legislation. It may select its own agents without being obnoxious to the ruling of the recent decisions. Now, I for my own part should not prefer this amendment of the House; I think it unnecessary as a matter of policy; but I care very little about it, and it having been attached to the bill, I do not deem it of sufficient importance to oppose it. It certainly cannot be said that when we are proceeding to reorganize civil government in the South we cannot select the persons who shall perform those functions and prescribe their qualifications. The Supreme Court have not taken any such position as that; they have been very studious to draw the distinction between the profession of an attorney and the position of an officer of the United States. They say the attorney has an interest in his profession; he is an officer of the court; he is put there by a judgment of the court; he has rights under that judgment; but an officer is a creature of the law. Whether that distinction is well founded or not it is certainly drawn by the Supreme Court; so that this provision cannot be said to be repugnant to the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not doubt that if Congress were to create an office it could declare at the time who should be eligible to fill it; but if the office has been created, can Congress, by way of punishment, declare some particular persons ineligible who were before that act eligible? That is the point I tried to suggest.

Now, the Senator from Nevada says this is a small matter. Mr. President, I would not regard it as a small matter if it affected but one man; when the rights and equality of all the States in this country are to be affected it is important whether it extends to many or few. One man is as much to be protected in the enjoyment of a pardon which the President has given to him as fifty; and I think there is no force in the argument addressed to me that it applies to but few individuals. I think there are very many more than the Senator from Ohio supposes who would be included in this legislation; and further, it was not the judgment of the Senate that there should be such a restriction as the House has proposed. I believe I have heard no Senator, except perhaps the Senator from Massachusetts, express a desire for such a provision. The desire of the Senate has been that the right to vote should be free to all.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to say to my friend from Indiana that two thirds of the party to which I belong in the House of Representatives were of the same opinion, that no such restriction should be put on; but these amendments were forced on this bill by the Democratic party. I do not say it complainingly.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask the Senator from Ohio what single Democrat in the House of Representatives voted for it; can he name one?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will say this: that the Democratic party, by resorting to what are called filibustering tactics, prevented a vote on the bill and prevented the adoption of the Senate amendment; and then this morning, when our bill could have been passed finally without amendment, by their course they compelled the friends of the measure to yield to these amendments, so that if these restrictions operate severely and harshly upon the southern people in reorganizing the southern States, it is not the Union party that imposes them, but the Democratic party.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If two thirds of the Senator's party in the House of Representatives is opposed to these amendments that come here from the House of Representatives, I do not see how they got on to the bill, for there was not a single Democrat in favor of them or who voted for them; and it has been a singular kind of voting in the House that sends them here. It is a fact that not one Democrat voted for them. I suppose that when the Senator speaks of filibustering proceedings he refers to the fact that the Democratic party refused to vote for the previous question. I think they generally vote against calling the previous question, and I sustain them in doing it. When grave and important legislation is on hand I do not think it ought to be passed under the previous question; a fair opportunity for debate ought to be allowed, full and free debate, and it is not filibustering when gentlemen of the House of Representatives vote against the call for the previous question. These amendments were passed through the House of Representatives without a single Democratic vote, and there is no necessity and no propriety on the part of the Senator undertaking to throw the responsibility on the minority. A minority of less than one third is never responsible for legislation. Is there a sort of leadership in the House of Representatives that compels two thirds of the majority to go with one third of the majority? The Senator from Ohio says that two thirds of his party in the House of Representatives are opposed to these restrictions. Then how does it come that they were adopted by the House of Representatives? Is there a sort of leadership that compels them to vote against their wish?

I think the Senator from Ohio, being the author of the measure as it passed the Senate, ought to accord to this suggestion: the Senate has been opposed to this proposition; in every vote given on the subject the Senate has been against it. Now, the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin reduces the number of persons to be affected by this legislation that we do not like. Why not, then, adopt it? Suppose there were a question about the points made by the Senator from Nevada or the Senator from Vermont, the proposition of the Senator from Wisconsin brings the measure nearer to the expressed judgment of the Senate than it is as it now stands; why not, then, allow the pleasure of the Senate govern so far as we can?

Mr. BUCKALEW. I wish to make some remarks in consequence of what has just been said. We are informed that two thirds of the political majority of the House of Representatives were indisposed to attach to this bill the amendments which have been sent to us. It is equally clear that the political minority in the House, to a man, are opposed to them. If then, it be true that the larger part of the mass of votes in that House that constitute the majority are adverse to these amendments, and if the record proves that every member of the political minority in the House is opposed to these amendments, pray, why should we not refuse to concur in them, and let this overwhelming and almost unanimous vote in the House concur with us in our repudiation of these odious amendments, in favor of which there has been but one voice given in this Chamber during the whole debate; I mean in favor of them upon their merits. If there be any truth or force in these suggestions which are to go out to the country and to influence the judgments of our fellow-citizens with reference to our proceedings, then the course of action for the Senate is made perfectly clear. It is so plain that the most ignorant man in the country who reads our debates cannot miss seeing where the truth lies, and where propriety lies upon this subject. Yes, sir, let us non-concur in the amendments of the House, and allow an oppressed majority in that branch of Congress to relieve themselves from the responsibility of these doubtful and odious amendments. I go with my whole heart for the relief of the House of Representatives from the false position in which they are placed.

I do not desire that the filibustering proceedings under the lead of the master of the House should place that interesting branch of the legislative department in a false position before the country, or place upon our statute-book an enactment which ought not to go there; an enactment which is not the deliberate sense of a clear majority of the House of Representatives, fairly expressed, without duress, without the operation of filibustering in that House, which we are told is the great evil which causes such bad amendments to come back to us upon our bills. Why, sir, nothing can be more certain, upon the statement of the Senator from Ohio, nay, sir, independent of his statement, nothing can be more certain upon general facts which we know, than that if the Senate expresses its own opinion on this subject and refuses to concur the House will agree with our action. There is no necessity now for our pressing this measure to a final action in the two Houses to-night or to-morrow. The interesting question of a ten-day limitation in executive action which was talked of is past, and is not now involved. If we do not act within one day or two days in both Houses, and get our bill transcribed and send it to the President, it is all the same thing; there is now no advantage to be gained by hurried action, as we are within ten days of the time of adjournment. Hence, there is no reason, so far as I can see, why we should concur in the amendments of the House. Gentlemen do not stand up to defend them upon their merits. Gentlemen tell us that they were not the deliberate sense of the majority of the House; and there is no question now as to time upon which we should disregard considerations which would otherwise weigh with us.

Upon every ground, therefore, I go for non-concurrence, as an act of justice to the coordinate branch of the legislative department, and especially as an act of justice to that suffering political majority in the House which has undergone such oppression in this case; which was hurried into votes which it ought not to have given.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I did not intend to disturb our friends. I only stated the exact truth, that these amendments are not the amendments of the Union party, which is as clear as any proposition in Euclid can be made. This body, by the unanimous vote of the Union members, sent to the House a proposition which contained no prohibition of any man exercising the elective franchise. It was the deliberately-considered proposition of the Union party. It was sent to the House. That same proposition, in the same words, received the sanction of more than two thirds of the Union members of the House, and would therefore be considered the definite judgment, the deliberate judgment of that party.

In the Senate, the honorable Senators pursued the proper course. They voted for the amendment on the ground that they preferred it to the original bill; and then, as they had a right to do, on account of the recitals in the preamble and for other reasons which they gave, they voted against the bill as amended. That was logical. My friend from Pennsylvania, and my friend from Indiana, voted with the great body of the Union members for the Senate amendment. The proposition went to the House of Representatives, and there the same question occurred. The House had already passed its bill, and the question came up, Is the Senate amendment better than the House bill? And thereupon the great body of the Union members voted "ay;" a minority of the Union members voted "no," and with that minority voted all the members of the Democratic party. Not only that, but when they found there was a difficulty about it, and the question came up, they commenced what is called "filibustering," and those who were in the House last night saw the interesting spectacle of the Democratic party, with perhaps a single member of the Union party—and that a venerable name—going through the tellers for the purpose of defeating this proposition; and the result was that they did defeat it, until finally, when the previous question was called, the great body of the Union party found itself in a minority by a combination of a few members of the Union party with the Democratic party.

What was the result? A proposition which had received the deliberate sanction of both bodies, so far as the Union party was concerned, was defeated; and not only that, but when an opportunity was offered to have a second vote on the Senate proposition, the previous question was moved and the whole Democratic party voted against the call for the previous question for the sole purpose of enabling the enemies of the Senate bill to load it down with obnoxious amendments. That is a matter of plain and positive truth which no man can deny. Then the friends of the bill were compelled either to agree to amendments which were inconsistent with some of the provisions of the bill or else to abandon the bill. As these amendments were not deemed so important—although they, it is true, disfranchise some of the southern people from voting—as they could not get the bill in any other way in consequence of the action of the Democratic party, the bulk of the Union party concluded that they had better take the bill with these amendments; and I shall vote in the same way here. But it is still a fact which will be recorded as a part of the history of this bill that if these amendments are harsh and hard on any portion of the people of the southern States, they are put there, not by the Union party, but by the Democratic party; and from that position no logic can enable gentlemen to escape. Here I will relieve my friends of the Democratic party in the Senate from all blame on that score, because they did not pursue that course. They pursued the parliamentary course of taking the best proposition. I do not complain of what has been done, because they had a right to do it. But the result will be that many men will be prevented from voting in the southern States who, but for the Democratic party, might have voted and taken part in the organization of governments in the southern States.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am glad, sir, that my judgment in hostility to this measure is indorsed by the fact that the Senator from Ohio feels it necessary to apologize for his party in regard to it. He has referred to the fact that the Senator from Pennsylvania and myself voted for the amendment which he proposed to the House bill, and that the Democrats in the House would not do likewise; and therefore he says the responsibility rests upon them. How was it? It requires no logic but a simple statement of facts.

A bill comes to the Senate from the House of Representatives which is a very objectionable bill, as objectionable as it was possible for the ingenuity of man to devise, in my judgment. The Senator from Ohio presents, according to the public papers, a report from an outside committee or body, a proposition. I read it over and I find it objectionable. I cannot vote for it as an affirmative proposition; he proposes it as a substitute for a measure which I consider more objectionable than his; and therefore, as an honest man, when the question is between the original measure—very objectionable indeed, and his proposition, less objectionable—what is my duty? Clearly to vote for the amendment. But then, when his amendment was adopted, I voted against the passage of the bill as amended. But when it went to the House of Representatives there was not presented to the members of that House a choice between two objectionable measures or an opportunity to take the less objectionable; but the question was then, Shall the bill pass, or shall the House concur in the Senate amendments, which is the passage of the bill? The effect of that vote was to pass the bill. A vote to concur is a vote to pass the bill. And then the Democrats voted "No," precisely as we did in this body. I cannot conceive, therefore, that any Senator can find fault with that unless he claims that the Democrats should have voted for a measure that their judgments and consciences disapproved.

Mr. STEWART. Allow me to interrupt the Senator. The avowed object of the minority of the Union party was to hold the bill open in order to put in an amendment. They would have voted for it as it was if they could not get it in what they conceived to be a better shape; but if they could amend it they would, in order, as they thought, to make it better. The great leader of the House appealed to the Democrats to help him keep it open until he could fix it to suit himself. The Democrats rallied to him and did not allow the vote to come on until he had had an opportunity to amend, and would not sustain the previous question. How would the Senator from Indiana have voted on that question of sustaining the previous question? Would he have kept it open to allow the minority to amend it, or would he have compelled a vote on the main proposition?

Mr. WILLIAMS. When I made allusion the other day to the proceedings of the House of Representatives I was severely rebuked as being out of order; but here appears to be a discussion altogether in relation to what transpired in the other branch of Congress and to what members said and did in relation to this bill, and as to the motives by which they were governed. I make the point of order on gentlemen, and insist that this discussion is out of order.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think the Senator from Oregon would have done well to have made his point of order when the Senator from Ohio commenced this. Does the Senator from Oregon insist upon his point?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not if the speeches be short.

Mr. HENDRICKS. All right. I am safe, for I believe I hardly ever make any other kind. I am not going to refer to the rumors the Senator from Nevada has spoken of or to the purposes of gentlemen in the other House in voting one way or the other. The fact is that no Democrat or Conservative in the House, so far as I know, offered any of these amendments or voted for them. There is a Republican majority in that House of two thirds; they can control the legislation to suit their pleasure; and if there is a bill passed that is not right they are responsible for it. It will not do, allow me to say to Senators, to undertake to throw the responsibility of dangerous legislation upon a helpless minority. In neither body can we control; and the effort of the distinguished Senator from Ohio to throw the responsibility of this legislation upon a small minority is a logical admission of the vice of the legislation itself.

Now, sir, if, as was so well said by the Senator from Pennsylvania, the thing stands just as the Senator from Ohio says it does, let us non-concur in these amendments that the Senate does not want; and I think I am safe in saying that when the bill goes back to the House no Democrat will vote for the amendments; and then if it be true, as the Senator from Ohio says it is, that two thirds of his party there are opposed to these amendments, they stand no chance, for the entire minority being opposed to them, and two thirds of the majority opposed to them, they cannot pass. The bill can therefore become a law if there is a majority in favor of the bill without the amendments.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not know just exactly what is in controversy here, although I have been listening for some time. The argument seems to be drawn so fine that it has almost passed from my perception. What is in question appears to be the reputation of the bill before us or the reputation of the Democratic party. If it be the reputation of the bill, all I have to say is that in my opinion the reputation of this great measure, which is to give peace, as I believe, to the country and consolidation to the Union, will remain long after the Democratic party shall have ceased to exist. If it is the reputation of the Democratic party that is in controversy, I think nothing need be said on that point. That is already established.

Now, Mr. President, as I said when I rose, I really do not see the point in the controversy. My opinion is that the discussion has reached a point when the question may be voted upon with great advantage, and I shall not delay the decision by a longer discussion.

Mr. CRAGIN. Mr. President, I was greatly tempted to ask the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] when he was first upon the floor a question; but being unwilling to interrupt any Senator, as I usually am, I forbore; but I will state in a few moments my position in another form.

By the constitutions of the several States of this Union I believe the Governors are empowered to grant pardons to men who have been convicted of crime. I suppose that if the Governor of any State should pardon a number of men who had been convicted of murder it would be perfectly legitimate for the Legislature to enact a law that all such men should not sit upon a jury in the trial of murder cases. The same principle obtains in the case under consideration and in reference to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin. Here are a very large number of men, traitors, who have been trying to destroy this Government by all the means in their power; some of them have been pardoned, it is true; but I take it it is legitimate for Congress, the law-making power of this Government, to say that rebels who are guilty of a crime greater than murder, even though they have been pardoned, shall not be employed as workmen in rebuilding or reconstructing the Government which they sought to destroy.

Mr. McDUGALL. Mr. President, under the English law the right to pardon was the first and highest prerogative of the Crown, an act of grace that when exercised was perfect in itself. The same policy has been adopted in our Republic and in our several States. An act of grace on the part of the Government, either before or after conviction of crime, is a perfect obliteration of everything in the form of charge or accusation or judgment passed. Now, I say that it is just as legitimate to deprive of essential rights any citizen by name, or fifty citizens of Maryland, or fifty citizens of Virginia, or fifty citizens of Tennessee, by name denominated, who have no relation to pardon, and who have been Union loyal men, if you please, as to deprive by legislation a person who has had the grace of Government as organized. There are conditions unwritten. When Delolme presented his work on the English constitution, where did he find it except in Magna Charta and certain charters that belonged to the Commonwealth and the nobility and the Crown, and yet Parliament understands that there is an English constitution; and no member of Parliament, be he lord or commoner, dare violate it. It is much more perilous for them than us; for now there appears to be a perfect absence of all regard for those great fundamental rules that lie at the foundation of society, elementary as well, as exhibited in the first forms of Government.

A pardon granted by him who is established as the Chief Executive under the Constitution of the United States makes a tabula rasa. There is nothing more to be said of or about that of which the party has been accused; and they who do it do it in violation both of the spirit and of the letter of the Constitution. It is worth while occasionally to look at what are our principles, and where is the law and what are our institutions and how are they founded. There is a very apt negligence on this subject, it seems to me, at the present day. I can only account for it by a kind of aptitude to answer particular purposes belonging to particular ambitions or to the policy of political parties.

Who will dispute the axiomatic truth that a pardon is a perfect tabula rasa so far as the person pardoned is concerned in relation to Government? Who among the learned Thebans on the other side of the Chamber will deny that? It being so, then, why do they not stand like any other citizens? And if they stand like all other citizens, how can they be disfranchised without violating the whole system of our laws and our Constitution and our Government? Our Constitution is not altogether in written words. It has its history, much larger, more extended and comprehensive than the mere letter of the Constitution, for it embraces the wisdom of long centuries, aggregated by men who were conversant with such wisdom. I do not know how men who profess to be conversant with our laws, who profess to regard our institutions, who profess to believe in the institutions organized by our fathers, undertake to say that this great power, the grace of the Government in favor of a citizen, shall not operate as grace, and shall not make a perfectly plain state for him who is pardoned, but that his offense may be resurrected, his dry bones exhumed and burned in an auto da fé.

I have said enough about the question of pardon. If I have not made myself intelligible, it is either because there are inattentive ears or lack of information or an indisposition to be informed. This bill, as it now comes back from the House amended, deprives the great body of the citizens of the South of the right to take part in government, even in its most elementary form. The Senator from Ohio says that it was the voice of the Union party that these amendments should not be made. Strange things happen sometimes; and I believe that about the time the amendments were made there were but seven or eight Representatives in the other House. It has been common here for this Union party, who have the charge of legislation, to abandon their places. They are not here in their seats when important legislation is going on. Frequently you cannot obtain a quorum in either House, notwithstanding your more than two-thirds majorities in each. I come here ceaselessly from a remote part of the city. I suppose I must take the word of the Senator from Ohio as being altogether veracious, when he says that the Union party in the Senate and House are opposed to these amendments; and our proposition now is to ascertain what the Union party of the House will say when the question is sent back to them for their full consideration, and not when they are nearly all out of their seats and only a dozen are left to transact business. There has been more careless legislation here within the last year than has been known in any like period in this country. I do not charge committees with inattention; I believe they do their labor rapidly; but outside of the work of committees, so far as business is done in the Senate, it is not done with any considerable care; and it does not seem to be considered the duty of a Senator to be in the Senate Chamber; he may go off and practice law in Maine or Maryland; he may go to Ohio or Pennsylvania and transact business, though the high office of a Senator would seem to require that he should be here to respond on great and important questions.

I think the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin should be adopted. In the first place, it gives full expression to the idea of pardon; and my remarks upon that cannot be answered by the logic of any of the learned gentlemen on the opposite side of the Chamber. In the next place, it is conceded that the amendments are wrong as made by the House. Then why not send them back for reformation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. RAMSEY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not desire to take the time of the Senate at this hour of the night, and yet I confess I am not pleased with the measure before us. When it was here as a purely military measure, looking to no future reconstruction on the basis of law, I did not vote for it, and though it is now better, because it seems to hold out some terms on which the States may reconstruct themselves, yet it is not what I have desired. I could if I choose perhaps give good reasons for voting against it should I conclude to so vote. But reconstruction in some shape is demanded as a national necessity, demanded no less by the best interests of the loyal States than by those of the seceding States. Hence perhaps any plan may be better than no plan at all. If a vote for this bill is to be justified, its justification rests on this simple fact: that under it there is hope of doing something at some time, however remote: there is a way, however imperfect, blind, and obscure it may be, through which we may arrive at reunion.

As the bill originally came from the House it was a bald and naked proposition to establish without limitation of power or the time of its duration a purely military government for the ten States now unrepresented. This, in my judgment, was a most dangerous experiment. It has been more than once tried in man's history, and the world furnishes no example of its success. Its effects are bad enough, in all conscience, on the conquered, but they have always proved infinitely worse on the conquerors. The conquered simply suffer the cruelties and oppressions of an unrestrained soldiery.

They generally increase in virtue and fortitude, and their common wrongs invariably cement them together for a final struggle to break their chains. The conquerors, on the other hand, in such cases become corrupted in the use of unlimited power, and gradually take on the airs and habits of tyrants. As the victim complains and threatens resistance, the conduct of the master becomes more harsh. Justice, pure and simple, cannot be administered for ten million people by military officers, in the absence of all those forms and guaranties which the wisdom of eighteen centuries has been collecting and building up as the monuments and fortresses of human freedom. They are its only shield. Cromwell tried military law and gradually found himself transformed from a great republican leader and the defender of English liberty to a loathsome tyrant, seeking pretexts to enslave a people in defiance of all their charters of personal right. His Government failed, and the people sought that security in a return to royalty which had been denied them in the name of republicanism. So long as Rome gave the rights of citizenship to the people she conquered the nation prospered. When she gave them military law and sent pro-consuls and questors to govern them her public men became corrupted by power and plunder; and the Government itself ceased to command their support, unless it ministered to their avarice or ambition. Nations as well as individuals must do unto others as they would that others should do unto them. This is an inexorable rule of justice, and he that would live and promote his own happiness must subject his conduct to it.

The Senate, being unwilling to embark on the experiment of pure military rule, modified the House bill by adopting what is known as the Blaine or Sherman amendment. This amendment conceded military rule, as asked by the House, but put some sort of limit to its duration. It provided that when the rebel States should adopt universal suffrage, regardless of color or race, excluding none, white or black, except for treason or such crimes as were felony at the common law, the regulation of exclusion to be left to the States themselves, and should adopt the constitutional amendment proposed at the last session of Congress, under one provision of which all persons who ever took an oath to support the Constitution of the United States as officers and afterward gave aid to the rebellion should be ineligible to office, State or national, and so soon as a sufficient number of said States should adopt it to make it a part of the Constitution of the United States, then military law should cease and the States should be admitted, provided that Congress even then should see fit to receive them.

This being adopted by the Senate, it went to the House, and it now comes to us with two amendments added to the Senate amendment. The first one provides that no person who would be excluded from holding office if the constitutional amendment were now the law, to wit, no person who having once taken the oath to support the United States Constitution afterward gave aid to rebellion shall be a member of any State constitutional convention, nor shall any person who would thus be excluded from holding office be permitted to vote for members of the State conventions. The second amendment provides that the present governments, erected under what is known as the presidential plan, shall be subject to the paramount authority of Congress; and that in all elections under said provisional governments those only shall be able to vote or be eligible to office who would be qualified as aforesaid to hold office if the constitutional amendment were adopted. In other words, the Senate bill opened the polls to all persons, white and black. The House amendments declare by act of Congress that certain persons shall be disfranchised from all participation in the governments so long as they remain in their present provisional condition, and also in the reorganization proceedings preparatory to their admission.

This bill, as now amended, proposes not only to say that persons who never before voted or held office in those States shall now vote and hold office, but it goes further and declares that persons who formerly held office and voted therein shall henceforth stand disfranchised.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DOOLITTLE] says this bill, if passed, will operate as a bill of attainder and also as an ex post facto law, and that it is therefore not within the constitutional power of Congress to pass it. To support his position he refers to the late cases decided by the Supreme Court, known as the Garland case and the Missouri test-oath case. He especially insists that so far at least as the President has pardoned under general proclamation of amnesty, issued by authority of the Constitution, as well as by the thirteenth section of the confiscation act, and so far as he has pardoned by special certificate to that effect, it is not competent for Congress or any legislative body or primary convention to take away rights formerly enjoyed. He thinks such action is in the nature of punishment and it cannot be inflicted: first, because Congress cannot prescribe the qualifications of electors or officers in the States; and second, if it could, as an original proposition, it cannot disregard the effects of the pardon, which are not only to remove the penalty for crime, but to wash out the guilt itself. He insists that the man pardoned becomes a new man, the same as if no offense had ever been committed.

This argument of the Senator, as well as the general course of events, deserves some consideration. I confess I feel its force. He insists, and so has my friend from Maryland [Mr. JOHNSON] insisted in this debate and in others, that the States are still in the Union, and being in the Union they are entitled to all the rights of the loyal States, and that their citizens are entitled to all the privileges and immunities enjoyed by other States. This we are told will be decided also by the Supreme Court. I admit that Congress would not be authorized to declare who shall vote or hold office in Missouri nor in New York nor Massachusetts. No one will so contend. Now, if the seceded States and their citizens cannot be dealt with in any manner different from the loyal States and their citizens, it becomes a serious question whether we can by simple act of Congress either include in the electoral list the negroes or exclude any part of the disloyal whites, and especially those who have been made whole by executive pardon.

To present the difficulty in its strongest light, I beg leave to refer to the decisions quoted. I do so, not to sustain the court in its conclusions, nor to sustain my friend from Wisconsin, (for I differ in some respects with both,) but to make them the foundation of an argument which I will use in support of my own theory. Nations, like individuals, must have the right of self-defense, and after a desperate struggle for existence the conqueror should not be required to release from his grasp his conquered enemy until he has fully disarmed him or put his own safety and future security beyond question. But first to the decisions of the Supreme Court.

In the Missouri case, known as the Cummings case, it is known that the State constitution adopted in 1865 provides that no one shall preach the gospel, practice law, teach school, or vote, &c., who had given aid or comfort to or sympathized with the rebellion; and to do these things without first taking an oath denying such aid and sympathy is made penal. The Cummings case is a prosecution on an indictment for preaching without the oath. The court say:

"The disabilities created by the constitution of Missouri must be regarded as penalties. They constitute punishment."

They also say:

"The deprivation of any rights, civil or political, may be punishment, the circumstances attending and the causes of deprivation determining this fact. Disqualification from office may be punishment, as in cases of conviction upon impeachment. Disqualification from the pursuit of a lawful avocation or from positions of trust or from the privilege of appearing in the courts or acting as executor, administrator, or guardian, may also, and often has been, imposed as punishment."

They here insist that the taking away of even a political right once enjoyed is punishment, and lest it might be evaded on the ground that the power existed under the plea that it was not intended as punishment, but a prescription of qualification, they say:

"The Constitution deals with substance, not shadows. Its inhibition was leveled at the thing, not the name. It intended that the rights of the citizen should be secured against deprivation for past conduct by legislative enactment, however disguised. If the inhibition can be avoided by the form of the enactment, its insertion in the fundamental law was a vain and futile proceeding."

Again, the court say:

"Now, the clauses in the Missouri constitution which are the subject of consideration do not in terms define any crime or declare that any punishment shall be inflicted, but they produce the same result upon the parties against whom they are directed as though the crimes were defined and the punishment declared. They assume that there are persons in Missouri who are guilty of some of the acts designated. They would have no meaning in the constitution were not such the fact. They are aimed at past acts, and not future facts. They were intended to operate upon parties who, in some form or manner, by action or words, directly or indirectly, had aided or countenanced the rebellion or sympathized with parties engaged in the rebellion, or had endeavored to escape the proper responsibilities and duties of a citizen in time of war. And they were intended to operate by depriving such persons of the right to hold certain offices and trusts, and to pursue their ordinary and regular avocations. This deprivation is punishment; nor is it any less so because a way is opened for escape from it by the expurgatory oath."

It will be remembered that a party might relieve himself of the penalty by taking the oath. In the following paragraph they declare the illegality of absolute exclusion:

"The framers of the constitution of Missouri knew at the time that whole classes of individuals would be unable to take the oath prescribed. To them there is no escape provided. To them the deprivation was intended to be and is absolute and perpetual. To make the enjoyment of a right dependent upon an impossible condition is equivalent to an absolute denial of the right under any condition, and such denial enforced for a past act is nothing else than punishment imposed for that act; it is a misapplication of terms to call it anything else."

And again:

"Clauses which prescribe a penalty for an act of this nature are within the terms of the definition of an ex post facto law. They impose a punishment for an act not punishable at the time it was committed."

The Garland case arose under the act of Congress, and in addition to the plea of original unconstitutionality of the act prescribing the oath, Garland pleaded also the President's pardon. It is now only necessary to allude to the opinion of the court on the latter branch of the plea. The court say:

"Such being the case, the inquiry arises as to the effect and operation of a pardon. On this point all the authorities concur. A pardon reaches both the punishment prescribed for the offense and the guilt of the offender, and when the pardon is full it releases the punishment and blots out of existence the guilt, so that, in the eye of the law, the offender is as innocent as if he had never committed the offense."

It has been said that a pardon goes to the guilt and not to the offense; but the Supreme Court seem to hold otherwise:

"If granted before conviction, it prevents any of the penalties and disabilities consequent upon conviction from attaching. If granted after conviction, it removes the penalties and disabilities, and restores him to all his civil rights. It makes him, as it were, a new man, and gives him a new credit and capacity."

Taking these two decisions of the Supreme Court together, it would seem that, so far as the President has extended pardon to the rebels of the South, they are restored to all rights supposed to be forfeited, civil and political. That certainly must be the case, unless there is some other and paramount power in Congress which can be legitimately exercised in the seceded States that cannot be elsewhere. Now, what is that power, and whence does it come?

It has been repeatedly said in the discussion that every Union member of the body voted for the bill as amended, on motion of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] when it was passed by the Senate as a substitute for the House bill. I perhaps am of so little consequence here that it does not matter how I vote; but I did not vote for the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose the Senator was not present.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, I was present. I voted for the Senator's amendment in preference to the military bill of the House; but when the question came on the passage of the bill as amended I did not vote at all. I did not vote against it, because my Union friends had agreed on it in caucus. That agreement is now a well-known fact I believe, and therefore I suppose I am at liberty to allude to it. They agreed on this course of policy as being the best, and I did not feel at liberty to put myself in opposition to what was thought essential for peace.

This difficulty, presented by the decisions alluded to, occurred to my mind when discussing the constitutional amendment question of last year, and I gave it some attention in a speech delivered here on the 13th of last February. The Federal Constitution not only forbids Congress the power to pass bills of attainder and ex post facto laws, but it equally forbids such power to the States. Our supreme judicial authority has gone quite far toward declaring such legislation as now proposed invalid, whether proceeding from the national or State Legislatures. It has not extended, and I hope will not extend, the principles of the cases decided to such regulations as may be adopted by the States prescribing the qualifications of voters; but such thing may occur. I only stop now to repeat that not one Senator in this Hall, and not perhaps one judge worthy of the name in the Union, would insist that Congress possesses the power to apply the principles of this bill to the loyal States. If so, Congress would indeed be supreme, and I can imagine no power beyond its constitutional grasp.

While we may well admit that Missouri and New York and Massachusetts may regulate in their own way the qualifications of their respective electors and of their State officers, none of us will now claim such power for Congress. Hence it follows that if this legislation finds sanction with the Supreme Court it must be by virtue of some condition or circumstance attaching to the seceded and not to the loyal States. It must result from some power of the Constitution dominant in peace, but quickened and developed by rebellion and war. If there be no such latent power this legislation will fall to the ground, and such men only will vote and hold offices in the rebel States as may be permitted by the States themselves. This is the position of our Democratic friends. They insist that no war can be waged by the United States against a State or States of the Union, except in suppression of rebellion, and so soon as armed force is subdued the rebel States have the constitutional right to resume their places in the Union, to send their representatives to Congress, and demand all their former privileges, immunities, and honors if you please, subject only to the simple right of the Federal authorities to cause offenders against the law to be arraigned in the courts and tried for their treason.

This position, it will be seen, enables a State, or a confederation of States, as recently, to commence and carry on a war to dissolve the Union so long as there is prospect of success, and when that prospect is removed or the war itself becomes irksome or unprofitable to the rebels, to declare the war at an end and a state of peace to exist. This gives the choice of war or peace; it tells rebellious communities they may take their choice to rule by force or, that failing, they may return and rule by the ballot and in the legislative councils of the nation. They may rebel to secure a certain criminal purpose; to obtain an object which, being obtained, would render reunion impossible; and failing to secure it through the bloody paths of war, they may under this theory abandon the war, not because the object is abandoned, but because war is not the best means to secure it. Then the moment the war is abandoned all power of the United States to put away and remove forever the disturbing element, to place it beyond the reach of future hope or to take guarantees for the future peace and security of the whole nation, according to this theory, ceases. If this be true, all the incidents and rights of war, which, by the settled principles of the international law were well understood when our Constitution was made, have no application at all to war waged by the United States; at least they have no application to a civil war such as we have just passed through. Many of our Republican friends, on the other hand, it seems to me, fall into error because of their unwillingness to abandon the idea of punishing traitors under and by virtue of the national sovereignty. This idea should, in my judgment, be given up, and given up at once. I do not believe now that any man will be hung for treason committed in the late war. I doubt whether any one should be hung unless he voluntarily and without superior orders violated the rules of civilized warfare. And this would bring us back again to consider what are the rules of civilized war. We must go to the international law to find them. Hence I utterly reject the idea of resorting to the trial and execution of traitors as a proper security for the future. Such a course would simply disgrace us in the eyes of Christian nations as an act of cruelty wanton in itself, wholly devoid of those sanctions now justified by good Governments, and not founded on any principle of indemnity for the past or security for the future. Our security exists in guarantees as broad as the causes of the war. If the war had been confined to irregular individual action, the punishment of individuals might suffice. But it was a war of communities, cemented into a great national power. The security then must be, not personal, but political; it must relate to communities. And to descend now to personal punishments would scarcely become a nation so great as ours.

We recognized the rebel power during the war as an independent nation, not of right, but in fact. The rebellion became a great territorial war; not an insurrection, but a civil war; the greatest ever known on earth. Civilization, humanity, common sense, forced us to recognize them as belligerents. We treated with them during the war, and so did other nations as great and perhaps as respectable as ourselves. Now, that armed force is subdued, we must proceed to arrange for permanent peace. In arranging peace I know of no plan except that recognized by the laws of reason, nature, and common sense, which, from inherent necessity, as well as from their admitted justice and long use by the nations of the world, have become fixed as part of the international law.

Mr. DAVIS. Allow me to ask the honorable Senator from whence that power is derived.

Mr. HENDERSON. What power?

Mr. DAVIS. The power to recognize the rebel States as an independent nation.

Mr. HENDERSON. I suppose we, like all nations of the world, must recognize the established principles of international law. Congress, by the Constitution, may declare war, may grant letters of marque and reprisal, may raise and support armies, and provide and maintain a navy. These powers look to a condition of war, and war, I presume, when once declared by the United States carries with it all the incidents known and recognized by the laws of nations.

The Senator asks whence the authority to recognize the rebel power as an independent power. I answer that the Constitution enables Congress to declare war. The same Constitution enables it to provide for every phase the war may assume. Congress may treat for the exchange of prisoners or send commissioners to treat for peace. It may provide for a blockade of ports and enforce the rules of international law against other nations. Our rights against neutrals would be quite incomplete were we in an actual state of war and neither ourselves nor other nations recognized in the enemy a belligerent.

But the Senator's objection, I presume, comes from the fact that this was a civil war, a war of the sovereign against rebels, and hence the ordinary rules of war cannot apply.

I read from Vattel on this subject:

"When a nation becomes divided into two parties absolutely independent, and no longer acknowledging a common superior, the State is dissolved and the war between the two parties stands on the same ground, in every respect, as a public war between two different nations. Whether a republic be split into two factions, each maintaining that it alone constitutes the body of the State, or a kingdom be divided between two competitors for the Crown, the nation is severed into two parties, who will mutually term each other rebels. Thus there exist in the State two separate bodies, who pretend absolute independence, and between whom there is no judge. They decide their quarrel by arms, as two different nations would do. The obligations to observe the common law of war toward each other is therefore absolute—indispensably binding on both parties, and the same which the law of nature imposes on all nations in transactions between State and State."—Vattel, book three, chapter eighteen, page 427.

Mr. DAVIS. Will my honorable friend permit me to ask him another question? What provision of the Constitution incorporates that principle of the law of nations which he has just read?

Mr. HENDERSON. Our Constitution was adopted by learned and able men who recognized the international law. It was a code then well established and well understood by those men. Many provisions of the Constitution refer directly to this code, and without its aid we could not interpret those provisions.

Mr. DAVIS. But suppose there is a principle or a provision of the Constitution of the United States incompatible with and contradictory to a principle of international law, which is to prevail?

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not apprehend that there is any such contradiction. The principles of international law are but the laws of nature; they are but Christian principles if I understand them properly, and I presume our Constitution was not intended by its framers to be made in disregard of those principles. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] directs my attention to some of the provisions of the Constitution on this point. For instance, power is given to Congress "to define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas and offenses against the laws of nations," also, "to make rules concerning captures on land and water" and "to grant letters of marque and reprisal." In these clauses the international law is recognized—

Mr. DAVIS. In the specific cases named.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is expressly recognized in some provisions and not contravened in any that I am aware of, and hence I assume that even the American Constitution, great as I admit it to be, is subject to those established and recognized principles of reason and Christian brotherhood that control and must continue to control the conduct and intercourse of nations. Of course in times of peace our internal and municipal government is not interfered with by the international law, for no principle of it is then applicable to the subject. But even in peace the power to appoint ambassadors, ministers, consuls, and other agents of like character is to be exercised in accordance with that law, and their duties are regulated by it. And no power, in my judgment exists in Congress to authorize these agents, in their intercourse abroad, to violate or disregard it. But in this case there is no power left to treat with. The enemy is completely conquered. The war was to expel the usurping rebel authorities. If the seceded States had always been independent, never connected with us by the Federal Constitution, no one will doubt the absolute power and jurisdiction of Congress in the premises.

Vattel likewise settles this question:

"If the entire State be conquered, if the nation be subdued, in what manner can the victor treat it without transgressing the bounds of justice? What are his rights over the conquered country?"

"The whole right of the conqueror is derived from justifiable self-defense, which comprehends the support and prosecution of his rights. When, therefore, he has totally subdued a hostile nation, he undoubtedly may, in the first place, do himself justice respecting the object which had given rise to the war, and indemnify himself for the expenses and damages he has sustained by it; he may, according to the exigency of the case, subject the nation to punishment, by way of example; he may even, if prudence so require, render her incapable of doing mischief with the same ease in future. But for the attainment of these different objects he is to prefer the gentlest methods, still bearing in mind that the doing of harm to an enemy is no further authorized by the law of nature than in the precise degree which is necessary for justifiable self-defense and reasonable security for the time to come."

Again, says this humane and distinguished author:

"In general, he [the conqueror] ought to consult the true interests of his own State, and by sound policy to reconcile them, as far as possible, with those of the conquered country."

"When a sovereign, arrogating to himself the absolute disposal of a people whom he has conquered, attempts to reduce them to slavery, he perpetuates the state of warfare between that nation and himself. The Scythians said to Alexander the Great, 'There is never any friendship between the master and slave: in the midst of peace the rights of war still subsist.' Should it be said that in such a case there may be peace, and a kind of compact by which the conqueror consents to spare the lives of the vanquished on condition that they acknowledge themselves his slaves, he who makes such an assertion is ignorant that war gives no right to take away the life of an enemy who has laid down his arms and submitted. But let us not dispute the point; let the man who holds such principles of jurisprudence keep them for his own use and benefit; he will deserve to be a subject to such a law. But men of spirit, to whom life is nothing, less than nothing, unless sweetened with liberty, will always conceive themselves at war with that oppressor, though actual hostilities are suspended on their part through want of ability. We may, therefore, safely venture to add, that if the conquered country is to be really subject to the conqueror as to its lawful sovereign, he must rule it according to the ends for which civil government has been established."

Are not these principles of international law in strict conformity with our own Constitution? Surely there is no contradiction between them. The Constitution simply provides for enforcing these humane principles of general law when it is made the duty of the United States to protect each State against invasion and domestic violence, and to "guaranty to every State a republican form of government." Vattel says that if a war is waged only against the rulers of the conquered State, when the conqueror expel the rulers he must govern the State according to its laws or as the old rulers should have governed. But if the people willingly participated and aided their rulers, then the war may be against both; and in such case he says: "He," the conqueror, "may, according to the degree of indocility apparent in their disposition, govern them with a tighter rein, so as to curb and subdue their impetuous spirit," &c. "But this forced condition," continues the author, "ought to cease from the moment the danger is over. Then at length," he says, "everything is to be rendered conformable to the rules of a wise Government," &c.

Whatever may be the situation of the rebels, whether conquered public enemies or subdued traitors, all our severity toward them should be limited by our own proper defense and safety. If we intend they shall again be citizens of a common country we should not oppress. This same author says:

"What fidelity, what assistance can you expect from an oppressed people? Do you wish that your conquest may prove a real addition to your strength and be well affected to you? Treat it as a father, as a true sovereign."

Now, it appears to me that the question of reconstruction is a great political problem which must be dealt with by the political or law-making power of the nation, and the measures that may be adopted as necessary to restore the rebel States to their former relations, provided they are in harmony with the established principles of international law, such as Christian nations now adopt for the settlement of questions entering into and provoking wars between independent Powers, cannot and should not be interfered with by the judiciary department of the Government. Should the law-making power propose to sell prisoners into slavery it might be answered that our own Constitution, in strict harmony with international law, forbids such barbarity; that no such incident is now recognized as following a state of war.

Hence we may justify the enfranchisement of the blacks on two grounds: first, they were themselves a conquered, subject people, held by the enemy in slavery; and Vattel, speaking of such a people, says:

"If they have not freely aided her [the enemy nation] in the war against us, we certainly ought so to use our victory as not merely to give them a new master, but to break their chains. To deliver an oppressed people is a noble fruit of victory: it is a valuable gain to acquire a faithful friend."

And second, it may be justified on the ground that the future safety and security of the conqueror demand the extension of the suffrage. It may be that without such extension it would be inadvisable to return at once to those principles of popular government to which our people are accustomed and without which they will not long be satisfied. The proposed disfranchisement is much more difficult to justify. It may be said that the same necessity existing for one calls for the other. Reason assents readily to the proposition that he who performs the duties of citizen, regardless of color, should have a voice in making the laws that govern him and his fellow-citizens. But that same reason thus impressed revolts when a good man, convinced of error and repentant of sin, is still disfranchised on the plea of the public good. The difficulty is that a double argument is needed, one that contradicts and answers itself. The argument has to war against reason, and they who support it, having to urge it in one case and answer it in another, become gradually condemned in the eyes of consistent people, if not in their own consciences. If necessary for safety of the nation, it may be justified, but it cannot be justified beyond reasonable security.

At the last session of Congress a constitutional amendment was adopted and put before the States for ratification, and by many it has been assumed that on its being ratified by the seceded States they would be admitted to representation. The amendment was just in its terms and ought long since to have been accepted. The only provision to which exception could be taken was the one disfranchising those who had taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States from holding office. This in itself was no hardship, and had some limitation of time been put upon its continuance it might have been accepted. To deny the privilege of holding office to the leaders of the rebellion is but just. The hardship of the amendment, if there be any, consists in the fact that the voters are required to disfranchise the prominent men in whom they formerly placed trust. It required the followers, not tacitly to submit to the disfranchisement of their leaders, but by their votes to assist in the work. On my theory the conqueror possesses the power to prescribe his own terms of adjustment, subject only to the recognized principles of international law, and if disfranchisement were absolutely essential for national safety it could be resorted to.

In my opinion the error of our action, if any error existed at all, is to be found in the fact that we did not then prescribe the terms of reconstruction and proceed boldly to the work. To adopt the constitutional amendment requires some sort of humiliation at the hands of the southern voter. It requires that he shall turn upon his trusted leader and become instrumental in doing an act which some of them regard as dishonorable. They say they are willing to submit to it as the act of the conqueror, but they themselves will take no part in it. It is enough to say that either from this cause or some other the amendment has not found favor with the people of the seceded States. Some other States have also rejected it, and it may be as well now to look out for other terms of adjustment. Whether Congress would accept the southern States on the terms of the amendment is perhaps questionable; but so far as they are concerned they relieve us from settling the question. They take the responsibility and reject the terms of settlement for themselves.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I would like to ask my honorable friend a question. How did the South reject it?

Mr. HENDERSON. By their existing Legislatures.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Have they any Legislatures that are capable of rejecting it? I should like the Senator to answer the question.

Mr. HENDERSON. My friend is in the habit of asking this question, and prides himself that it cannot be answered. It is a favorite question, and no answer perhaps would be satisfactory to him.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I ask a practical question: have they got any Legislatures that they can reject a constitutional amendment?

Mr. HENDERSON. I did not say that they have. Whether they have legal Legislatures or not is not pertinent to the argument I was pursuing. Those bodies are certainly competent to give an expression of popular sentiment. No white person was disfranchised from voting, and I take it for granted the delegates or representatives express on this subject the wishes of those who elected them. The Senator no doubt insists that they are valid Legislatures, and he will see at once that from his own stand-point the position taken by me is correct. I simply said they have rejected the amendment. Whether the rejection be valid or invalid, entitled to much or little weight, does not in the least affect my argument.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The gentleman is avoiding the question. He says these States have rejected the constitutional amendment. How can they reject it if they have not any Legislatures? It was to the Legislatures that you submitted it. You did not submit it to anybody else. If they have no Legislatures they cannot reject it; and therefore to make war upon them because they have rejected it, when you assume that they have no Legislatures which had any power to reject it, is both illogical and unjust.

Mr. HENDERSON. On the point of the Senator's interruption I had said nothing, and must express surprise that he persists in pushing a question that is wholly impertinent with so much zeal and excitement. As to the validity or invalidity of the existing governments in the seceding States I had not spoken and did not intend to say a word. I care nothing for mere formality. If these governments promised us the security of which I have spoken, and we could rely upon them for the protection of person and property and for future attachment to the Union of the States, I for one would not hesitate to accept them. But the Senator will not rest, it seems, without having my opinion upon that subject. I therefore tell him it is clearly within the power of Congress to recognize them or reject them. I do not condemn the President for attempting to establish civil government. Bad as it may be, it is certainly better than no government at all, and in my judgment it is better even than pure military law. But in whatever light we view them they are without legal validity as State governments. Whatever the President may think of them, Congress is not bound to recognize them. If they were erected by virtue of the war power, before they can be binding on Congress or have any right to challenge recognition by that body, the law-making power, representing the sovereignty of the nation, must have prescribed the terms and conditions of their creation. If, on the other hand, they were erected by virtue of the Constitution, then they are equally invalid, for the United States alone, and not the President can guarantee republican forms of government to the States. I did not intend to enter on this branch of the subject at all, but the Senator insists on it, and I give him the benefit of my opinion. I hope he will not get excited again. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If my honorable friend supposes I am angry he does not know me. I am not at all angry. My friend has said what has been said all around me, what is said every day: the people of the South have rejected the constitutional amendment, and therefore we will march upon them and force them to adopt it at the point of the bayonet, and establish military power over them until they do adopt it. I simply put to my friend the question, how have they rejected it. He answered, by their Legislatures they have rejected it. I ask him the question, have they got Legislatures that are capable of rejecting it. In the first place he answers yes, and then he sees at once where that will lead him: if they have got Legislatures that can reject it, then they are States organized, with Legislatures with power to reject a constitutional amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, am I entitled to the floor or not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Missouri to yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. HENDERSON. I did not yield the last time. I yielded several times, but I cannot yield longer to have the same question repeated over and over again. If I have not answered, then I cannot answer, and that is all of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri is entitled to the floor, and must not be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not wish to be discourteous to the Senator, but it is my duty to say to him that he either misapprehends my position or mistakes his own. I said the constitutional amendment had not been adopted. I further said that Congress would not likely accept the southern States without its adoption. My impression was that many members of Congress would require even more than this. I thought, therefore, that this plan would prove a failure, and I was proceeding to discover what plan should now be adopted. Does the Senator controvert any of these positions? He cannot. But with a considerable degree of excitement he charges upon me the purpose to compel the South to adopt the constitutional amendment at the point of the bayonet. Upon what does the Senator found the charge? I spoke against the military bill and did not vote for it on its final passage, although modified, as I have already stated, by the Sherman amendment. I do not want military government. I ask the establishment by Congress of a civil government in each State. I want that government placed in loyal hands. I would let that government make and administer the laws. I am no more favorable to military rule than the honorable Senator himself.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I withdraw the charge as against the Senator.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin must not interrupt the Senator from Missouri without his consent.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I withdraw the charge as against the Senator. I meant to charge it on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin is out of order.

Mr. HENDERSON. I regret that I have been drawn aside from the course I intended to pursue. For myself, I distinctly avow that I am in favor of an early restoration of the southern States. Candor compels me to say that we are much further from the point of reunion than we were on the day Lee surrendered. Reconstruction has now become a political question. Until it ceases to be such there can be no reunion worth having. If the Republican party regards it as a political necessity to exclude the South, no reconstruction can take place until a political revolution is wrought in the North. When that comes reconstruction ceases to be necessary for the purposes of the Democratic party. For many years the slave furnished food for party consumption. Unfortunately, no party did much for him, though each party professed to be his best friend. If, unfortunately, the southern question should occupy this position restoration may be long delayed. Men will find themselves drifted along in party currents without power of resistance. Party is a relentless tyrant. It looks upon hesitancy to do its mandates as downright treason. He who falters in zeal is suspected, and he who flinches from action is promptly ostracised.

Should this southern question be removed from the forum of patriotism and placed among the planks of party platforms, it may prove not only sad for the South, but disastrous for the loyal States themselves.

If military power is absolutely necessary, I would not hesitate to use it, but I do not like to judge of that necessity. If disfranchisement is necessary, I would not hesitate to resort to that; but it will be exceedingly difficult for us to determine how far it should be carried. What would be advisable in this respect in South Carolina might not be proper in Louisiana. Hence I have always doubted the propriety of any inflexible or iron rule of disfranchisement. I have said that the constitutional amendment will not likely be indorsed. It is just as improbable, I fear, that the present measure will meet with such acceptance in the South as to insure speedy reconstruction under it. Therefore I would not be at all surprised, that, after a year or two lost in this experiment, we shall be forced at last to do what I would now gladly do.

For five years we waged continual war to overthrow the rebel governments of the seceded States. When the war closed it was our plain duty to establish local civil governments in each one of the States. Congress failed to provide for such governments. Every sensible man admits the superiority of civil over military government for the administration of justice. Indeed, peace corrupts the military, as war demoralizes and breaks down the civil authority. I might trust to military power for justice in time of war, when honor is then bright as the sword itself; but in peace honor too often cankers while the sword rusts.

This feeling, entertained by everybody, and no less perhaps by the President than by others, induced him to attempt the reorganization of civil governments. In doing so he exercised the undoubted rights of a conqueror. He prescribed the qualifications of voters, appointed governors, with powers executive and legislative. He dictated the organic laws of the States and controlled their ordinary legislation. When the laws failed to meet his approval he set them aside by military orders. This was complained of by our Democratic friends as earnestly as they now complain of the proposed action of Congress. It was no less complained of in the southern States. It was denounced as usurpation and tyranny. But notwithstanding all these precautions of the President, it is now insisted by Congress that the State governments are still in rebel hands. It is urged that they who controlled during the war still control.

Now, under circumstances like these, what is our plain duty? If I had my way I would appoint a loyal Governor, and a loyal council of ten or fifteen members to act as a Legislature in each State. Let them be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. I would give them the entire power, executive and legislative, in the respective States. Under certain prescribed limitations on the subject of suffrage, I would leave to them the entire subject of electoral qualifications. To them I would intrust the question of disfranchisement. In that way we could avoid this unprofitable and angry discussion in the two Houses of Congress. We would get rid of the existing governments, which are daily condemned, though suffered to exist. Indeed, one of the very amendments we are now considering to a certain extent recognizes these provisional governments, and contemplates their continued existence by fixing the qualifications of voters who are to participate in the election under them. Our party friends in the House and even here have had bickerings and quarrels over these perplexing questions, which probably should be committed to local governments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the Senator that allusions to the other House, especially of a disparaging character, are out of order.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was not aware that I spoke of the House of Representatives in a disparaging manner. I have a right to speak of the amendment that they sent here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator to speak of the House of Representatives as having been quarreling. The Chair considers such a remark as disparaging to the House and not in order.

Mr. HENDERSON. I of course must submit; but I certainly did not intend any reflection on the House of Representatives. I meant to say that there had been a contest between the two Houses and among members of the two Houses upon these points. I certainly have a right to express my opinion in regard to an amendment which the House has adopted and sent to us for action, and which is now pending.

Take, for instance, the State of Arkansas. From a third to a half of the people are and ever have been loyal to the Government. It is admitted that the present government there is in the hands of those who waged war against us. Instead of recognizing the further continuance of that government, which will carry the State further and further every day from restoration, would it not be better to assert the jurisdiction of Congress in the premises by setting up a loyal government and placing it in the hands of those who are friendly to the Union? As a military government is utterly incapable of administering justice, the proposed administration must be of a civil nature. The Governor and Legislature should be residents of the State, men of acknowledged patriotism and undoubted moral integrity and worth. Such men can be obtained in each seceded State. In these men the people would have confidence. Their administration of public affairs, founded upon justice and moderation, would soon silence all opposition and command the respect and approval of all well-disposed citizens. To them should be intrusted the entire machinery of State government. They should call conventions when necessary, order elections, fix the qualifications for office and regulate the elective franchise until the State could be admitted with a constitution settling these questions. They should be intrusted with full legislative power, with authority to appoint judicial and executive officers, to prescribe their duties, and to aid and assist them in the enforcement of the laws. Should it become necessary, the Legislative Council or the Governor should be authorized to call upon the United States for military protection against insurrection or domestic violence. Beyond this I would not extend the military arm in the seceded States.

When this is done, reconstruction is an accomplished fact. Until it is done, all is doubt and uncertainty. As a true friend of restoration, prompt, speedy, and effective—believing as I do that this is the only safe, certain, and constitutional mode of reconstruction, and convinced as I am that the best interests of every part of the nation imperatively demand the supremacy of the civil over the military power as a means of preserving peace and republican liberty, I can but regret that some plan of this sort has not been adopted.

I have not interfered with the subject simply because it could not be debated except upon propositions coming from the Reconstruction Committee. Any propositions offered stood committed to it without debate. But so thoroughly am I satisfied of the legality, expediency, and necessity of some such plan as this that I shall feel it my duty at the beginning of the next session to present it and urge it upon the consideration of Congress.

Reluctantly I come to the support of the pending measure. I may vote for it, but the vote will not carry my assent. It has the consent of my party friends, who think, perhaps, it is better than nothing. In that opinion I scarcely concur. In its military features it is worse than nothing. It asserts the supremacy of Congress, but fails to enforce its power. Reconstruction is left dependent first upon the caprices of the South, and second upon the interests or whims of parties now represented here. It is a subject too important to be trifled with. True patriotism should be equally deaf to the complaints of usurpation from the South, and the dictates of prejudice or party success from the North. If the South must be taxed, it must be represented. If represented at all, it must be through its loyal men. The national Union must be preserved, and no man opposed to its preservation must ask to exercise power as a means to carry out his opposition. The national faith is pledged to protect the liberties of the black man, and no schemes to violate that faith should be tolerated. The national honor is pledged to its defenders in the field and also to its honest creditors. This honor must not be tarnished. A great war has been closed in a great civil revolution, the responsibilities and duties of which must be accepted in good faith. The past must soon be forgotten, and men must prepare themselves for the future. That future can be made prosperous and happy. It needs only that prejudice be discarded. The spirit of vengeance must not be cherished. The promptings of avarice must be expelled and the true principles of republican government enforced, whatever may become of politicians or their schemes.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish simply to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we shall probably be obliged, from the pressure of business and the little time that is left to us, to sit here every night; and as there is, of course, no disposition to protract this debate merely for the sake of protracting it, and as every gentleman's mind is unquestionably made up, I cannot help suggesting to our friends that we be allowed to take the question now, in order that we may have some rest to prepare ourselves for the nights when we must sit late in order to finish the business.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I only wish to say to my honorable friend from Missouri [Mr. HENDERSON] that he has altogether mistaken me; that although I may have spoken in the heat of the moment very earnestly, I had not the slightest feeling toward him personally. I was simply speaking of the ideas that were passing between him and myself. Toward him, certainly, I have never entertained anything but the kindest feelings of personal regard.

Mr. DAVIS. The honorable Senator from Missouri just before he took his seat assumed the position that Louisiana and the other States of the South were still States, but without governments. If they are States, I ask the honorable Senator from whence he derives the power to Congress to make governments for them? I intended to put that question to the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. Howe,] who made a speech this afternoon before the recess. He stated that he had no more doubt of the power of Congress to pass the measure under consideration than he had of its power to levy taxes. If that honorable Senator were in his seat I would ask him whence he derives that power to Congress? I desire to have the Senator from Missouri answer the same question. While he was speaking the Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] handed him the Constitution, and directed him to some clauses in it. Now, I ask either of those gentlemen or any gentleman here to read to the Senate the clause of the Constitution that vests any power in Congress to pass this measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DOOLITTLE] to the amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Before the vote is taken I will state to the Senate that in consequence of the temporary illness of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRIMES] I have agreed to pair off with him, and shall therefore withhold my vote.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 8, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Hendricks, Johnson, Nesmith, Patterson, and Saulsbury—8.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fogg, Foster, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—33.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Dixon, Doolittle, Grimes, Guthrie, McDougall, Norton, Nye, Riddle, Sprague, and Van Winkle—11.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to offer an amendment, but if it is objected to on this side of the Chamber I shall not press it. It is to add to the sixth section of the House amendment the following words:

And all offices now held under the assumed authority of the rebel State governments shall be vacated within ninety days after the passage of this act; and it shall be the duty of the commanding officer of each military district to enforce this provision.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILSON. I do not desire to press my amendment against the wishes of our friends on this side; but I believe it is our duty to do what it proposes in some other form and in some other bill if not on this.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made by the House of Representatives.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays on that question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOOLITTLE, (when his name was called.) On this question I have paired off with the honorable Senator from Iowa, who if he were present would vote for concurrence, and I should vote against it.

Mr. JOHNSON, (when his name was called.) I desire to inquire of the Chair whether a vote of concurrence in the amendments of the House has the effect of passing the bill at once?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then I vote "yea."

The call of the roll having been completed, the result was announced—yeas 85, nays 7, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fogg, Foster, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—85.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Hendricks, Nesmith, Patterson, and Saulsbury—7.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Dixon, Doolittle, Grimes, Guthrie, McDougall, Norton, Nye, Riddle, and Sprague—10.

So the House amendments were concurred in.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SUMNER. I now move that we proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 164, relative to the Paris Exposition, in order that it may be the regular business for to-morrow at one o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will require a different motion to effect the Senator's purpose, as there is a bill now before the Senate which was laid aside informally for action on the measure just disposed of.

Mr. POLAND. I desire to move that the Senate hold an evening session to-morrow, commencing at half past seven o'clock p. m., to enable us to complete business from the Patent Committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let us settle that to-morrow.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at ten o'clock and forty-seven minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 28, 1867.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BORTON. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

Mr. LAFLIN, from the Committee on Printing, submitted the following resolution; on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That there be printed of the Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1866, one hundred and sixty-five thousand extra copies, namely, one hundred and forty-five thousand copies for the members of the House, and twenty thousand for the Commissioner of Agriculture.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. LAFLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PATENT OFFICE REPORT.

Mr. LAFLIN, from the same committee, also submitted the following resolution; on which he demanded the previous question:

BLANK FORMS.

Mr. LAFLIN, from the same committee, reported the following resolution, and called the previous question thereon; under the operation of which it was passed:

DEAR SIR: I have this day mailed to your address _____ If you have not received it please call at the post office for it.

Very respectfully,

The same to be printed on half-sheets of note paper weighing not over five pounds to the ream.

DOMINION OF CANADA.

Mr. MORRILL. I call for the regular order.

The House resumed the consideration of the regular order, being the motion of Mr. RAYMOND, pending at the adjournment of last evening, to suspend the rules for the purpose of introducing the following resolution calling for executive information:

Whereas the establishment in immediate proximity to the Territory of the United States of a powerful monarchy, under the protection and with the support of a foreign nation, cannot be regarded as otherwise than hostile to the peace and menacing to the safety of this Republic: Therefore,

Resolved, That the President of the United States be respectfully requested to inform this House whether any remonstrance has been made by this Government against the proposed consolidation of all the British North American Provinces into a single confederation under the imperial rule of an English prince, or whether the consent of the Government has been given in any way, directly or indirectly, to the consummation of this project.

Mr. RAYMOND. I have no desire to detain the House by pressing this motion under what appeared last night to be the evident disinclination of the House to suspend the rules. I therefore ask the consent of the House to introduce it merely for the purpose of having it referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, with leave to report at any time.

Mr. BANKS. I hope the House will consent to that.

No objection being made to the withdrawal of the motion to suspend the rules, it was accordingly withdrawn.

Several MEMBERS objected to allowing the committee to report at any time.

Mr. BANKS. I move to suspend the rules to allow the committee to report at any time.

The motion to suspend the rules was not agreed to.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KASSON, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1039) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1868, and asked for its consideration now.

The motion was agreed to; and the amendments of the Senate were read as follows:

First amendment:

Page 3, line four, insert:

For first installments of annuity, to be expended at the discretion of the President in such articles, goods, and provisions as he may from time to time determine, $10,000 of which may be expended in the purchase of stock animals, agricultural implements, in instructing in agricultural and mechanical pursuits, in employing mechanics, in educating their children, providing necessary and proper medicine and medical attendance, care for and support of their aged, infirm, and sick, for their helpless orphans, and in any other respect to promote their civilization, comfort, and improvement, and also for pay of head chief, $30,000.

The committee recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Second amendment:

Insert:

Arikarees, Gros Ventres, and Mandans: For first installment of annuity, to be expended in such goods, provisions and other articles as the President may from time to time determine, $5,000 of which may be expended in the purchase of stock animals, agricultural implements, in instructing in agricultural and mechanical pursuits, in employing mechanics, educating their children, providing medicine and medical attendance, care for and support of the aged, sick, and infirm, for the helpless orphans of said Indians, and in any other respect to promote their comfort and care; and also for pay of head chief, soldier chiefs, second chiefs, and Pierre Gavreau for his services to the Arikarees, $40,000.

The committee recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Third amendment:

Insert:

Cheyennes of the Upper Platte river: For this amount for the Cheyennes, near Fort Laramie, to be placed at the disposal of the Secretary of the Interior, to be expended by him or under his direction, in such manner as will tend to sustain peaceable relations with said Indians, $15,000.

The committee recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fourth amendment:

Page 10, strike out lines eight, nine, ten, and eleven, and insert:

For the eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, sixteenth, seventeenth, eighteenth, nineteenth, twentieth, and twenty-first of the forty-six installments to be paid the Chippewas of the Mississippi, as per third article treaty of August, 1847, $11,000.

The committee recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifth amendment:

Page 14, line eight, strike out after the word "tribe" the word "three" and insert "ten."

Mr. STEVENS. How will it then read?

The Clerk read the paragraph as amended by the Senate:

For insurance and transportation of annuity goods and provisions, and iron and steel for blacksmiths, for the Chippewas of Red Lake and Pembina tribe, $10,000.

Mr. KASSON. I do not understand that to be the amendment about which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] inquired; for the committee recommend non-concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I asked for an explanation of the amendment.

Mr. KASSON. That can be given very briefly. It is the fourth amendment, and the appropriation is for the Chippewas of the Mississippi. The appropriations stipulated for by treaty have been omitted for several years; and the omission arose from the fact that about 1852 Congress, owing to the destitute condition of the Indians, appropriated some five installments in advance. That being done they of course stopped including this appropriation in the annual estimates, and it continued to be left out until attention was called to it by complaints of the Indians which reached the Indian Office. I have examined the treaties and the laws on the subject and I find the statement to be correct, that we have failed to make these appropriations since the time when they should have been resumed, about the year 1855; and consequently that there are now about eleven thousand dollars due from the Government to the Indians upon these annuities.

The amendment was concurred in.

Sixth amendment:

Page 14, line thirteen, insert:

For this amount to pay interest on certain non-paying stock held in trust by the Secretary of the Treasury for the Chickasaw Indians for the two fiscal years ending June 30, 1865, per tenth article of the treaty of April 28, 1866, $119,859 98.

The committee recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. KASSON. The importance of this amendment requires that I should make a statement to the House. By the treaty approved April 28, 1866, the provisions of former treaties were restored and put into full force and effect from the 30th of June, 1866.

The United States, several years ago, under former administrations of the Government, with exceeding imprudence and impropriety, invested part of the funds of these Indians in certain State and corporation stocks, among which are stocks of the State of Illinois, of the State of Indiana, of the State of Maryland, and of the State of Tennessee; and also stocks of the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad Company, and of some other railroad company. Those stocks are all included in this estimate as non-paying stocks. I was not aware that the State of Indiana or the State of Illinois or of Maryland had repudiated their bonds in which the funds of the Indians were invested. That should be examined.

Further, the United States have had control of those southern railroads in which these investments were made; and certainly before they relinquished their control over those roads, which were held for a time by military conquest and authority, they should have taken means to protect the interests of the United States in the bonds of those railroads held for the Indians. Some branch of the Government seems to have neglected this entirely, probably from being ignorant of the facts of the case. I make this public statement now so that it may be observed in the Executive Departments that something remains to be done in respect to the security of the United States in this matter. I am satisfied that we are the indorsers of these bonds, because the investments were to be made in safe and good stocks, and were actually made in unsafe and bad stocks, either in part or in whole.

The committee recommend non-concurrence in order to see if some provision may not be made by which the United States will assume the debt and turn over these bonds to law officers of the Government to ascertain whether they are worth anything or not.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventh amendment:

After line eleven, page 19, insert:

Crows:
For first installment of annuity, to be expended for such useful goods, provisions and other articles as the President from time to time may determine; $3,000 of which installment may be expended for the purchase of stock, animals, agricultural improvements, in the employment of mechanics, in educating their children, and providing necessary medicines and medical attendance and care.

For the support of the aged, infirm, or sick, for the helpless orphans of said Indians, and in any other respect to promote their civilization, comfort, and improvement, and also for pay of head chief, $25,000.

The committee recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. KASSON. The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence, with the following amendment:

Add:

And be it further enacted, That the sum hereinbefore appropriated to the Miamis of Indiana, or which shall hereafter be appropriated to them, shall only be paid to persons included in the corrected list referred to in the amendment of the Senate to article four of the treaty of June 5, 1834, and to the increase of their families as therein described, and to such other persons, if any, who shall have been shown to have been added to said list by the consent of said Miami Indians of Indiana, obtained in council, according to the custom of the Miami tribe of Indians, and all laws in conflict with the provisions of this section are hereby repealed.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that the formal decision of the committee has not been taken on this subject. One member of the committee, the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. NIBLACK,] dissents from the views I entertain on the subject, and I therefore think it proper to submit the facts to the House.

Under the treaty with the Miamis of Indiana, and approved in the Senate of the United States, August 4, 1854, there was the following proviso:

"Provided, That no other persons other than those embraced in the corrected list agreed upon by the Miamis of Indiana, in the presence of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in June, 1854, comprising three hundred and two names as Miami Indians of Indiana, and the increase of the families of the persons embraced in said corrected list, shall be recipients of the payments, annuities, commutation moneys, and interest hereby stipulated to be paid to the Miami Indians of Indiana, unless other persons shall be added to said list by the consent of the said Miami Indians of Indiana, obtained in council according to the custom of the Miami tribe of Indians."

Under that clause of the treaty it was evidently improper, more than that it was illegal, in the United States to make any payments to any other Indians than those described in that clause. In 1858 the following clause, which I shall ask the Clerk to read, in violation of that treaty was inserted into the Indian appropriation bill of that year.

The Clerk read as follows:

"SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to such persons of Miami blood as have heretofore been excluded from the annuities of the tribe since the removal of the Miamis in 1846, and since the treaty of 1854, and whose names are not included in the supplement to said treaty, their proportion of the tribal annuities from which they have been excluded; and he is also authorized and directed to enroll such persons upon the pay list of said tribe, and cause their annuities to be paid to them in future."

It will thus be observed that Congress undertook by this clause to nullify the clause of the treaty to which I have referred. That treaty provides first for three hundred and two names, ascertained by a corrected list, for the increase of the families of the persons whose names were there contained, and for such other persons as should be added by the Miamis in council according to the custom of the tribe. Congress, after the treaty was ratified and an appropriation made under it, undertook to order that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs should add arbitrarily the names of certain additional persons to receive the moneys which by the treaty were expressly confined to the persons therein described. Now, the attention of the committee has been called to this, and the object of this amendment is to confine the distribution of this fund exclusively to the persons authorized by the treaty, and in order to avoid all difficulty in the matter I have embraced in the amendment the very language of the treaty itself; so that it amounts simply to instructing the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to carry out the terms of the treaty, and nothing else. That is all I wish to say unless some gentleman has a desire for information.

Mr. NIBLACK. Does the gentleman offer this as from the Committee on Appropriations, or on his own motion?

Mr. KASSON. I stated at the opening that the committee had not passed formally upon that clause.

Mr. NIBLACK. Mr. Speaker, this is a subject which I do not pretend to be entirely familiar with, so far as the original merits of the controversy are involved. It seems that some years ago, when the Miami Indians emigrated west, a portion of that tribe remained behind in the State of Indiana, and that a controversy afterward arose between those who emigrated and those who remained as to whether those remaining behind should be entitled to the benefits of treaties with and of annuities paid by the General Government. In 1854 this subject was referred by the Secretary of the Interior to the Attorney General for his decision. The Attorney General decided that in view of the treaties which existed between the United States and the tribes, and in view of the acts of Congress on the subject amendatory of some of the existing treaties, the portion of the tribe residing in Indiana were entitled to their share in the distribution of moneys due to the Miami Indians as a class. He advised, therefore, that the Secretary of the Interior should be governed by the acts of Congress on the subject, and should continue to distribute the money thus due to all the Miami Indians, including those remaining in Indiana. Very soon after that decision was made a new treaty was formed between the Government and these Miami Indians, and in that treaty it was stipulated, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] has just said, that none but those embraced in the regular list of the tribe should receive the money to be paid under it, unless additional names were added by the consent of the tribe in council, according to the custom of the tribe.

Afterward, however, in 1858, an act of Congress was passed, as appears by the portion of an act which the gentleman from Iowa has just had read at the desk, providing for the addition of certain names intended to embrace and embracing the Indians thus excluded by this treaty in 1854. Ever since 1858, therefore, this Indiana branch of the Miamis have been drawing their proportion of the annuities due to this tribe. Efforts however have been made, similar to that of the gentleman from Iowa, to modify the existing laws on the subject and to confine the distribution of moneys to those Indians embraced in the list under the treaty, thus excluding the names of Indians added. But so far that proposition has always failed, Congress refusing to disturb the arrangement made under the law.

Mr. KASSON. I would like to ask, in order to bring the debate to a focus, as the gentleman assents to the provision of the treaty, if he maintains that a law of Congress can abrogate a provision of a treaty.

Mr. NIBLACK. The Attorney General in May, 1854, expressly so decided. I will send to the Clerk's desk the book containing that decision in order to have a portion of it read.

Mr. KASSON. Do I understand this decision refers to the treaty in question?

Mr. NIBLACK. It refers to these existing treaties with the Miami Indians and covers the principle involved as to the power of Congress over Indian treaties.

Mr. KASSON. But the decision referred to is prior to the treaty.

Mr. NIBLACK. Yes, sir; but it covers the whole question so far as the principle is involved, as I have already said.

The Clerk read as follows:

"In the treaties of 1838 and 1840 the intent is manifested that those of the Miami Indians who did not remove to the new habitation assigned to the tribe should nevertheless receive their shares and proportions of the moneys and annuities engaged to the tribe. The resolutions of Congress of 1845 and 1850 did nothing more than carry out the intent and spirit of the treaties. These Indians are dependent wards and pupils under the guardianship and protection of the Government of the United States."—Cherokee Nation vs. State of Georgia, 1 Peters, 17.

"The resolutions of 1845 and 1850 have ordered a distribution as to the Indians residing in Indiana, per capita or by families, in the proportion of their numbers to those of the tribe residing west of the Mississippi river, to which non-residence the Miami tribe were consenting by the treaties of 1838 and 1840, and are consenting."

"The political action of Congress in directing how the annuities to the Miami Indians shall be distributed, ought, in my opinion, to continue to be obeyed by the Department."

Mr. NIBLACK. Mr. Speaker, that is a portion of the opinion of the Attorney General, under date of May 4, 1854, which decides that the Indians being wards, pupils of the Government, it is competent for Congress to determine generally what shall be done in relation to them, and to override treaties. That involves, however, a question of good faith which I do not now propose to discuss, because it is not germane to this view of the subject; but that we have unlimited power to legislate for the Indians, as the wards of the nation, that opinion decides.

But, sir, about the commencement of the present Congress, some time in January or February last, a resolution was offered in this House bringing up this same question. That resolution was referred by the Committee on Indian Affairs to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. He returned a long report, or rather addressed a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs in this House, embracing the history of this transaction. That, however, is too long, and I will not ask to have it read; but the Committee on Indian Affairs submitted a report based upon the information thus furnished; and that report, covering this same question, I ask to have read.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, made the following report:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the resolution directing an examination, and report by bill or otherwise, who constitute the tribe of Miami Indians of Indiana, respectfully ask leave to report:

That they have had the subject under consideration, and after a careful investigation of the facts and the law appertaining thereto, they are satisfied no further legislation is necessary on the subject. Your committee are of the opinion that the tribe of Miami Indians of Indiana consists of the persons named in the list or pay-roll, as added to by the Secretary of the Interior, under the act of June 12, 1858. In confirmation of this opinion the committee beg leave to append hereto the opinion of the Attorney General of the United States, given under date of October 26, 1865, and ask that the same may be printed as a part of this report:

ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE, October 26, 1865.

SIR: In the treaty betwixt the United States and the Miami Indians, (see United States Statutes-at-Large, volume ten, page 1099,) it is provided in the Senate amendments, "That no person other than those embraced in the corrected list agreed upon by the Miamis of Indiana, in the presence of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in June, 1854, comprising three hundred and two names, as Miami Indians of Indiana, shall be the recipients of payments, annuities, commutation moneys and interest, thereby stipulated to be paid to the Miami Indians of Indiana, unless other persons shall be added to said list by the consent of the said Miami Indians of Indiana, obtained in the council according to the custom of their tribe."

By the third section of the act of June 12, 1858, (section eleven, Statutes-at-Large, 332,) it is enacted, "That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to such persons of Miami blood as have been heretofore excluded from the annuities of the tribe since the removal of the Miamis in 1846 and since the treaty of 1854, and whose names are not included in the supplement to said treaty, their proportion of the tribal annuities from which they have been excluded; and he is also authorized and directed to enroll such persons upon the pay-list of said tribe, and cause their annuities to be paid to them in future."

In October of that year, pursuant to the authority so given, the Secretary of the Interior directed that the names of sixty-eight persons should be added to the roll of the Miami Indians of Indiana, and on the 12th of November, 1862, the Secretary added other names for participation in the then future payments to the Miami Indians of Indiana, and the persons whose names were so added in 1858 and 1862 have regularly received their annuities, but the tribe in council never did, according to their custom, consent to the addition of those names or to their being paid.

In the act of March 3, 1865, (see Sessions Acts, 1864 and 1865, page 546,) there are appropriated, "for interest on $221,257 80, uninvested, at five per cent., for Miami Indians of Indiana, per Senate's amendment of fourth article treaty June 5, 1864, $11,062 89."

In your letter of 12th of October you ask me whether, in view of the treaty and legislation aforesaid, any part of the amount appropriated by the act of March 3, 1865, can be paid to persons other than those embraced in the corrected list aforesaid, and to the increase of families embraced in said list?

In order to answer this question it must be considered, first, whether the act of 1865 repeals or modifies the act of 1858; and, secondly, if it does not repeal the act of 1858, whether payment must be made to the persons named in the corrected list mentioned in the treaty and representations only, or to them and the persons whose names have been added by the Secretary of the Interior under the authority given in the act of 1858.

As to the first branch, so far as the Miami Indians are concerned, the act of the 3d March, 1865, is one of appropriation only; such an act cannot, by construction or implication, be made to repeal or modify previous permanent legislation. The act of 1858 is not a simple act of appropriation, but expressly authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to add other names to the corrected list mentioned in the treaty, and commands that the persons so added shall be upon the pay list, and that their annuities be paid to them in the future. The act of 1865 does not, in terms, repeal the act of 1858, nor are the provisions of the two in such positive conflict that both cannot stand. When the act of 1865 was passed, Congress not only had the treaty before it, but the act of 1858 also, and the fact that the authority given under that act had been exercised. The reference in the act of 1865 to "the Senate's amendment to the fourth article treaty June 5, 1854," was to show the reason for and object of the appropriation.

An intention to repeal or modify the act of 1858, and reverse the action of the Government thereunder, cannot be inferred from such reference in such an act.

The act of 1865 does not repeal the act of 1858.

As to the second branch, a treaty is a contract betwixt Powers independent, and for the purposes of the treaty, equal under our form of Government. Treaties are made by the President and Senate. Some treaties require legislation by Congress before they can be executed. This is known to the contracting parties, as money cannot be drawn from the Treasury except under an act of appropriation. All treaties that cannot be performed without the payment of money must be executed after Congress shall act, and then in the mode, and only in the mode, prescribed by Congress. The Executive and the Judiciary are powerless to execute such treaties in any other way. It is by virtue of the act of Congress, and not of the treaty, that the money is obtained from the Treasury.

A treaty is a contract of the very highest character, and invested by the Constitution with the dignity of an act of Congress, but with a character no higher and a dignity no greater than an act of Congress made in pursuance of the Constitution. A right which is vested under either cannot be divested by an act of Congress, and yet it is in the power of Congress, by refusing the necessary appropriations, to defeat the performance of a treaty. Treaties made by the President and the Senate, that require legislation to execute them, are thus brought under the consideration and are subject to construction by Congress. When Congress has considered and construed them the several Departments are bound by such construction. The President and Senate, who made the treaty, join in the act which gave it construction.

Of the construction given to a treaty by Congress, no one has a right to complain except the Power with which the treaty was entered into, and such complaint must be made to the political power of the Government, and not to the organ charged by Congress with the execution of an act.

These views are sustained, as I think, by the cases of James Turner vs. The American Baptist Missionary Union, 5 McLean, 344, and Charles G. Taylor et al. vs. Marcus Morton, 2 Curtis, 454.

I am therefore of the opinion that payment must be made according to the list or pay-roll as added to by the Secretary of the Interior under the act of June 12, 1858.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JAMES SPEED,
Attorney General.

Hon. JAMES HARLAN, Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. NIBLACK. I will occupy the floor but a few moments longer. It seems that two Attorney Generals have sustained the validity of the action of Congress which recognizes that portion of the tribe living in Indiana as a part of the Miami tribe of Indians notwithstanding treaty stipulations or objections from any other source under any pretense whatever.

The Secretary of the Interior, acting under the authority of Congress, and in pursuance, as we are bound to presume, of authority conferred under existing treaty stipulations, referred to by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] added these sixty-eight other names to the list embraced in the treaty, and I think we ought to assume that that was correctly done. It is a matter which Congress cannot very well supervise, and therefore I think we ought not to attempt to regulate it by legislation without the concurrence of the Department of the Interior.

But, as has been shown by the report just read, this matter was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs at the last session of Congress, and after examination that committee recommended that legislation similar to that proposed by this amendment should not be adopted. Therefore the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] is in opposition to the recommendation of the Committee on Indian Affairs at the last session of Congress, as well as to the action of the Department of the Interior under the authority of Congress.

I now ask that the Clerk read a letter from the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the chairman of the Committee of Indian Affairs of the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE INDIAN AFFAIRS,
WASHINGTON, D. C., February 23, 1867.

Sir: Having heard that it has been proposed to have legislation in connection with the Miami Indians of Indiana, striking at certain individuals admitted upon the pay-rolls of those Indians, by virtue of an act of Congress passed in 1858, I have the honor to inform you that attempts have been repeatedly made, similar to the one now current, and that Congress has as often refused to disturb the status of the people in interest. I would, therefore, most respectfully suggest, that before any definite action shall be taken in the premises, that your honorable committee may refer the matter to this office for facts, &c.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
LEWIS V. BOGY, Commissioner.

Hon. JOHN HENDERSON, Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate.

Mr. NIBLACK. Now, it will be seen that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who is charged with the execution of treaties and the payment of these annuities, asks that we will not pass the legislation proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] without first referring this matter to his office for examination, and report by him upon the facts of the case. I therefore think we ought not, in opposition to the recommendations I have referred to, attempt to adopt the section proposed by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. KASSON. A very few words, if the House will observe the principal facts in the case, will settle this whole question. The first opinion of the Attorney General which has been read relates to an entirely different subject. It does not relate at all to this treaty, but was published prior to the making of the treaty. The treaty was made for the express purpose, among other things, of avoiding a difficulty that was raised by that very opinion of the Attorney General. Under the old provisions of the treaty the Miami tribe of Indians were entitled to annuities, and consequently Congress had a perfect right to say who constituted the tribe. Under the new treaty, the treaty itself declared who constituted the tribe of Miami within the meaning of this clause. Consequently there is nothing left to the discretion of Congress or the discretion of the Attorney General. That settles the first point.

The second point is that the opinion of the second Attorney General is upon the right of the executive department to act under the control of the legislative department in expending the appropriations made by Congress. He says rightfully in that opinion that it is a question for the political department to determine what conditions and charges shall accompany the amounts appropriated; he is perfectly right in that, and he says distinctly that if Congress had not left it in doubt about the repeal of this clause of 1858 there would be no difficulty about it at all. And that is precisely what is now proposed to be done: to insert a section that shall restore the treaty and repeal the law that abrogated the treaty or attempted to abrogate it.

The whole question is therefore in a nutshell; it is whether this House is willing to declare that this treaty shall be carried into effect in its express terms or whether it shall continue to declare that sixty-eight persons who are not included at all in the treaty shall continue to draw annuities from which they are excluded by the terms of the treaty itself. I consider it almost a legislative outrage; almost as much so as if Congress were to declare that a portion of the debt owing to the Territory of Nebraska, and admitted to be owing to that Territory, should be turned away and arbitrarily appropriated to the State of Iowa.

That is the whole question involved in this case, and I call the attention of the House to the clause now proposed to be added to this bill as an additional section. It says that the money shall be paid according to that treaty, and I have incorporated in the amendment the very language of the treaty itself; and it repeals the clause which diverted the money from the Indians to whom the treaty gave it.

Mr. SPALDING. I desire to ask my colleague on the committee whether there is not a question of fact involved here, and that is: whether any additional Indians are to be embraced under the stipulation of the treaty by the order of the Indians themselves in council.

Mr. KASSON. I will say to my colleague on the committee that that question of fact is avoided entirely in the amendment, which provides that none shall be paid except the three hundred and two embraced in the corrected list and the increase of their families, as provided by that clause of the treaty, and such other persons as shall be shown to have been added by order of the Miami in council according to the custom of their tribe. No possible exception can be taken to the amendment now proposed, as it leaves the matter stand directly upon the treaty and steers clear of all questions of fact. Any Indian whose name may be shown to have been added according to the treaty by the Miami in council will come in under this amendment as fully as he could by any provision of law.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I am unwilling to detain the House when there is so much pressing business, I call for the previous question.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield to me five minutes?

Mr. KASSON. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, there is so little room for argument in this case—the simple statement of the proposition must present the matter so clearly—that I need not occupy the attention of the House for any great length of time.

As has been so clearly stated by the gentleman from Iowa, a treaty was made with the Miami tribe of Indians by the terms of which the benefit of certain annuities were set apart for the Miami Indians of Indiana designated in a certain list. Those were the terms of the treaty: that the persons embraced in a certain list of names should be treated as the Miami Indians of Indiana, entitled to the benefit of these annuities.

Mr. SPALDING. And such others as they might receive.

Mr. HILL. Not such others as they might receive, but such others as might be added to the list with the consent of that tribe in council.

Mr. SPALDING. That is it.

Mr. HILL. Now, I will state to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] that there never has been another name added to that list by the consent of the tribe in council. The simple question now is whether the terms and stipulations of a solemn treaty entered into by us with these poor Indians shall be carried out with the same good faith which would be observed with regard to a treaty entered into with one of the most powerful nations of the earth. I undertake to say that if we should undertake to pursue with Great Britain or France a similar course to that which has been pursued by Congress since 1858 in reference to these Indians, we should call down upon us the guns of those nations if they retained a particle of self-respect or national pride. And there would be justice in such a resort on their part.

We have stipulated by solemn treaty that certain persons, and none others unless the tribe shall consent to it, shall receive the benefit of these annuities; yet in violation of that treaty—made not by Congress, but by a power recognized under the Constitution as separate and distinct from Congress, the treaty-making power—we by legislation, without the consent of the other party to the treaty, in direct violation of the contract, in gross violation of ordinary good faith, add the names of persons not entitled and give them portions of these annuities, the number of persons already thus added amounting to one hundred and five.

Now, sir, all I ask is that the same good faith which we observe with other nations, the same good faith that we would demand at the hands of other nations, shall be observed with regard to these poor children of the forest. I have no desire to appeal to sympathy. I base this matter on the requirements of the merest justice.

Mr. WINDOM. Will the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HILL] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. WINDOM. The report which has been brought to the attention of the House by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. NIBLACK] was made in March, 1866, by the Committee on Indian Affairs of this House. In that report the committee refer simply to the opinion of the Attorney General, basing their opinion, as

I understand, upon nothing else than that. The resolution referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs was somewhat peculiar. It simply referred to that committee to inquire and report who constituted the Miamis of Indiana. Under the peculiar wording of the resolution the committee felt themselves at liberty to dismiss the subject by giving the opinion of the Attorney General on that point. He says who constitute that tribe, and we report his opinion as that of the highest law officer of the Government.

He says also in that opinion that complaint made to the political powers of the Government and not the Executive may change the question. Complaint is now made to the political power of the Government.

I wish to add one word further. The law authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to add to the list of three hundred and two names of the Miamis of Indiana is a clear violation of the treaty. I do not believe a fair construction of the act of 1858 permits such a thing.

Mr. HILL. The practice has been to include them under that construction given to the law by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. WINDOM. The act of 1854 directs him to enroll no such persons upon the list of said tribe. I understand there is a distinction between the tribe of Miamis of Indiana and the Miamis themselves. The Miamis emigrated west of the Mississippi river. The three hundred and two who remained are not a tribe, but are dealt with as individuals. I do not believe the Secretary of the Interior has the right under that treaty to say any one shall receive payment except these three hundred and two. I hope the amendment will pass.

Mr. HILL. I wish to say in regard to the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that I am at a loss to understand why he should, without referring to a single fact, without giving us the benefit of a single idea on this subject, assume to control the legislation of Congress by interposing his letter as to how this matter ought to be regulated. If the secrets of that office could be drawn out we might know why this interference has been made.

Mr. DEFREES. Mr. Speaker, this is a question which seems to have been before the House on several occasions previous to this time. It appears in 1854, after the Miami tribe of Indians had migrated to the West, some individuals claiming to be a portion of the Miami tribe formed a treaty with the United States, in which they have excluded from the benefit of the payment every one not specified in a certain list indicated. Moreover, that treaty made provision in the settlement of the names of these pretending to be Miamis the list should be revised in connection with the Secretary of the Interior.

It seems the treaty made by these three hundred and two individuals did great injustice to a portion of the Miami tribe. It did not include all those who claimed to be Miamis.

Those who were excluded came to Congress, and the matter was investigated before the proper committee, and finally a law was passed by which the Secretary of the Interior was authorized and directed to revise this list and place upon it such as may prove themselves distinctly to belong to that tribe. In 1862 others claiming to be Miamis presented their claims; after an investigation Congress came to the conclusion these persons were wrongfully excluded and provision was made by which they should be included. Ever since the passage of that law these Indians have been paid their portion.

It seems strange at this late hour, after the Indian appropriation bill had passed this House and gone to the other, this question should be raised. This matter being of a judicial character I think before we act it ought to be investigated by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. HILL. Is it not true that the terms of the treaty provide only for certain persons?

Mr. DEFREES. It has been generally claimed Congress had the right to revise these treaties.

Mr. HILL. Can Congress nullify and abrogate a treaty?

Mr. DEFREES. I say that Congress has generally assumed to interpret these Indian treaties.

Mr. GRINNELL. I wish to say there is a similar instance in Iowa of the exclusion of Indians as peaceable and respectable as any in the country. I believe in a liberal interpretation, and in doing justice to these men who have not been parties to fraudulent treaties.

Mr. HILL. If the gentleman will permit me I will call his attention to the fact suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota, that the act of Congress under which these Indians have been drawing annuities only provided that other parties might be enrolled with the tribe, and that not a single name be added to the list in Indiana.

Mr. DEFREES. I only say this, that I do not think that certain individuals have any right to get together and claim to be the tribe because the principle tribe is west of the Mississippi. But there are persons who are left east of the Mississippi, who are claiming to be the tribe, and consequently they come in and cut off all others who can show themselves and have shown themselves to belong to that tribe. Why, sir, there is evidence sufficient to show to this House conclusively, if the opportunity was given, that these men who are claiming to have been reinstated by the act of 1858 and 1862 belong to the Miami tribe of Indians.

Mr. HILL. I beg pardon for interrupting the gentleman once more. I ask if that does not appeal to the treaty-making power to correct the treaty and define who the tribe are?

Mr. DEFREES. I think not. Now, I think great injustice would be done to these Indians at this time by cutting off the annuity. They are a class of people living in my district. Some of them are worthy men, and some few widows with families are dependent upon this annuity as a matter of support. I hope the House will not pass the amendment.

Mr. KASSON. The only point which I have heard made in addition to those already spoken of, is the assertion that these destitute Indians, as they are called, were not parties to the treaty. I wish to correct that impression. The treaty was made with the Miamis generally. A portion of the tribe deciding to remain in Indiana while the rest of the tribe went West, agreed to receive a certain portion of the annuities; and those going West agreed to give a certain portion to those remaining. Consequently they became divided. The whole tribe of Miamis agreed to it as represented in council.

Now, in the making of a treaty it is no objection to it to say that certain individuals did not agree to it. There are certain individuals in the United States who never agreed to a treaty made with France, but they are nevertheless bound by it as American citizens. So these Indians were bound by it as parties to the treaty. There was but one tribe to make the treaty; that tribe made it, and we are bound by it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to ask whether there is evidence showing that persons have been added who are not really persons belonging to the Miami tribe?

Mr. KASSON. It is impossible for us to pass upon a question of fact of that kind. The charges are made that many of them have not enough Indian blood in them to show the color.

Mr. HILL. In 1858 and 1859 this matter was thoroughly investigated in this House, and there is nearly a page in the Congressional Globe of reliable testimony showing that these parties are not Miamis.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That is my understanding. In the investigation that was made, the conclusion was arrived at that these persons were not of Miami blood, and therefore were not to be entitled to be put upon this list.

Mr. HILL. That conclusion was arrived at.

Mr. KASSON. I wish say, as was very properly suggested by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, that if they do belong to that tribe, they belong to the tribe that emigrated, and must come on to the main tribe for their annuities; because those who did not emigrate are expressly provided for by this bill, and they cannot detach themselves from the main tribe, even if they belong to it, and attach themselves to the minority, thus getting the benefit of the annuity going to the minority.

Mr. DEFREES. I would inquire if the descendants of Godfrey who remained east of the Mississippi are not provided for in the treaty?

Mr. KASSON. If Godfrey's name is on the list of three hundred and two then his descendants are provided for; if it is not on the corrected list they cannot be provided for under the treaty unless they have been added by the Miamis in council. Now, this treaty provides that the money shall go, and the amendment I propose says it shall go according to the treaty; and no one can conscientiously vote against it who is not willing that the money shall be otherwise appropriated than the terms of the treaty prescribe.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. DEFREES. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The SPEAKER. That will carry the bill with it.

The motion was disagreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment to the amendment of the Senate, and it was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was then agreed to.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the various votes taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I now move a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to; and Messrs. KASSON, WINDOM, and NIBLACK were appointed conferees on the part of the House.

SUPREME COURT.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 534, to provide for the allotment of the members of the Supreme Court among the circuits, and for the appointment of marshals for the Supreme Court and for the District of Columbia.

Mr. BOYER. I object.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wish to say to the gentleman that it is necessary to have this allotment made. The court will adjourn to-day or to-morrow, and it is necessary to have this passed now.

Mr. BOYER. I withdraw my objection.

The bill was accordingly taken up, and read a first and second time. It is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Chief Justice of the United States and the associate justices of the Supreme Court shall be allotted among the circuits now existing by order of the court; and whenever a new allotment shall be required or found expedient by reason of alteration of one or more circuits, or of the new appointment of a Chief Justice or associate justice, or otherwise, it shall be the duty of the court to make the same; and if a new allotment shall become necessary at any other time than during the term, such allotment shall be made by the Chief Justice, and shall be binding until the next term, and until a new allotment by the court.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Supreme Court may appoint a marshal for said court, whose compensation shall be $3,500 per annum; and said marshal shall take charge of all property of the United States used by said court or its members, and shall serve and execute all process and orders issuing out of said court, or made by the Chief Justice or an associate justice, in pursuance of law; and shall pay into the Treasury of the United States all fees and compensation allowed by law, and render a true account thereof, at the close of each term, to the Secretary of the Interior; and the said marshal, with the approval of the Chief Justice, may appoint assistants and messengers in place of the crier and messengers now employed, with such compensation as is or may be allowed to officers of the House of Representatives of similar grade; and all acts and parts of acts now in force relating to the marshal of the District of Columbia shall apply to the said marshal of the Supreme Court, except so far as in this act otherwise provided.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move on behalf of the committee to amend by adding the following as an additional section:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the supreme court of the District of Columbia is hereby authorized to appoint a marshal of the United States for the District of Columbia, whose powers and duties shall be the same as the powers and duties of the marshal of the United States for the District of Columbia under existing laws; and the said marshal so appointed shall receive the same compensation for his services as the marshal now receives for like services; and from and after such appointment the office of the said marshal now held under appointment by the President shall cease and determine; and the office of warden of the jail in said district is hereby abolished, and the duties of such office shall be imposed upon the marshal of said district.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I call the previous question on the bill and amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time, and it was accordingly read the third time.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, the title of the bill was amended by adding thereto the words "and for other purposes."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DELILAH HILL.

Mr. HOTCHKISS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill for the relief of Delilah Hill; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. LE BLOND. I ask for about two minutes to make a personal explanation. I will promise not to take over two or three minutes.

No objection was made.

Mr. LE BLOND. I find in the Washington Chronicle of this morning the following telegram:

"COLUMBUS, February 26.

"In the House to-day Boynton's resolution to strike out the word 'white' from the constitution was lost, after a lengthy debate, by a vote of 26 yeas to 50 nays."

I also find that the State of New York has also rejected the constitutional amendment by a vote of 33 to 40.

All I wish to say in way of personal explanation is that I congratulate my colleagues on this side of the House that they have been sustained by the two great States of Ohio and New York in their opposition to universal suffrage.

Mr. WARD, of New York. I rise to a question of order: the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] was granted leave to make a personal explanation.

Mr. LE BLOND. I have done.

The SPEAKER. As the point of order has been raised, although the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] has taken his seat, the Chair will rule upon the point of order. When the House grants unanimous consent to any member to make a personal explanation, the rulings of all Speakers, whose decisions the Chair has examined, is that the Chair cannot interrupt the member while he keeps within parliamentary rules and practices.

Mr. GARFIELD subsequently said: As my colleague [Mr. LE BLOND] has been allowed an opportunity to make a personal explanation, in which he has shown what is being done in reference to striking out the word "white" from the constitution of Ohio, I desire to have read a paper which I send to the Clerk's desk, which will show what is being done in another State.

No objection was made.

The Clerk read as follows:

"PROCLAMATION.—Whereas the laws of the State of Mississippi require that every freedman, free negro, and mulatto shall have a lawful home, and shall have written evidence thereof, by obtaining a license from the mayor, if living in any incorporated city, town, or village, and a contract in writing with some responsible person for a year; and whereas said laws prohibit freedmen, free negroes, and mulattoes from renting or leasing lands or tenements except in towns or cities, and then under the control of said corporations; and whereas the corporate authorities of Yazoo city have passed no ordinance regulating said renting or leasing, but have left the same subject to State law: now, therefore, all freedmen, free negroes, and mulattoes remaining in Yazoo city longer than the 7th of January, 1867, instant, unless under contract for the year, with some reliable and responsible person, will be considered and treated as vagrants, except mechanics, artisans, and artificers and wagoners and draymen, who have teams of their own and who give them their personal attention.

"D. JONES, Mayor of Yazoo City.
"YAZOO CITY, January 2, 1867."

Mr. GARFIELD. I have asked that this paper be read, in order that my colleague may derive additional comfort from what is being done elsewhere.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS, from the committee of conference on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 896) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree upon a report.

THADDEUS STEVENS,
ROSCOE CONKLING,
WILLIAM E. NIBLACK,
Managers on the part of the House.
WILLIAM P. FESSENDEN,
GEORGE H. WILLIAMS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report was received, and the committee accordingly discharged.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the House ask the appointment of another committee.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as the conferees on the part of the House, Mr. FARNSWORTH, Mr. WOODBRIDGE, and Mr. ELDRIDGE.

JOHN H. OSLER.

Mr. BINGHAM, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Military Affairs a bill of the House No. 1225, for the relief of Lieutenant John H. Osler, of Guernsey county, Ohio, with a recommendation that the same do pass.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was read at length. It provides that there be paid to John H. Osler, late first lieutenant of the twenty-sixth regiment Ohio volunteer infantry, the pay of a first lieutenant of infantry from the 9th of December, 1864, to the 27th of March, 1865, together with the three months' pay; and also the pay of a first lieutenant of infantry from the 31st of July to the 4th of October, 1865.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POLYGAMY IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. COOK, by unanimous consent, made a report from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom had been referred a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, praying for the repeal of an act to prevent and punish polygamy, accompanied by the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this House that the law of the United States entitled "An act to prevent and punish polygamy in the United States" ought not to be repealed, but that it should be fully enforced; and that if the judges of the courts refuse or neglect to enforce same, as alleged in the memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, they should be removed from office; and that if for reasons beyond the control of said judges said law is not enforced in any Territory it becomes the duty of the President of the United States to take care that it be faithfully executed.

Mr. COOK. I ask that the report be printed, and that the House proceed at this time to consider the resolution accompanying the report.

Mr. ROSS. I object to that. I think that the question of the tariff is of more importance now than the question of polygamy in the Territories.

Mr. COOK. I move that the report be printed, and that the resolution be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COOK moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. No. 896) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, asked a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate, Messrs. SHERMAN, POLAND, and BUCKALEW.

LEGISLATION FOR CALIFORNIA.

Mr. BIDWELL. I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BIDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a statement in the interest of those whom I in part represent. I have attended early and late upon the Committee on Public Lands, who have charge of bills in which the State of California has a great interest, and the committee have been unable to report. I now rise for the purpose of making an appeal to the House to give that committee this evening or so soon as the tariff bill may have been disposed of one hour in which to make reports. Whatever action this House may take with reference to these bills which the Committee on Public Lands may report must of course to be effectual receive the concurrence of the Senate; and unless action be taken here very soon it will be impossible to obtain action in the Senate during this Congress. The State of California will not be represented at the opening of the Fortieth Congress. The elections in our State will not be held until next September, and it will be impossible for members from that State to present themselves here before next December. I ask that the Committee on Public Lands be allowed one hour in which to present reports.

The SPEAKER. At what time?

Mr. BIDWELL. This evening, or as soon as the tariff bill may be disposed of. I leave it to the House.

Mr. STEVENS. I have no objection to the committee having this opportunity after the appropriation bills are passed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that will be at a late period of the session.

Mr. WARD, of New York. I will not object after the tariff bill is passed.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Do I understand the gentleman from California to be making some proposition about the disposition of the tariff bill? If so I only desire to say that if he wishes to lay the bill on the table we shall be very glad to have it there.

Mr. BIDWELL. My object is not to defeat any bill which may concern the public interests.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from California will propose any specific time, the Chair will put the question to the House.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to inquire whether the bill to which the gentleman from California particularly refers does not relate exclusively to granting lands in California for railroad purposes? I do not think the lands there will spoil before another session of Congress.

Mr. BIDWELL. I will ask the House to assign to-morrow evening at seven o'clock for the purpose I have indicated.

Mr. BROOMALL. I shall object unless the tariff bill be disposed of at that time.

Mr. SPALDING. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BIDWELL. I move to suspend the rules to assign one hour, commencing at half past seven o'clock to-morrow evening, for reports from the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. SPALDING. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HIGBY. I ask consent to move that the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 865) for the construction of a railroad from Stockton to Copperopolis, that the bill be printed, and laid on the table. In connection with this motion I will state that if a convenient opportunity offers I shall ask the House to pass the bill before this session expires.

Mr. CONKLING and others objected.

Mr. HIGBY. I pledge myself that I will not ask any action on the bill until it has been printed, so that members may see what it is.

Mr. CONKLING. I think the bill had better wait and come up in the regular way.

ORDER OF BUSINESS:

The SPEAKER announced as the business in order during the morning hour the presentation of reports from committees, beginning with the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

HENRY E. PECK.

Mr. BANKS, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back adversely a joint resolution (H. R. No. 277) for the relief of Henry E. Peck, minister-resident and consul-general in Hayti; which was laid on the table.

JEAN AND ELIZA CHAUTEUPS.

Mr. BANKS, from the same committee, reported back the memorial and accompanying papers of Jean and Eliza Chauteups; and moved that they be referred for consideration to the State Department.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BANKS moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. BANKS, from the same committee, also submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President be, and is hereby, requested, if not inconsistent with the public service, to transmit to the House of Representatives the diplomatic correspondence of the Department of State not hitherto communicated up to the opening of the second session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress.

Mr. BANKS. Since the commencement of the war the President has communicated at the opening of every session of Congress the diplomatic correspondence up to that date. This was omitted at the commencement of this session, and this resolution only calls for that correspondence.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. BANKS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. ANDREW CUNNINGHAM.

Mr. BANKS, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of the widow of Andrew Cunningham; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that the widow of Andrew Cunningham, of Montreal, Canada, shall be paid the sum of $2,500, as compensation for the loss sustained by her in the death of her husband, illegally enlisted in the Army of the United States, and killed in battle at Po river, May 10, 1864.

It appears by the report that Andrew Cunningham came from Montreal to New York in January, 1864, and after remaining four days found he had been enlisted a private in company G, thirty-ninth New York volunteers. He alleged he had been invited by runners to a bar-room and the drink stupefied him, and that he knew nothing until he found himself enlisted in the Army of the United States. He was a trader in Montreal, thirty-five years of age, and left a widow and a mother who were dependent upon him. He alleged that he received no bounty but seventy-five dollars, which the officers insisted upon his taking. The case was brought to the attention of the Secretary of War, who said Cunningham had been improperly mustered into the service, and the officer so mustering him had been dismissed the service for similar acts. By special order Cunningham was ordered to be discharged, but in the meantime he was killed in battle.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I want to move to refer this to the Committee of Claims or the Committee on Invalid Pensions. There are a great many such cases. I think we ought to have such uniform legislation instead of having these stray bills coming from different committees.

Mr. BANKS. If it were a case like that presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania I would not object; but it is one which stands alone. It is submitted by the Secretary of State, and is a question between our Government and another Government, and therefore it does not come under the head of ordinary claims.

It is a matter of public interest now, for this Government is in negotiation with other Governments, and with several successfully, for the relief of American citizens who were enlisted while happening to be abroad and who were compelled to serve in the armies of other nations. When we are pressing this, not only through the executive department but by legislation, it is proper for us to consider what we will do in a case which presents a clear case of wrong in the action of our Government.

Cunningham, to whom reference is made, came to New York for the transaction of business, and was enlisted in the Army of the United States. There is no question at all, as appears by the letter of the Secretary of War, he was improperly as well as illegally enlisted, and the officer mustering him was dismissed the service. The War Department ordered his discharge, but the necessary investigation required delay, and his discharge was not issued till the 30th of May, but he was killed at Po river on the 10th. It does not appear he was not faithfully doing his duty, and inasmuch as this is a case in which the Government cannot justify itself some reparation ought to be made.

I would say that the Committee on Foreign Affairs has carefully considered this question in all its bearings, and after very mature deliberation they were of the unanimous opinion that this bill ought to pass. There is upon the records of the Government or on file in the State Department no cases which will come within the line of precedent if this bill shall become a law, and I hope therefore it will pass.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I hope the gentleman will allow me to move to refer the bill to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. BANKS. I cannot yield for that purpose.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I suppose the reason why there are no similar applications on file in the State Department is that no one else ever thought of applying to the Secretary of State for a pension. There are many similar cases all along the line where foreigners coming from Canada have been wrongly enlisted in the United States Army.

Mr. BANKS. The gentleman misunderstands the bill. This is not a claim for pension, pay, or for anything that comes under the laws of the United States. All such matters are settled by the proper Departments. This is a claim for losses made by a foreign Government upon our Government, and therefore the reference proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not appropriate and I cannot yield for his motion.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I would inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts if this man or his family has not received all the bounties that were allowed to persons enlisting in our service, and also if the widow of this man is not now receiving a pension from the Government?

Mr. BANKS. The report states that this man received seventy-five dollars of bounty, and his widow receives a pension of eight dollars a month.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I would ask the gentleman if the widow of this man is not now receiving the same pension which she would have received if she and her husband had been citizens of the United States?

Mr. BANKS. If there had been no wrong committed by the Government of the United States this widow would stand exactly as the widows of other soldiers stand.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. She now gets the same pension as the widows of United States citizens get.

Mr. BANKS. She receives a pension of eight dollars a month.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I move to lay the bill upon the table. I do not see why a Canadian lady should receive more than an American lady receives under similar circumstances.

The question was put; and the House refused to lay the bill on the table—ayes 40, noes 58.

Mr. BANKS. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BANKS. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed—yeas 56, nays 42.

Mr. BANKS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NOTT AND COMPANY.

Mr. RAYMOND, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of Nott & Co.; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to China or the chief diplomatic agent of the United States in China to examine the claim of Nott & Co., American merchants doing business in China, against the Chinese Government, for a loss of coin sustained by them in 1857 by the capture and robbery of a vessel called the Neva, and also directs that if, in his opinion, the claim ought to be paid, it shall be paid with the same rate of interest allowed on other claims from the time of the loss, out of any funds received from the Chinese Government under the treaty of 1858 for the payment of losses sustained by American citizens, and that the amount shall be paid to Nott & Co., or to the surviving copartner or copartners, or to any person duly authorized to be their agent or attorney. The bill further provides that the decision of the American minister in China as to the right of the claimants to be paid, as to the amount to be paid, and as to the parties entitled to receive the same shall be final and conclusive.

Mr. WRIGHT. I object to the consideration of the bill unless it is in order.

Mr. RAYMOND. I will state that the bill contains no appropriation. The claim is to be paid out of a fund provided by the Chinese Government for the payment of such losses.

I will state the circumstances under which this claim arises and that led the committee to report this bill. The house of Nott & Co. is an American house trading in China. In the year 1857, during the war between China and England, they shipped at Hong Kong one hundred and twenty thousand Mexican dollars in coin on board an English vessel bound for the town of Fou Chow. The vessel was under the command of European officers. She left Hong Kong and anchored five miles below that city for the evening, and next day she got under way; a boat then came alongside containing eight Chinamen, who asked to be taken as passengers. There were no suspicious indications about them, and they were received by the captain as passengers, bringing on board the ordinary amount of luggage. At night, when the captain and mate had retired below, and there were but three men left on deck, these eight passengers rose, secured the crew under the hatches, and took command of the vessel. The captain, on coming up the hatchway, was killed. The mate, who was armed with a double-barreled rifle, succeeded in getting into the rigging. The next morning they came to anchor and proceeded to take the coin on shore. While they were engaged in doing that the mate came down from the rigging, released the crew, drove the Chinamen overboard, and regained possession of the vessel. But it was found that $20,000 of the coin had been lost, and of that $20,000 $16,000 belonged to the American firm of Nott & Co.

Now, what makes the Chinese Government responsible for the loss is the fact that by treaty with the United States they had agreed that whenever a loss was sustained by piracy and the robbery of an American vessel it should be the duty of the Chinese officers at the port nearest to the point where the loss occurred to take measures to capture the robbers and recover the stolen property. The American consul at the nearest port made application to the Chinese authorities for that purpose, but the Chinese authorities not only refused to order a pursuit of the robbers, but refused to hold any intercourse with the American consul, inasmuch as he was a foreigner and they were at war with a foreign nation, (England,) and they treated all foreigners alike. That fact establishes a claim on the part of Nott & Co. on the Chinese Government, because by the treaty or convention of 1858 the Chinese Government assumed the payment of such losses sustained by American citizens. Instead of investigating these claims themselves, they handed over $175,000 to our Government in full settlement of all these claims, and the American Government undertook the adjustment of each particular claim as it might arise. A commission was appointed for that purpose, composed of two American citizens, and this claim was presented to and investigated by them, but for some reason which has not been stated it was rejected. It was provided by the same convention that an appeal should be allowed from the decision of the commission within a certain length of time. It happened that there was no representative of this American firm in China during the time within which such an appeal could be taken.

But when the representative arrived there the American minister had gone to a distant part of China, and did not return until long after the time provided by the commission for an appeal.

The representatives of this firm now ask that they may be allowed to make the same appeal which they would have made if their representative had been there at the time, or if, when he did arrive, the American minister had been there; and that the American minister be now authorized to hear the appeal precisely as he would have done had he been there at the time the representative of this firm arrived there.

The convention provides that in every case an appeal may be taken from the decision of the commissioner to the American minister, or the chief of the American legation in China. The only effect of this bill is to give these claimants precisely the same rights they would have had if the American minister had been on the spot at the time.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I would ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAYMOND] how much of this fund is left?

Mr. RAYMOND. The claims that have been paid amount to about a half million dollars. There is now remaining in the hands of the American custodian in China about two hundred and fifty thousand dollars; and if this claim should be paid, there will still be left something over two hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I would inquire if it is proposed to allow interest on this claim?

Mr. KUYKENDALL. The claim is not against this Government, but against a foreign Government.

Mr. RAYMOND. I believe it is usual in the case of claims against foreign Governments to allow interest.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. My impression is that interest should not be allowed on such claims.

Mr. RAYMOND. Our Government is not to pay either the principal or the interest. And if it has not been usual under the convention of 1858 with China to pay interest on such claims then I suppose no interest will be allowed on this claim.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. As we are establishing what may be regarded hereafter as a precedent against our Government, although it is now in favor of our own citizens, I think we should exercise great caution.

Mr. RAYMOND. The gentleman is mistaken in supposing that we are establishing a precedent. We are simply following the uniform precedent which has been established under this very convention.

Mr. WRIGHT. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAYMOND] a single question for information. The principal objection which I have to the passage of this bill arises from the fact that it is stated therein that the decision of the American minister upon a claim made by an American citizen against the Chinese Government shall be final and conclusive. My question is this: can the gentleman furnish a precedent for that mode of determining the rights of parties?

Mr. RAYMOND. In reply to the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. WRIGHT,] I beg leave to repeat what I have already stated, that such is the provision of the convention of 1858 between our Government and China, that the decision of the American minister upon appeal from the commission shall be final and conclusive. This bill merely conforms to the language of the convention itself.

I now call the previous question on the bill. The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RAYMOND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALARY OF CONSUL AT HAMBURG.

Mr. DAWSON, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back House bill No. 1063, to regulate and fix the salary of the consul at Hamburg, with a recommendation that the same do pass.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was read at length. It provides that the salary of the consul at Hamburg, from and after the 1st day of June, 1867, shall be $3,000 per annum, the same as of consuls at Bremen and Frankfort.

Mr. KASSON. I would inquire of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAWSON] if that was not provided for in the diplomatic appropriation bill? My recollection is that we amended the bill so as to accomplish the purpose of this bill.

Mr. DAWSON. Not that I am aware of. The diplomatic appropriation bill might have provided for a consul at Hamburg; but it did not fix the rate of salary, as this bill does.

The SPEAKER. The recollection of the Chair is that the word "Hamburg" was inserted in one of the schedules; but which schedule the Chair does not call to mind now.

Mr. KASSON. I have no opposition to offer to the proposition contained in this bill, for I think it is right. I only thought that it had been already provided for.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAWSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.

The SPEAKER. Reports are still in order from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. If there are no further reports from that committee, reports from the Committee on the Territories are now in order.

Mr. ANCONA. Are the Committee on Foreign Affairs through with their reports? I was out for a few moments during the presentation of their reports; but so far as I have observed, no report has been submitted with reference to Mexican affairs. Various resolutions, bills, &c., relating to this subject have during this Congress been referred to that committee; but so far as I am informed no report upon any of those propositions has been presented. I merely desire to ask for information whether any such report has been made or is in contemplation.

Mr. BANKS. The committee does not intend to make any report upon that subject at this time.

LAWS OF DAKOTA TERRITORY.

Mr. HILL, from the Committee on the Territories reported back adversely a bill (H. R. No. 736) to provide for the publication of the laws of Dakota Territory; which was laid on the table.

ARIZONA AND NEW MEXICO.

Mr. COOPER, from the Committee on the Territories, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 950) to amend the organic acts of Arizona and New Mexico, with a recommendation that it pass.

The question was on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was read at length. It provides in the first section that after the next annual sessions of the Legislative Assemblies of the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico the sessions shall be biennial. Members of the Council are to be elected for the term of four years, and members of the House of Representatives for the term of two years, and instead of the compensation heretofore allowed are to receive six dollars per day each during their attendance at the sessions, and four dollars for every twenty miles' travel in going to and returning from the sessions, the distance to be estimated according to the nearest traveled route.

The second section provides that each House shall have authority to elect, in addition to the officers now allowed by law, an enrolling clerk, who is to receive five dollars per day. The chief clerk is to receive six dollars per day, and the other officers elected by the Legislature five dollars per day.

The third section provides that the first election for the first biennial session of the Legislature shall be at the time of holding the general election for the Territory in the year 1868.

The fourth section provides that the seats of government of the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico, fixed by the Governors and Legislative Assemblies, shall not at any time be changed except by an act of the Assemblies duly passed, and which shall be approved, after due notice, at the first general election thereafter by a majority of the legal votes cast on that question.

The fifth section provides that every bill which shall have passed the Council and House of Representatives, shall before it becomes a law be presented to the Governor, who, if he approve, shall sign it; but if not, he shall return it, with his objections, to that House in which it originated, who shall enter the objections at length on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If after such reconsideration, two thirds of that House shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two thirds of that House it shall become a law. But in all such cases the votes of both Houses are to be determined by yeas and nays, to be entered on the Journal of each House respectively. If any bill shall not be returned by the Governor within three days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall be a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the Assembly by their adjournment prevent its return, in which case it shall not be a law.

The sixth section provides for the repeal of all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COOPER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COLORADO TERRITORY.

Mr. COOPER, from the same committee, also reported back House bill No. 1121, amendatory of the organic act of Colorado Territory, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill provides that hereafter the sessions of the Legislative Assembly of Colorado shall be biennial; that the members of the Council shall be elected for four and the members of the House for two years, and they shall receive the sum of six dollars per day instead of four dollars heretofore allowed, and they shall receive the same mileage as is now allowed by law.

It further provides each House shall elect the officers now allowed by law; that the enrolling clerk and chief clerk shall each receive six dollars per day, and all the other officers five dollars per day.

It further provides that the election for the first biennial session shall be at the general election in 1867, and that the Legislature then elected shall meet at the time now fixed by law.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COOPER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IDAHO.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, moved to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 490, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a temporary Government for Idaho," approved March 3, 1863.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was taken up and read a first and second time.

The bill provides that the judges of the supreme court of the Territory, or a majority of them, shall, when assembled at the seat of government of the Territory, define the judicial districts of the Territory, and assign the judges who may be appointed for the Territory to the several districts; and shall also fix and appoint the times and places for holding court in the several counties or subdivisions in each of the judicial districts, and alter the times and places of holding the courts as to them shall seem proper and convenient.

The second section provides that the next session of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Idaho shall be held commencing on the first Monday in December in 1868, and thereafter the Legislative Assembly of said Territory shall be held biennially, and the next election for members of the Legislative Assembly of said Territory shall be held on the second Monday in August, 1868; and thereafter said election shall be held biennially.

The third section provides that the members of the House of Representatives of said Legislative Assembly shall be elected for the term of two years, and the members of the Council of said Legislative Assembly shall be elected for the term of four years, provided that at the first election hereafter one half of the members of said Council shall be elected for the term of two years and the remaining half for the term of four years; and the districts wherein the members of the Council are to be elected for the term of four years at the next election shall be determined by proclamation of the Governor of said Territory, provided that in all counties and election districts which shall be entitled to elect two members of the Council one of said members shall be elected for two years and the other for four years.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MONTANA.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, moved to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 501, amendatory of an act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Montana, approved May 26, 1864.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was taken up and read a first and second time.

The first section provides that the Legislative Assemblies of the several Territories of the United States shall not, after the passage of this act, grant private charters or special privileges, but they may, by general incorporation acts, permit persons to associate themselves together as bodies-corporate for mining, manufacturing, and other industrial pursuits.

The second section provides that the probate courts of the Territory of Montana, in their respective counties, in addition to their probate jurisdiction, are hereby authorized to hear and determine civil causes wherein the damage or debt claimed does not exceed $500, and such criminal cases arising under the laws of the Territory as do not require the intervention of a grand jury, provided that they shall not have jurisdiction in any matter in controversy when the title or right to the peaceable possession of land may be in dispute or chancery or divorce causes; and provided further, that in all cases an appeal may be taken from the order, judgment, or decree of said probate court to the district court.

The third section provides that the chief justice and associate justices of said Territory and of the Territory of Idaho shall each receive an annual salary of $4,000.

The fourth section provides that the judges of the supreme court of said Territory, or a majority of them, shall, when assembled at the seat of government of said Territory, define the judicial districts of said Territory, and assign the judges who may be appointed for said Territory to the several districts, and shall also fix and appoint the times and places for holding the courts in the several counties or subdivisions in each of said judicial districts, and alter times and places of holding the courts as to them shall seem proper and convenient.

The fifth section provides that for the purpose of reviving the legislative functions of the Territory of Montana, which have been adjudged therein to have lapsed, the Governor of said Territory be, and he is hereby, authorized, on or before the 1st day of July, 1867, to divide said Territory into legislative districts for the election of members of the Council and House of Representatives, and to apportion among said districts the number of members of the Legislative Assembly provided for in the organic act of said Territory, and the election of said members of the Legislative Assembly shall be held at such time and shall be conducted in the manner prescribed by the Legislative Assembly of said Territory at the session thereof, begun and holden at the city of Bannack, in 1864 and 1865, and the qualifications of voters shall be the same as that prescribed by said organic act, saving and excepting the distinction therein made on account of race or color, and the Legislative Assembly, so elected shall convene at the time prescribed by said Legislative Assembly at the session last aforesaid. The apportionment provided for in this section shall be based upon such an enumeration of the qualified electors of the several legislative districts as shall appear from the election returns in the office of the secretary of said Territory, and from such other sources of information as will enable the Governor, without taking a new census, to make an apportionment which shall fairly represent the people of the several districts in both Houses of the Legislative Assembly.

The sixth section provides that all acts passed at the two sessions of the so-called Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Montana, held in 1866, are hereby disapproved and declared null and void, except such acts as the Legislative Assembly, herein authorized to be elected, shall by special act in each case reenact, provided, however, that in all claims of vested rights thereunder, the party claiming the same shall not, by reason of anything in this section contained, be precluded from making and testing said claim in the courts of said Territory; and provided further, that no legislation or pretended legislation in said Territory since the adjournment of the first Legislative Assembly shall be deemed valid until the election of the Legislative Assembly herein provided for shall take place.

The seventh section provides that from and after the 1st day of April next the salary of each of the judges of the several supreme courts in each of the organized Territories, except Montana and Idaho, shall be $2,500.

The eighth section provides that all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. STEVENS. If I understand the reading of the bill it fixes the salaries of the judges at $4,000.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. In two Territories.

Mr. STEVENS. Which two?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Idaho and Montana.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope the gentleman will allow it to be reduced to $3,000. That is enough.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, it costs five dollars a day, in gold, for a gentleman to board in Idaho; and before the Legislative Assembly got into the hands of the Opposition the Assembly added to the salaries paid by the Government $2,500. This was to enable them to live. But when the Opposition came into power they repealed this law, so that all they get now is what is paid by the Federal Government.

Mr. ALLISON. How long do these judges stay in the Territory?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. They cannot leave without the authority of the Attorney General.

Mr. STEVENS. I would like to know at what place it costs five dollars a day to live.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. It costs that at any place in Idaho and Montana, as I can testify from personal experience.

Mr. STEVENS. Wherever they live at all, I am sure they can live for less than that. I hope it will not go above $3,000.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. They cannot carry their provisions there for less than twelve or fifteen cents a pound. I ask the previous question.

Mr. SPALDING. I hope it will be modified and made $3,000.

Mr. CHAVES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHAVES. I desire to ask the gentleman to allow the judges in New Mexico to be included in the raising of the salaries. It is just as expensive to live in New Mexico as it is in Idaho and Montana.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. No, sir; it is not.

Mr. CHAVES. Yes, sir; I beg your pardon. I know it, because I come from there myself.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be read a third time, and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I call the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. SPALDING. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. I rise to a question of order. Is this a report of the committee?

The SPEAKER. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. STEVENS. Did it come from the Committee on the Territories in this House?

The SPEAKER. It was taken from the Speaker's table by unanimous consent.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to say that the Legislature of Montana, having lapsed, it is necessary to have some law there to authorize the present Governor to make an apportionment, in order that there may be a Legislature legally elected. The court of the Territory having pronounced invalid all the laws enacted by the so-called Legislature which met last year, it is very necessary that this bill pass.

One word as to the salaries. Gentlemen can live in Dakota and Nebraska and the adjacent Territories for almost, if not quite, one half what they can live for in Idaho and Montana. That is the reason we have made a distinction between the Territories of Dakota and Montana.

Mr. FINCK. What salary does the Governor of Idaho get?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Twenty-five hundred dollars.

Mr. FINCK. Why not put the judges on the same footing?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Governor Smith asked me, within three days, to have the proposition to increase his salary stricken out of the bill. He said if the bill came from the Senate with that proposition he would like to have it stricken out, and the bill passed as now reported.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Where does he expect to get the balance of his living?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. It was his own proposition. He has the balance in honor.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would inquire of the gentleman whether he thinks it is wise legislation to start these new communities, necessarily composed of people of small means, emigrating from different parts of the country, with this idea of high, not to say extravagant salaries? Is it not better that in "the day of small things" they should start just as the people of his State and mine did, just as he and I started in life? It does seem to me that the same principle is applicable to these Territories.

Mr. SPALDING. I supposed the gentleman was going to move that the salaries be reduced. I ask that the call of the yeas and nays may go on.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. In reply to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] I will state that having been over that Territory and spent five and a half months in it, and having been at the head of the Committee on the Territories for six years in this branch of Congress, understand what the cost of living is, and I say to him that no man can live in Idaho or Montana on less than $5,000 a year.

Mr. SPALDING. I object to further debate unless the gentleman modifies his proposition.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Provisions are brought a thousand miles over land. These are not agricultural Territories, such as my State was, and such as Tennessee was. These are mining communities.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. How is the Governor to live?

Mr. ALLISON. I object to further debate.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. My colleague from the Cleveland district [Mr. SPALDING] says that he will withdraw his objection if I will permit the amendment to be modified and make it $3,500, which I will do; I am so anxious to secure the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to making it read "$3,500."

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I think it should be the same as the salary of the Governor.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. The Governor does not ask it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the modification is made. The question is, Shall the bill pass as amended? If there is no objection, the yeas and nays will be considered as ordered upon the bill as amended.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 105, nays 39, not voting 46; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Anderson, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Davis, Dawes, Delano, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Dumont, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hawkins, Hayes, Henderson, Hill, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Jencks, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, Longyear, Lynch, Marvin, McClurg, McRuer, Mercur, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Paine, Perham, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Price, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Stilwell, Stokes, Strouse, Thayer, John L. Thomas, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, James F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—105.

NAYS—Messrs. Ames, Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Campbell, Reader W. Clarke, Cooper, Dawson, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Hise, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Kasson, Kerr, Kuykendall, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Leftwich, Loan, Marshall, Maynard, Niblack, Nicholson, Noel, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Taber, Nelson Taylor, Trimble, Trowbridge, Andrew H. Ward, and Winfield—39.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, Banks, Benjamin, Chanler, Culver, Darling, Defrees, Denison, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Goodyear, Harris, Higby, Hogan, Asahel W. Hubbard, Hulburd, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jones, Laffin, Latham, Marston, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, Morris, Orth, Patterson, Phelps, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Rousseau, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Francis Thomas, Thornton, Robert T. Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Wright—46.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 592) to provide for a temporary increase of pay to the officers of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes.

Also, that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. No. 189) authorizing Gustavus V. Fox, late Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and the officers of the iron-clad Miantonomah and gunboat Augusta to accept presents tendered them by the Emperor of Russia, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

NORTH MISSOURI RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. HOGAN, from the Committee of Ways and Means, by unanimous consent, reported a bill for the relief of the North Missouri Railroad Company, accompanied by a report; which were ordered to be printed, and recommended to the Committee of Ways and Means.

JOHN SEDGWICK.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee of Ways and Means, for consideration at this time, a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and settle the accounts of John Sedgwick, collector of internal revenue for the third collection district of California.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I think there is a general law providing for such cases.

Mr. MOORHEAD. This bill relates to what occurred before that law was passed, and does not therefore come within the operation of that law.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I must object to this bill.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Then I move that the rules be suspended so that I may be able to report the bill at this time.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 68, noes 28.

So (two thirds voting in the affirmative) the rules were suspended.

The bill was then reported from the committee and read the first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was read at length. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and settle the accounts of John Sedgwick, collector of internal revenue for the third collection district of California, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1864, as he may deem just and equitable.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Instead of saying anything myself, I will ask that the Clerk read a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which I send to his desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
WASHINGTON, February 4, 1867.

Sir: In reply to yours of 22d January, that John Sedgwick was originally appointed as collector of internal revenue for the third collection district of California July 30, 1862, bond approved December 23, 1862, and appointment confirmed by the Senate February 3, 1863. The date of commencement of service by him is entered on the records of this Department as 15th September, 1862, from which date he is entitled to the pay and emoluments of the office.

For time prior to 30th June, 1863, expenses of administering his office were $4,622 12, which amount has been allowed Mr. Sedgwick in addition to a personal salary at the rate of $2,500 per annum.

For the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1864, his commissions as allowed amounted to $6,423 77, and expenses as shown by statement of the collector were $10,111 34, thus showing a loss of $3,687 57, allowing nothing for his personal salary. For this time, under the act of 3d March, 1863, section seventeen, the total amount which can be allowed to any collector for salary and expenses is limited to $10,000; and to reach this limit a special allowance of $3,576 23 was made by the honorable Secretary under date of 23d October, 1866.

For subsequent years there is no limit fixed by law, and consequently we call for special legislation.

Very respectfully,
E. A. ROLLINS,
Commissioner.

SAMUEL V. NILES, Esq., No. 262 I Street, Washington, D. C.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MOORHEAD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL CAPITOL INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. MERCUR, from a committee of conference, made the following report:

The committee of conference appointed upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon House bill No. 234, to incorporate the National Capitol Insurance Company, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from their first amendment, with the following amendment: in line nine, page 1, after the word "elsewhere" insert "subject to the laws of the several States."

That the Senate recede from their second amendment, with the following amendment: in line fourteen, page 1, after the word "elsewhere" insert "subject to the laws of the States as aforesaid."

That the Senate recede from their third amendment, and that the whole of section nine, as amended, be stricken from the bill.

That the Senate recede from their fourth amendment, with the following amendments: in line twenty-seven, page 6, strike out the word "twenty" and insert "one hundred and fifty;" after the word "dollars" in line one, page 7, insert "in shares of fifty dollars each;" in line two of same page strike out the word "twenty" and insert "one hundred and fifty;" strike out all of the tenth section after the word "insurances," in line three, page 7.

That the House concur in the fifth amendment of the Senate, with the following amendments: in line four of said amendment strike out the word "January" and insert in lieu thereof the word "February;" after the word "Interior" in line six of said amendment insert as follows: "a detailed report of their transactions for the preceding year;" in same line strike out the word "shall;" in line seven after the word "some" insert the word "value;" after the word "Columbia" in lines seven and eight insert "for at least ten days;" strike out the word "premiums" in lines eight and nine and insert in lieu thereof the word "profits;" at the end of said Senate amendment add the following: "together with the amount of stock subscribed and the amount actually paid in."

ULYSSES MERCUR,

MARTIN WELKER,

Managers on the part of the House.

LOT M. MORRILL,

D. T. PATTERSON,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The committee also recommend the following amendments to the bill:

On page 2, strike out after the word "upon" in line five down to and including the word "upon" in line eight.

On same page, after the word "lives" in line nine insert "and health."

On page 3, strike out all after the word "that" in line eighteen over to and including the word "representatives," on page 4, line nine.

On page 4, strike out the words "members or" in lines eleven and twelve.

On same page, strike out all after the word "responsibilities" in line thirteen down to and including the word "company" in line fifteen, and insert in lieu thereof as follows: "beyond the amount of stock subscribed by them respectively."

On same page, strike out all of section five.

On same page, strike out the word "members" in line twenty-five and insert in lieu thereof the word "stockholders."

On same page, strike out the words "said deposit-notes or" in lines twenty-five and twenty-six.

On same page, strike out the word "thereon" in line twenty-six and insert in lieu thereof the words "on their stock."

Strike out all of section seven on pages 5 and 6.

On page 6, strike out the words "members or" in line nine.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair understands this report correctly, the conferees propose to change the original text of the bill. The President pro tempore of the Senate has twice decided—as the Chair thinks correctly—that while conference committees can in regard to disagreeing votes make a report which may be adopted by a majority in each House, yet any recommendation of such committee proposing a change in the text of the bill requires for its adoption unanimous consent in both branches.

Mr. MERCUR. The committee so understood.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on adopting the report proper of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on changing the original text of the bill as proposed by the committee. This requires unanimous consent. Is there any objection?

Mr. WRIGHT. I object.

Mr. MERCUR. I hope that the gentleman from New Jersey will withdraw his objection for a moment, and hear a brief explanation.

The SPEAKER. Unless the proposed changes can be made by unanimous consent the bill will probably fail. The report of the conferees is agreed to; but they recommend in addition certain changes in the original text.

Mr. WRIGHT. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. ROSS. I renew the objection.

The SPEAKER. In this anomalous position of the bill, the Chair will be under the necessity of directing the Clerk to report to the Senate that the House has agreed to the conference report proper, but has refused unanimous consent to the amendments of the original text of the bill, as proposed by the committee.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Could not the report lie on the table for a short time? I think that when the matter is understood the objection will be withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MERCUR] might withdraw the report.

Mr. MERCUR. I withdraw the report temporarily.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I am about to make a last effort to obtain some action of the House upon the tariff; and before submitting the proposition which I propose to present, I desire to call the attention of the House to certain facts in regard to the bill which we have had under consideration.

At the last session of Congress we sent to the Senate a bill merely amending the tariff—a bill consisting of less than sixty pages. The Senate has taken the responsibility of sending back to us a bill covering over one hundred and twenty pages, including hundreds of articles not touched by the House bill, embracing the whole subject of the tariff, and repealing all existing laws upon the subject from the beginning to the end. While the Constitution gives the House of Representatives the exclusive right to originate revenue bills, it also confers upon the Senate the right to make amendments to such bills.

We in this instance have merely made an amendment to the tariff; but the Senate, assuming a wide stretch of power, has sent us an entirely new bill covering the whole subject. While I do not deny their technical right to do this, yet I think it is a very wide stretch of the power of that body, and most unfortunately exercised at this particular time. Beyond doubt it would, after the several fragmentary amendments we have been compelled to make to tariff laws during the recent war, be well to have the whole in one symmetrical act; but to do this requires months of patient labor upon the part of committees as well as of both Houses of Congress. The short session does not afford that time.

The Senate has kept this bill for more than two thirds of the short session of this Congress. It was not reported back to us until the 2d day of this month, and we did not get it from the printing office until the 5th. It reached us at the moment we were in the midst of the consideration of the internal tax bill, and amid the excitement attending the reconstruction question. It was impossible, therefore, for us to properly consider the bill and report it to the House from the Committee of Ways and Means until the 18th of February.

Now, sir, these revenue bills must go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The rules so protect the minority in this House that such bills cannot at once be controlled by the majority. There is no power under Heaven nor under parliamentary law by which we can reach such a bill without the concurrence of two thirds unless it shall have first passed through the ordeal of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, where amendment is interminable. Under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, we have made such progress as was possible, and we find at this late period of the session, when we have only three more legislative days remaining, it is utterly impossible this bill should pass unless we can take it out of committee and bring it into the House.

As complaint may be made against me as to the fate of this bill, I will only say that during the past fortnight, for about the first time within twelve years, I have been compelled by domestic affliction to be absent from my place for about a week. Under these circumstances, for any one who may impute blame to me for an absence arising from sentiments that ought not to be foreign to any man's breast, I have no answer.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am about to make a motion to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the tariff bill. I am perfectly aware it will take a two-thirds vote to accomplish this purpose. I have no more, perhaps less, interest than any other man in this House in the result. I represent, like the gentleman from the West, almost purely an agricultural community. I believe it is important for us to keep the industrial interests of the country actively employed. If we can prevent a stagnation of business in this country, prevent a financial crisis, I have no doubt that not less than three hundred thousand immigrants will come to our shores this year for permanent residence. If, on the contrary, we have anything like general stagnation of business, anything like a financial crisis, these immigrants will not come to our shores, and we shall be deprived of much of that large accession to our strength and wealth. It must be apparent that labor finds a higher reward in America or immigrants will not flock here in any great numbers. Besides that, living as I do in an agricultural community, I am anxious to open a wider market for agricultural products. I am anxious these manufacturing and mechanical establishments should find their way into my State, for in Vermont less than any other New England State have we such establishments. Agriculture needs manufactures as much as manufactures need agriculture. They go best hand in hand.

In relation to the bill before the House I will say I have never been one of those who are in favor of high protective tariffs. I believe so much revenue for the support of the Government that a tariff with merely proper discriminations between American labor and foreign labor will be amply sufficient for the protection of all the interests of the country.

Mr. FINCK rose.

Mr. MORRILL. I decline to be interrupted now.

So far as any of the extreme rates in the bill are concerned, they have not received my concurrence. If I should have an opportunity to vote on any such points I should invariably go for the reduction of any of these extreme rates, such as excite the hostility of parties in various parts of the Hall. If there are any snow-capped peaks in the bill I hope they will be knocked off. If the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall be discharged from the further consideration of the bill it will then be in the power of the House to take such action as it pleases. Members can propose such amendments as they choose. It will be entirely within the control of the House, and with its action I shall be content. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FINCK. I wish to ask whether it is the purpose of the gentleman to offer a substitute for this bill?

Mr. MORRILL. It is not.

Mr. FINCK. I wish to ask further, if we have only three legislative days, how is it possible to get the bill through and before the President, and how he can read and examine it?

Mr. MORRILL. I have great faith in the power of instinct, and I think the President will be able to understand it from his power of instinct. [Laughter.]

Mr. FINCK. I think so, too, and to veto it.

Mr. ROSS. I understand that New England does not wish this tariff, and I do not see the necessity of pressing it. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] told us yesterday that New England does not desire this tariff, and I am sure the West does not want it.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman from Vermont yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MORRILL. I will for a question, but I cannot yield for discussion.

Mr. THAYER. I would ask the gentleman from Vermont whether if the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union shall be discharged from the further consideration of the bill he proposes to afford an opportunity for amendments to be offered in the House?

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. With the permission of the gentleman from Vermont I desire to say a word with reference to the present position of this bill. I think it due to myself that I should say—

Mr. DAVIS. I rise to a point of order. The floor was yielded to the gentleman to ask a question and not to engage in discussion. It was refused to me for any other purpose but to ask a question.

Mr. MORRILL. I am willing to yield for explanation, but not for general debate.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask but a moment for the purpose of making an explanation of what I said yesterday.

Mr. MORRILL. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. ALLEY. I object to the gentleman's yielding for explanation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts can make the point of order that there is no question before the House, but if that is waived then the gentleman from Vermont has a right to yield for explanation.

Mr. ALLEY. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I raised a question in regard to the constitutional power of the Senate to return to the House a bill in the shape in which this bill has been sent here. I did not take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and I desire now only to state the reasons why I believe that the objection which I made is sound and sustained by constitutional principles.

The Constitution provides that—

"All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills."

Now, sir, the point with me is this: that an amendment which strikes out the entire provisions of the bill and substitutes a new bill is no amendment at all. It is a creation and nothing else. If we look at the bill passed by the House of Representatives and compare it with the bill passed by the Senate we shall see that their calling their bill an amendment is a misnomer. They have taken the principal text of the House bill and amended it in certain particulars, and then they say they have stricken out the House bill and send us what by a misnomer they call an amendment. It was therefore my hope that the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, who reported this bill to the House, would propose either to concur or to non-concur in the Senate amendment and send the whole subject to a committee of conference, in order that we might be able to obtain some action by Congress upon this great question of the tariff. I desire to say that the country is looking to us for action upon it. The languishing interests of the manufacturers of the country appeal to us for aid, and those who represent the farming interests of the West, those who say that the farmer and the producer from the soil demands the right to purchase where he can purchase cheapest, are mistaking very much the interests of their constituents; they are looking to popularity at home on a false pretense, and the action of the country, if we do not pass a tariff bill, will convince them of the truth of what I say.

Mr. MORRILL. I will now yield for a few minutes to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.]

Mr. ALLISON. When I was interrupted by the gentleman from the State of New York, [Mr. DAVIS,] who just now imputed improper motives to the men who differ with him on this floor, I was about to state—

Mr. DAVIS. Allow me to say that I did not design to impugn the character or reflect upon the action of any member of this House. The love of popularity, I suppose, is not confined to Iowa. It is not confined to New York. We all of us love it. I only say that in matters which affect ourselves personally we may sometimes be influenced to vote against the interests of the country generally.

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to say that so far as the Committee of Ways and Means is concerned, to my knowledge it has assiduously endeavored to bring this bill before the House at the earliest possible period. From the 5th day of February up to the very hour when the bill was reported the majority of that committee were in session in the committee-room in the morning during the sessions of the House, and in the evening for the purpose of considering this bill and preparing amendments thereto. I believe that the gentlemen upon that committee will say that although I have opposed the increase of many of the rates proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means, and although I was opposed, in many instances, to the rates of duty imposed by the Senate bill, yet I have thrown no obstacles in the way of its consideration, either in the House or in the Committee of Ways and Means.

I desire now to say a word with reference to the present action of the House. If I understand the motion of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. MORRILL,] it is to take the bill out of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, where it is now being considered, and place it within the control of a majority of this House in the House and to have but a single vote thereon. He tells us that there are but three living days of this session. He informs us truly that the Senate has taken into consideration the whole scope of the existing tariff. If the bill comes back again into the House, it is perfectly apparent that it must be considered only by a committee of conference, consisting of three members of the House and three members of the Senate, and that the report of this conference committee must be adopted in the House without debate and without opportunity of amendment, or that we must adopt the bill of the Senate without further consideration or amendment, affecting as it does the entire range of dutiable imports, affecting as it does materially almost every branch of industry, and changing existing values of almost every manufactured commodity in the country.

Now, sir, in my judgment a bill of this magnitude should not be passed without careful consideration in Committee of the Whole House, in order that the varied interests in the country may be properly cared for and adjusted one to another. If this consideration cannot now be given, only a few days will pass until another Congress will assemble having ample time to consider this whole subject, and in the mean time we have a law imposing high duties upon most articles imported, amply protecting nearly if not quite all the varied manufacturing industries of the country, a law which as declared by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means was only intended to bridge over the period of war, through which we were passing when it was enacted.

The motion of the gentleman from Vermont, chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, should it prevail, will allow but one vote to be taken in the House upon this subject, and that without further debate or amendment, a proposition to which I cannot assent at this time. There are several vital objections to the Senate bill which would be finally passed upon by the vote to be taken under the motion of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means. It is perfectly apparent, as I have before stated, that even upon a conference report no debate can be had, as if this bill passes it must pass to-morrow or Saturday at farthest to receive the signature of the President or his veto before this Congress expires by limitation.

Not willing, sir, to commit a measure of this importance entirely over to a committee of three, without opportunity of revision or explanation, I shall be compelled to so vote as to keep this bill within the Committee of the Whole, when amendments may be offered and its various provisions carefully considered. If this vote has the effect to postpone for the present the consideration of this subject, I shall take my full share of the responsibility of such action.

Mr. MORRILL. I will yield now for a moment to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to say a word, not precisely in response to my colleague on the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. ALLISON,] but to show what has been the action of the Committee of Ways and Means and what is the duty of the House at this time in reference to this bill.

As has already been said, considering the late date at which the printed bill came into our hands, and considering the work on hand at the time, both in the committee and in the House, and considering particularly the heavy pressure upon the committee by delegations and interests from all parts of the country, seeking to be heard, it would hardly have been possible to get the bill through the committee at any earlier hour. But this is now our situation. We must decide within the next half hour whether the majority in this House shall be permitted to vote for or against a tariff bill. It so happens that owing to a division of opinion among the Union men of this House the fate of this bill is likely to be determined by the vote of the Democratic members. Under the rules of the House it is possible for one more than a third of this body to prevent one less than two thirds from taking any decisive action on this bill.

Now, I appeal to those who belong to the majority on this floor, in view of the fact that there are differences in our own party, differences which before twelve months have passed may forever divide us, differences upon which political parties may be entirely recast. I ask them whether they will now precipitate a division by using the power in their hands to-day in connection with our political enemies to defeat a measure which a very large majority of their friends desire to have enacted into a law?

Of course the power is entirely in their hands. But as the Union party is responsible for the action of the House, I hope gentlemen will hesitate before they consent to aid our enemies in tying the hands of the House and thwarting the efforts of one hundred out of one hundred and sixty members. I make no charges against any man, I recognize the absolute right of each member, as I claim the right myself, to vote on all propositions as he may deem best. And if this bill is released from the Committee of the Whole, every member will have full opportunity to record his vote and make up his record.

I hope, therefore—perhaps I hope against hope—that the House will enable us to take this bill from the Committee of the Whole and submit it to the action of the House.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I do this with reluctance—

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is debate in order? I do not understand that there is any proposition before the House.

The SPEAKER. If the point of order is insisted upon, the Chair must rule that debate is not in order.

Mr. MAYNARD. I have said about all that I need to say. I therefore move that the rules be suspended, in order that the Committee of the Whole may be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 718, and I will merely add that if this motion does prevail, then so far as the Committee of Ways and Means are concerned we shall probably make no further effort in relation to a tariff bill at this session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] that unless he makes his motion more comprehensive than he has now made it, each one of the amendments which have been made in Committee of the Whole may be voted upon in the House by yeas and nays.

Mr. MORRILL. I will modify my motion so as to require that a direct vote be taken upon concurring or non-concurring in the Senate amendment.

Mr. HILL. And require the vote to be taken at once?

Mr. KASSON. Without any opportunity for further amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the motion of the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] so that it may be understood by all the members of the House. It is that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the tariff bill, and that the House proceed at once to vote upon concurring with the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. I am willing to include the amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole to the amendment of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Then if the motion is agreed to, the amendments of the Committee of Ways and Means, so far as they may have been adopted by the Committee of the Whole, will be included; those which have not been adopted by the Committee of the Whole will be regarded as falling.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to suspend the rules.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 106, nays 64, not voting 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Ancona, Arnell, De los R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, Baker, Benjamin, Bergen, Bromwell, Campbell, Chanler, Cobb, Cook, Cooper, Deftrees, Donnelly, Dumont, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farquhar, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Abner C. So (two thirds not voting in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. O'NEILL. I desire to say that my colleague, Mr. SAMUEL J. RANDALL, has been called home by the death of a near relative.

Mr. GRINNELL. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. A. W. HUBBARD, is still detained from his seat by illness. If he were here I have no doubt he would vote for this motion.

Mr. FERRY. My colleague, Mr. DRIGGS, is absent on account of sickness. If he were here he would vote for this motion.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution of the House No. 222, prohibiting payments to any person not known to have been opposed to the rebellion and in favor of its suppression.

TARIFF BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to suspend the rules to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 718, entitled "An act to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes; and that the House concur in the amendment of the Senate as amended by the Committee of the Whole, with the following amendments:

Strike out on page 27, line eighteen, all after the word "proud" to the end of the twenty-first line, being the following words:

And any person or corporation may import and use railroad iron at any time within ten years upon paying the duties imposed by law, any provision in any act of Congress to the contrary notwithstanding.

And on page 15, line six, strike out the words "excluding charges in such port;" and strike out the same words in lines fifty, fifty-seven, fifty-eight, sixty-two, sixty-three, sixty-eight, seventy-one, and seventy-two.

And that the vote shall be taken without further amendment or debate.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I rise to a point of order. This resolution embraces what purports to be an amendment to the tariff bill, and according to the ruling of the Chair no amendment is allowable until after the amendments reported by the Committee of Ways and Means have been considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDRIDGE] is certainly correct in his statement of the ruling of the Chair; but the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] has moved to suspend the rules for the very purpose of doing what cannot be done under the rules.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I have no doubt the decision of the Chair was correct, and I desire that the House shall adhere to it.

Mr. LE BLOND. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. This resolution, as the Chair understands, proposes to retain the amendments to the Senate bill as adopted in Committee of the Whole. Or does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] propose to relieve the bill of the amendments agreed to in Committee of the Whole? Which is his purpose?

Mr. STEVENS. I am willing to take the bill as thus far amended, with the amendments stated in the resolution.

Mr. LE BLOND. I rise to a question of order; though I am not sure that my point is entirely well taken, unless there can be a division of the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. By a vote just taken the House has refused to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the consideration of this bill. This resolution proposes the same thing, but it embraces in addition a proposition to amend the bill in certain respects. Now, so far as regards the discharge of the Committee of the Whole, it seems to me that that proposition is out of order, the House having just refused such a proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] is certainly aware that this resolution differs in some points from the proposition just voted upon by the House, and—

Mr. LE BLOND. Is it not susceptible of division?

The SPEAKER. A motion to suspend the rules is not divisible nor amendable nor debatable.

Mr. LE BLOND. This is a motion to suspend the rules to discharge the Committee of the Whole, and to adopt certain amendments.

The SPEAKER. It is all included in one motion.

Mr. LE BLOND. Can we not have a division, so as to vote separately upon the question of discharging the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. A motion to suspend the rules is not divisible, but must be put as moved. Any gentleman might move to suspend all the rules of the House, and if two thirds so decided, an entirely new code of parliamentary rules might be adopted for the government of this body. A fortiori, anything less than this can be accomplished by a two thirds vote.

Mr. STEVENS. Upon reflection I believe that the clause with reference to railroad iron was stricken from the bill in Committee of the Whole. I therefore modify my resolution by striking out the part in reference to that.

This leaves as the only amendment the striking out of the clauses with reference to charges upon wool.

Mr. PAINE. I should be glad to understand whether the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania contemplates a concurrence in the substitute of the Senate with the amendments adopted by the House in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. STEVENS. With the amendments already adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I have an amendment which, if accepted, I will say I propose to vote for this bill. My amendment is as follows:

On animals living, namely, on horses, mares, colts, asses, and mules, fifty per cent. ad valorem; on neat cattle, fifty per cent. ad valorem; on sheep, goats, calves, and swine, fifty per cent. ad valorem; on all kinds not otherwise herein provided for, fifty per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That all animals imported from Europe for breeding purposes only shall be admitted duty free.

On apples, garden fruit, and edible vegetables and roots, in a green or fresh state, not otherwise herein provided for, ten per cent. ad valorem.

On barley, not including pearl or hulled, thirty cents per bushel.

On barley, pearl or hulled, one cent per pound.

On beans, (except vanilla and castor,) forty per cent. ad valorem.

On broom corn, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

On Indian corn, twenty cents per bushel.

On corn meal, thirty per cent. ad valorem.

On butter, five cents per pound.

On buckwheat, twenty cents per bushel.

On flour and meal, middlings, and mill-feed of wheat, rye, oats, or other grain not herein otherwise provided for, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

On fruits preserved in spirits or brandy, two dollars per gallon; on fruits preserved in sugar or molasses, and on all other sweetmeats, fifty per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That all preserved fruits and pickled fruits in jars, bottles, or other packages, shall pay duty on the entire cost as put up, the cost of packages included.

On fish, namely: on smoked salmon and halibut, two dollars per one hundred pounds; on smoked herring, two dollars per one hundred pounds; on pickled salmon, white fish, and trout, four dollars per barrel; on pickled mackerel, shad, and halibut, four dollars per barrel; on pickled herring and alewives, two dollars per barrel: Provided, That any pickled fish in packages other than barrels shall pay in proportion to the rates charged for similar fish in barrels: And provided further, That all fish imported in bulk (other than fresh) shall pay at the above rates, estimating two hundred pounds to the barrel. On all pickled fish, not otherwise provided for, two dollars per one hundred pounds; on all dry fish, one half cent per pound; on sardines and anchovies, and all preparations of the same, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

On hay, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

On hops, eight cents per pound.

On meats, namely: on beef not cured, and on beef dried, two cents per pound; on beef cured, in barrels, five dollars per barrel of two hundred pounds; on pork, in any form, not cured, three cents per pound; on pork, in barrels, five dollars per barrel of two hundred pounds; on dressed poultry, five cents per pound; on all other meats not cured, two cents per pound; on all prepared or canned meats and sausages, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

On malt, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

On oats, twenty cents per bushel.

On oil-cake, fifty per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That no drawback shall be allowed on oil-cake manufactured of imported linseed, when exported to foreign countries.

On peas, fifty cents per bushel.

On timothy, clover, and other grass seeds, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

On all garden seeds, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

On canary seed, two dollars per bushel of sixty pounds.

On tallow, lard, and marrow, three cents per pound.

On wheat, fifty cents per bushel.

Mr. STEVENS. I consent to have that added to my resolution.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask the gentleman to allow me to move another amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. If I yield to the gentleman from Vermont I do not know with what grace I can decline to yield to others. I must, therefore, demand the previous question.

Mr. F. THOMAS. I wish the Speaker to explain to the House whether I am right or wrong as to the conception I have in reference to this matter. If the House agree to this proposition and it is sent to the Senate and the Senate non-concur, is there not then ground for a committee of conference which will open up this whole subject?

Mr. STEVENS. It only opens up the matters on which the two Houses disagree.

Mr. F. THOMAS. I desire to know the opinion of the Chair, whether that committee of conference may reopen the entire subject-matter between the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. If two thirds vote for this proposition and the Senate non-concur in the amendment, and it should go to a committee of conference, that committee would be confined exclusively to the amendments to the Senate amendment which have been agreed to, and this one passed by the House.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. Would the committee of conference have the right to strike out the amendment of my friend from Illinois?

The SPEAKER. The committee would have the control of the amendments agreed to in the Committee of the Whole and by vote of this House.

Mr. STEVENS. I insist on my motion to suspend the rule.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I withdraw my amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has accepted it, and it cannot be withdrawn without his consent.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. One vote settles this whole question so far as this action is concerned. It is made broadly, so as one vote shall settle it.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. What becomes of the amendments of the Committee of Ways and Means which have not been acted on?

The SPEAKER. They are cut off by the operation of this resolution.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I wish to inquire if the vote to suspend the rules on the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will determine the whole question?

The SPEAKER. It does. If the rules are suspended the Senate amendment will be concurred in as amended.

Mr. CHANLER. Is it in order to move to divide the question?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. ANCONA. I wish to inquire whether all action will be concluded upon all points; that is to say, whether a committee of conference will have power to change any of the provisions of the bill as fixed by the Senate and as concurred in by the House if the rules are suspended.

The SPEAKER. It will not. So far as the Committee of the Whole have acted upon the amendment of the Senate that action will remain, but the remaining part of the Senate amendment as concurred in by the House will thereby be entirely removed from the action of the committee of conference, except by the unanimous consent of both Houses.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman from Illinois desires me to say that he does not withdraw his amendment.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I stand by my amendment. I do not withdraw it.

The question being taken on the motion to suspend the rules, there were—yeas 102, nays 69, not voting 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Delano, Deming, Dixon, Donnelly, Ferry, Garfield, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Jenckes, Kelley, Ketcham, Koontz, Ladin, Latham, George V. NAYS—Messrs. NOT VOTING—Messrs. Culver, Denison, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Farnsworth, Goodyear, Asahel W. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jones, Marston, Samuel J. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Rousseau, Sitgreaves, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, and Windom—19.

So (two thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

PATENT SPECIFICATIONS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, in answer to a resolution of the House of the 7th ultimo, relative to the contract for the printing of specifications of patents; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER asked and obtained leave of absence for the remainder of the session for Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, who was called away on account of the death of his father-in-law.

TEMPORARY TARIFF.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask leave to introduce a joint resolution to increase temporarily the duties on imports, which I send to the Clerk's desk for consideration now.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be reported for information, after which the Chair will ask for objections, if there are any.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc. That from and after ten days from the passage of this joint resolution there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all goods, wares, and merchandise imported into the United States and now subject to duty under existing laws, an additional duty equal to one fifth or twenty per cent. of the duties and rates of duties, including specific and ad valorem rates, now imposed by law upon all such goods, wares, and merchandise: Provided, That no additional duty shall be levied, collected, or paid on sugar, tea, coffee, salt, or coal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this resolution?

Mr. WRIGHT and Mr. FINCK objected.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to suspend the rules in order to enable me to offer this resolution for action at this time.

Mr. FINCK. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to inquire whether railroad iron is included in this resolution, so that twenty per cent. will be added to the duty upon it?

Mr. MORRILL. I will modify my resolution so that railroad iron shall be among the exceptions.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 95, nays 71, not voting 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Brandegee, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Delano, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Ferry, Garfield, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Hart, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, Jenckes, Kelley, Ketcham, Koontz, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Longyear, Lynch, Marvin, McClurg, McIndoe, McKee, McRuer, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Price, William H. Randall, Raymond, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Starr, Stevens, Stokes, Thayer, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, and Windom—95.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ancona, Baker, Benjamin, Bergen, Blow, Boyer, Bromwell, Campbell, Chanler, Cobb, Cook, Cooper, Cullom, Dawson, Defrees, Dumont, Eggleston, Eliot, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Harris, Hawkins, Hayes, Hill, Hise, Hogan, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Hunter, Julian, Kasson, Kelso, Kerr, Kuykendall, Latham, Le Blond, Leftwich, Loan, Marshall, Maynard, McCullough, Moulton, Niblack, Nicholson, Noel, Orth, Phelps, Radford, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Strouse, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Trowbridge, Andrew H. Ward, Henry D. Washburn, Whaley, James F. Wilson, Winfield, and Wright—71.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, Culver, Denison, Driggs, Eckley, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Goodyear, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jones, Marston, Samuel J. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Rousseau, Sloan, Spalding, Stilwell, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, and Woodbridge—24.

So (two thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

Mr. HALE. I desire to state that Mr. WOODBRIDGE, of Vermont, and Mr. ELDRIDGE, of Wisconsin, are absent from the House, in attendance upon a committee of conference.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. FARNSWORTH, of Illinois, is also absent for the same reason.

TARIFF ON WOOL.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to offer a joint resolution, the substance of which I will state in order to avoid the necessity for reading it; it embraces the sections of the tariff bill, as reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, relating to wool and woollens, and nothing else.

Mr. MORRILL. The House have already acted upon that subject; a bill relating to it was passed by this House, and is now pending before the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that some time last session a bill was passed by this House at the instance of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] in regard to wool and woollens which has not yet been acted upon in the Senate. The Chair does not remember exactly the name of the bill; but probably the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DELANO,] who is now upon the floor, and who was a supporter of the bill, can explain it to the House.

Mr. DELANO. The bill embraced so much of the tariff bill as related to wool and woollens—the tariff bill that passed this House at the last session—and it is now before the Senate.

Mr. BINGHAM. The bill which has gone to the Senate does not contain the words of exception which are found everywhere running through the sections of this bill, to wit, "excepting charges," and the use of which I look upon as a contrivance by which wool may be imported into this country without any duty at all. Therefore, if this measure is to be offered, I ask that the words "excepting charges" be struck out.

Mr. ANCONA. I call for the regular order of business.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the Senate amendments to the Army bill (H. R. No. 112) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 175) to audit and pay the claim of Tuller & Fisher of Missouri; and

An act (H. R. No. 878) to quiet title to land in the towns of Santa Clara and Petaluma, in the State of California.

PAYMENT OF GOVERNMENT OFFICERS.

Mr. DELANO, from a committee of conference, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to House joint resolution No. 322, prohibiting payments by any officer of the Government to any person not known to have been opposed to the rebellion and in favor of its suppression, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, that the Senate recede from the first amendment, disagreed to by the House, and agree to the bill as passed by the House, with the Senate other amendments.

C. DELANO,

JOHN B. ALLEY,

A. THORNTON,

Managers on the part of the House.

LYMAN TRUMBULL,

GEORGE G. FOGG,

J. W. NESMITH,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. ANCONA. Is it in order to have that bill reported?

The SPEAKER. The House having agreed to the report of the committee of conference the bill is passed.

Mr. McKEE. I desire to make a remark in regard to that bill. I understand that the committee of conference added a section to the House bill.

The SPEAKER. It is not so stated in the conference report. There was a single Senate amendment to the bill, which the House refused to agree to and which was referred to a committee of conference. That committee have reported; and, the Senate receding from their amendment, when they adopted the report of the committee of conference, the bill had passed, and the adoption of the report by the House was merely a formal matter.

TARIFF ON WOOL—AGAIN.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to know whether my resolution has yet been received by the House?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. KASSON. I understand that the bill referred to by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] is not this bill. This is the bill as it comes from the Committee of Ways and Means. I hope it will pass; and I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of passing the bill as reported by the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. ROSS. It will be read first, I suppose?

The SPEAKER. It will if the motion to suspend the rules should prevail; the bill will then be before the House for its consideration.

Mr. KASSON. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to suspend the rules.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KASSON. I will say that the joint resolution I desire to introduce is an extract from the tariff bill as reported from the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not; a motion to suspend the rules is not debatable.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 90, nays 64, not voting 36; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Cullom, Darling, Defrees, Delano, Deming, Dixon, Dumont, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Higby, Hill, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, Jenckes, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Ketcham, Koontz, Laffin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Longyear, Marvin, McClurg, McIndoe, McKee, McRuer, Mercer, Morris, Moulton, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, William H. Randall, John H. Rice, Rollins, Ross, Sawyer, Schofield, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Spalding, Starr, Stokes, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Windom—90.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Ancona, Baker, Baldwin, Bergen, Boutwell, Boyer, Bromwell, Campbell, Chandler, Reader W. Clarke, Cooper, Davis, Dawes, Dodge, Eggleston, Eliot, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hawkins, Hogan, Hooper, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Hunter, Kelso, Kerr, Le Blond, Leftwich, Loan, Lynch, Marshall, McCullough, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Myers, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Radford, Raymond, Ritter, Rogers, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Stevens, Strouse, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Andrew H. Ward, Warner, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Williams, and Wright—64.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Benjamin, Bidwell, Cook, Culver, Dawson, Denison, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Finck, Goodyear, Hayes, Henderson, Hise, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jones, Kuykendall, Marston, Maynard, Phelps, Plants, Samuel J. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Rousseau, Stilwell, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, Winfield, and Woodbridge—36.

So (two thirds not voting in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended.

During the roll-call,

Mr. MORRILL said: I desire to make an inquiry of the Chair, upon the answer to which my vote will depend. I desire to know if the rules are suspended and this joint resolution is introduced, and the House then refuse to second the call for the previous question, can I move, as a substitute for that joint resolution, the proposition to lay a general increase of tariff of twenty per cent.?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion, and would so rule, that if the joint resolution proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Kasson] is introduced under a suspension of the rules, it being a joint resolution in relation to the tariff on wools and woollens, it would not be in order to move any amendment to it not germane to the subject embraced in the bill; or otherwise an entire tariff bill might be put on it by way of amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. Then as a bill has already passed the House and been sent to the Senate, in relation to the tariff on wool, I cannot vote for any humbug like the one proposed by my free-trade friend from Iowa, [Mr. Kasson.] I therefore vote "no."

Mr. MOORHEAD. Under the ruling of the Chair I vote "no."

Mr. SCHENCK. Going it blind, I vote "ay." [Laughter.]

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The hour of half past four o'clock p. m. having arrived, the House, pursuant to order, took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

NAVIGATION OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House resolutions of the Board of Trade of St. Louis, relative to the improvement of the Rock Island and Des Moines rapids in the Mississippi river; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

HOMESTEADS IN SOUTHERN STATES.

Mr. JULIAN. I rise to a privileged question, and call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands House bill No. 1183, amendatory of an act for the disposal of the public lands for homestead actual settlements in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion to recommit the bill.

Mr. JULIAN. I withdraw the motion to recommit, and ask that the bill be put upon its passage at this time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was read at length. It provides that the act of Congress entitled "An act for the disposal of the public lands for homestead actual settlements in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida," approved June 21, 1866, be so amended that hereafter any person applying for the benefit of said act shall be required to make oath that he has not borne arms against the United States or given aid and comfort to its enemies.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. LE BLOND. I would inquire who are the persons who are to receive the benefits of this act?

Mr. JULIAN. Any persons who may apply for land under it to the extent of eighty acres.

Mr. LE BLOND. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of this bill.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 9, noes 51; not one fifth voting in the affirmative.

Before the result was announced,

Mr. ANCONA called for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes thirteen; not one fifth of a quorum.

So tellers were refused; and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. KASSON. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JULIAN] will yield to me for a moment, I desire to make a single remark.

I understand that the bill provides for allowing homesteads upon waste land in the southern States to persons who can take the oath of loyalty. I wish to say to my friend from Indiana that I think he proposes to extend this exclusion further than it has ever been extended heretofore. It seems to me that we ought to allow to every man who is willing and able to work the opportunity to go upon waste lands and earn his living. I hardly see the propriety of debarring a man who has been a rebel from the opportunity to earn his own bread by the sweat of his brow. If this is the effect of the bill it seems to me open to objection. I hope that my friend will not press it without at least some debate, so that we may understand the terms of the bill in this respect.

Mr. JULIAN. The proposition before the House is to extend the operation of the homestead law over the southern States. The homestead law of 1862 requires an oath of loyalty on the part of any man who enters land under it. This bill proposes that the same principle which has been applied to the North shall be extended to the South. In other words, as between those who have been loyal to the Government and those who have been rebels in arms against it the bill discriminates in favor of the former.

Mr. KASSON. May I ask my friend whether it is quite correct to say that the bill discriminates in favor of those who have been loyal? The lands are open to all. The loyal men will get them under any arrangement. The effect of the bill, it seems to me, is not discrimination in their favor, but an exclusion of men who have been in the rebel service.

Mr. JULIAN. The effect of the bill will be to prefer loyal to disloyal men, as between those two classes; and I think that we ought thus to discriminate.

Mr. KASSON. I should have no objection to declaring that in case of two applications for the same piece of land the loyal man should have the preference. But the bill in its present form proposes the complete exclusion of every man who has been disloyal.

Mr. JULIAN. I will state to the gentleman that in the whole extent of territory covered by this bill there is not land enough for the loyal men of the South, and I prefer that loyal men should have so much as there is. As matters stand now, the fact is notorious that loyal men are excluded by the disloyal throughout the South. I desire, as far as possible, to prevent this.

Mr. FINCK. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Indiana whether he proposes to except from this exclusion those who have been pardoned by the President's proclamation?

Mr. JULIAN. The bill makes no exception of that kind.

Mr. FINCK. Will the gentleman allow an amendment of that kind to be inserted in the bill?

Mr. JULIAN. I cannot yield for that purpose. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. FINCK. I move to lay the bill on the table, and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 26, nays 90, not voting 74; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Campbell, Chandler, Cooper, Dawson, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Aaron Harding, Hawkins, Hise, Hogan, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Kerr, Le Blond, Leftwich, McRuer, Nicholson, Ritter, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Taber, Trimble, and Andrew H. Ward—26.

So the House refused to lay the bill on the table.

During the vote,

Mr. CONKLING stated that Mr. Woodbridge, Mr. FARNSWORTH, and Mr. ELDRIDGE were absent attending a committee of conference.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, stated that his colleague, Mr. RICE, was detained at home by illness.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The question recurred on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. HILL. The word "voluntarily" should be inserted, so as to refer to those who voluntarily bore arms.

Mr. JULIAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time so that a motion to amend will be in order.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to House bill No. 1039, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1868, and requested a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. HENDERSON, Mr. MORRILL, and Mr. SHERMAN managers of said conference on its part.

HOMESTEADS IN SOUTHERN STATES—AGAIN.

The question recurred on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being taken, it was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. Now that the bill is open again for amendment, I wish to say there were men who were conscripted into the rebel service who seized the first opportunity to escape into our lines. A regiment I understand was in our service, commanded by an honorable member from Tennessee, [Mr. STOKES,] which was made up almost entirely of such conscripts.

I move to insert after the word "not" the word "voluntarily," so as to provide for those who were forced into the rebel service. At the end of the bill I also move to add the following:

Provided, That said oath shall not be required of any person who during the late war enlisted in the military or naval service of the United States, and who shall have been honorably discharged therefrom.

Mr. JULIAN. There may be those who were honorably discharged from our service and went into the rebel service afterward.

Mr. KASSON. There must have been few of them; but I will add—

And not thereafter have rendered any aid or comfort to the rebellion.

Mr. JULIAN. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. FINCK. I hope gentlemen will also include those who were pardoned by the President.

Mr. JULIAN. I cannot yield for any such purpose.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. KASSON's amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read a third time.

The House divided on the passage of the bill; and there were—ayes 64, noes 33.

Mr. ANCONA demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 97, nays 30, not voting 63; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Bingham, Blaine, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Defrees, Delano, Dixon, Dodge, Dumont, Eliot, Farquhar, Griswold, Hawkins, Hayes, Higby, Hill, Holmes, Hooper, Chester D. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Stephen F. Wilson, and Windom—97.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Campbell, Chanler, Cooper, Dawson, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Aaron Harding, Hise, Hogan, Edwin N. Harding, Harris, Hart, Henderson, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jones, Kasson, Ketcham, Laffin, Marston, McCullough, Moorhead, Noell, Patterson, Phelps, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Stevens, Stiwell, Strouse, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thornton, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Williams, James F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—63.

So the bill was passed.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. JULIAN. I ask unanimous consent of the House that to-morrow evening at half past seven o'clock the Committee on Public Lands shall have half an hour for the purpose of reporting a very important bill.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had disagreed to the amendment of the House to Senate bill No. 534, to provide for the allotment of the members of the Supreme Court among the circuits, and for the appointment of a marshal for the circuit.

BANKRUPT BILL.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the House proceed to business on the Speaker's table.

The motion was agreed to.

The first business on the Speaker's table was the consideration of the message of the Senate, insisting upon its amendments to the bankrupt bill and asking for a committee of conference.

Mr. JENCKES. I move that the House insist upon its disagreement and reciprocate the request of the Senate for a committee of conference.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to lay the bill on the table, and on that I call the yeas and nays.

On ordering the yeas and nays there were—ayes seventeen.

Mr. FINCK. I demand tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. FINCK and JENCKES.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes twenty-eight.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 65, nays 73, not voting 52; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Arnell, Baker, Bingham, Blaine, Bromwell, Broomall, Campbell, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Dawson, Defrees, Delano, Dumont, Eldridge, Finck, Garfield, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Hawkins, Hayes, Hill, Hise, Chester D. Hubbard, Julian, Kelso, Kerr, Koontz, Kuykendall, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Leftwich, Loan, Marshall, Maynard, McClurg, McKee, Mercer, Miller, Morrill, Moulton, Niblack, O'Neill, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Price, William H. Randall, Ritter, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Stevens, Stokes, Andrew H. Ward, William B. Washburn, Welker, James F. Wilson, and Stephen F. Wilson—65.

Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Hulburt, Humphrey, Hunter, Jenckes, Kasson, Kelley, Ketcham, Laffin, Latham, Longyear, Lynch, Marvin, McIndoe, McKuer, Moorhead, Morris, Newell, Pomeroy, Radford, John H. Rice, Scofield, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Spalding, Taber, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, Wentworth, Windom, Woodbridge, and Wright—73.

Rice, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Starr, Stiwell, Strouse, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thornton, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Whaley, Williams, and Winfield—52.

So the bill was not laid on the table.

During the roll-call,

Mr. PAINE stated that he was paired with Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, who would vote "no;" he [Mr. PAINE] would vote "ay."

Mr. EGGLESTON stated that he had paired with Mr. DRIGGS, who would vote "no;" he [Mr. EGGLESTON] would vote "ay."

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. JENCKES for a committee of conference, and it was agreed to; and Messrs. JENCKES, DAWES, and DAWSON were appointed on the part of the House.

RELIEF OF GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS.

Mr. SLOAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 220) for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels-of-war and steam-machinery having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate agree to the House amendment, with the following amendments:

After the word "same" in the fourth line insert the words "under contracts made after the 1st day of May, 1861, and prior to the 1st day of January, 1864."

Add to the House amendment the following amendments:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy, under the resolution, shall investigate the claim of W. H. Webb for constructing the steamer Dunderburg, applying the provisions of this resolution in such investigation, except that proper consideration shall be given to the increased cost incurred by said Webb by reason of any alteration in the plans and specifications for the Dunderburg made during the progress of the work, whether such alterations were provided for in the original contract or not, when payment for the same was not embraced in the contract price.

J. C. SLOAN,

C. DELANO,

Managers on the part of the House.

T. A. HENDRICKS,

H. B. ANTHONY,

W. T. WILLEY,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. SLOAN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUPREME COURT.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that the House take up the message last received from the Senate in regard to Senate bill No. 534, to provide for the allotment of the members of the Supreme Court among the circuits, and for the appointment of a marshal for the Supreme Court.

No objection being made, the message was taken up. The Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the House insist upon its amendment, and ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to; and Messrs. WILSON, of Iowa, WILLIAMS, and RADFORD were appointed conferees on the part of the House.

GOVERNMENT PROPERTY AT CAMP CHASE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the consideration of the amendment of the Senate to House joint resolution No. 266, granting certain public property to the State of Ohio.

The amendment of the Senate was to strike out the words "used in the erection of the State asylum for the idiotic," and insert in lieu thereof the words "appropriated by the State Legislature to the use and benefit of homes for disabled soldiers."

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that the House non-concur in the amendment, and ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to; and Messrs. GARFIELD, BLAINE, and HUNTER were appointed conferees on the part of the House.

INSPECTION OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

The next business in order on the Speaker's table was the consideration of the message of the Senate disagreeing to the amendment of the House to Senate bill No. 204, to provide for an annual inspection in Indian affairs, and for other purposes.

Mr. KASSON. I move that the House insist upon its amendment, and ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. ROSS. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the House recede.

Mr. KASSON. I simply wish the House to understand that this is the question we passed upon after full debate some days ago, and I hope the House will grant a committee of conference in order to see whether it is not possible to agree with the Senate upon such a system as shall combine the military jurisdiction, so far as the police government over the warlike Indians is concerned, with the peace establishment in the other direction. I think the importance of the subject demands that effort. I call the previous question.

Mr. ROSS. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. KASSON. If it does not take over five minutes. We have very little time.

Mr. ROSS. I am in hopes the House will concur in the Senate amendment. It is very apparent that unless this is done there will be no bill passed during this session to reorganize the Indian Bureau of the Government. It will be recollected that the measure was carried in this House by a very small majority—some three or four—to transfer this bureau to the military department. The committees that have had this question under examination concur with great unanimity in opposition to transferring it to the War Department, and for the purpose of trying to do something for the benefit of the Indians I hope in reorganizing this bureau the House will concur in the action of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Will the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Kasson] yield to me two or three minutes?

Mr. KASSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. The House will bear in mind that the original bill introduced here was one from the Senate providing for a system of inspection and superintendence to some extent in addition to the ordinary machinery of Indian affairs. The House struck out the entire bill and substituted one of an entirely different character, transferring the Indian Bureau to the War Department. For that substitute I voted, believing that it was desirable it should be so transferred. But it strikes me the two measures are not inconsistent, and as it seems to me there is no probability of our carrying through the two Houses at this late period a bill providing for the transfer proposed by the House, I do believe it is the part of wisdom that we concur in the original Senate bill, and provide for a system of inspection, leaving the transfer from the Interior to the War Department to be effected by a future Congress, as I trust it will be.

Mr. KASSON. The objection to that proposition is that it does not accomplish the object sought by the House at all; it still leaves the Indians under the control of the civil establishment and continues the present evil. I have much more hope of reconciling the Senate than my friend has.

Mr. ROSS. We have very little time. I hope the gentleman will not discuss this matter much. [Laughter.]

Mr. KASSON. I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was, upon the motion of Mr. WINDOM, that the House recede from its disagreement with the Senate upon this bill.

The question was taken; and upon a division, there were—ayes 50, noes 58.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. WINDOM called for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 59, nays 82, not voting 49; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Arnell, Baker, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Bundy, Campbell, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Cooper, Davis, Donnelly, Farquhar, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grinnell, Hale, Aaron Harding, Hawkins, Higby, Hise, Hogan, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Jenckes, Julian, Kelso, Kerr, Kuykendall, Le Blond, Leftwich, Marshall, Myers, Newell, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Paine, Perham, Plants, Price, Radford, Ritter, Ross, Shanklin, Stokes, Taber, Francis Thomas, Trimble, Van Aernam, Andrew H. Ward, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Windom, and Woodbridge—59.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Ancona, Baldwin, Bergen, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Brewster, Buckland, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Culom, Darling, Dawes, Dawson, Deftrees, Delano, Deming, Dixon, Dumont, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Garfield, Griswold, Abner C. Harding, Hayes, Hill, Holmes, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Kasson, Kelley, Ketcham, Kootz, Laffin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marvin, Maynard, McKee, McRuer, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Moulton, O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Pike, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Spalding, Stevens, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Welker, Wentworth, Williams, James F. Wilson, and Wright—82.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Barker, Benjamin, Boutwell, Boyer, Broomall, Chanler, Culver, Denison, Dodge, Driggs, Eckley, Eldridge, Ferry, Harris, Hart, Henderson, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, Humphrey, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jones, Marston, McClurg, McCullough, McIndoe, Phelps, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rogers, Rousseau, Starr, Stilwell, Strouse, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thornton, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Stephen F. Wilson, and Winfield—49.

So the motion of Mr. WINDOM was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. KASSON, that the House still further insist upon its disagreement, and ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote last taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as the conferees on the part of the House, Mr. KASSON, Mr. SCHENCK, and Mr. WINDOM.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

The next business upon the Speaker's table was the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 746, for the organization of land districts in the Territories of Arizona, Idaho, Utah, and Montana.

The amendment of the Senate was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

He shall have as proper allowance for clerk hire, office rent, and fuel what is now allowed by law to the surveyor general of Oregon.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the public lands within the Territories of Montana and Arizona, to which the Indian title is or shall be extinguished, shall each, respectively, constitute a new land district, to be called the Montana district, and the Arizona district, respectively. And the President is hereby authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a register and receiver of public moneys for each of said districts, respectively, who shall be required to reside at the places at which such officers shall be located, and they shall have the same power, perform the same duties, and be entitled to the same compensation as are or may be prescribed by law for the regulation of land offices of the United States in other Territories.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to locate said offices of surveyor general and register and receiver of public moneys.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Territory of Arizona is hereby attached to the surveying district of California.

Mr. JULIAN. I move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendment, and ask the appointment of a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

LIGHT-HOUSES.

Mr. LONGYEAR. I move that the House concur in the amendments of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LONGYEAR moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

On page 10, after "and" in line seven insert "to continue the survey."

On page 11, line one, insert "in accordance with the recommendation of General J. H. Wilson in his report of January 12, 1867."

Mr. EGGLESTON. I move that the House concur in all the amendments except the first one, and to non-concur in that. That is an error of the Senator from Ohio in supposing we made a mistake when he was mistaken himself.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I hope we will non-concur. The Senate have put back all those objectionable things and a good many more that the House refused to sanction the other day.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania the things to which he refers are not in this bill. The appropriation for Des Moines rapids has been reduced from $1,000,000 to $500,000.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I was not paying attention at the time, and perhaps I may be mistaken.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I would not force a vote on any gentleman that was not fair.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIEUTENANT JOHN H. HAMLIN.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was the consideration of the following amendments of the Senate to House joint resolution No. 268, to pay Lieutenant John H. Hamlin for military services:

Strike out "eighth" and insert "first." Strike out "January" and insert "July;" and also strike out "being the date on which he joined his regiment and entered on duty as a second lieutenant;" so that the joint resolution will then read:

That the Paymaster General of the United States Army be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to John H. Hamlin, of Michigan, late a first lieutenant in the seventh regiment of Michigan cavalry, the full pay and allowances of a second lieutenant of cavalry for the time from the 1st day of July, 1863, to the 23rd day of March, 1864, when he was mustered in as a first lieutenant.

Mr. SCHENCK. I think the Senate are mistaken, but we had better concur in the amendments and pass the bill.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

RICHARD CHENERY.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was the following Senate amendment to House bill No. 588, for the relief of Richard Chenery.

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to examine the claim of Richard Chenery, of California, for $8,000 alleged to be due him for beef furnished to George P. Armstrong, temporary Indian agent for the tribes of Indians on Russian river and at Clear Lake, and for which said Armstrong executed receipts, dated March 23 and May 23, 1852, and if he shall believe, from such examination, that the property was furnished in good faith and that the Government is justly indebted to the claimant, as alleged, he shall cause the amount so found to be due to be paid to the said Chenery or his legal representatives: Provided, That in no event shall any greater sum than $8,000 be paid: And provided further, That the sum paid shall be accepted in full and lasting discharge of this claim.

Mr. WINDOM moved that the House concur.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAYMENT OF COMPOUND-INTEREST NOTES.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was the following amendment from the Senate to House bill No. 1220, to provide ways and means for the payment of the compound-interest notes:

Strike out the following:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to redeem compound-interest notes with the accrued interest, and issue therefor United States legal-tender notes without interest, not exceeding in amount $100,000,000.

Insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 1. That for the purpose of redeeming and retiring any compound-interest notes outstanding the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue temporary loan certificates in the manner prescribed by section four of the act entitled "An act to authorize the issue of United States notes and for the redemption or funding thereof, and for funding the floating debt of the United States," approved February 25, 1862, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding three per cent. per annum, principal and interest payable in lawful money on demand; and said certificates of temporary loan may constitute and be held by any national bank holding or owning the same as a part of the reserve provided for in sections thirty-one and thirty-two of the act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," approved June 3, 1864: Provided, That not less than two fifths of the entire reserve of such bank shall consist of lawful money of the United States: And provided further, That the amount of such temporary certificates, at any time outstanding, shall not exceed $100,000,000.

SEC. 2. That no national bank shall either pay or receive interest on any portion of its reserve, when deposited in any other national bank, and the compound-interest notes shall not be held or counted as a part of their reserve after the 1st day of July next.

Mr. PRICE. I move to non-concur in the amendment of the Senate, and that a conference be requested on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa because the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] who reported the bill is absent on account of the death of his father-in-law, and has left the bill in his charge.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. The bill belongs to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. CONKLING. If I get an opportunity I shall move to concur.

Mr. LYNCH. I move to lay the bill on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine moves to lay the bill on the table, but the Chair cannot entertain that motion as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PRICE. I move to non-concur in the amendments of the Senate, and to ask a committee of conference.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to concur, and on that motion I wish to say a word or two.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PRICE. I wish to say a few words only if I can have the attention of the House.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask the Chair if the first question is not on the motion to concur?

The SPEAKER. It will be unless a motion to lay upon the table shall be made; but the gentleman cannot move to concur while the gentleman from Iowa is upon the floor.

Mr. CONKLING. I know I cannot make the motion while the gentleman from Iowa is upon the floor.

Mr. PRICE. I thought the gentleman could not make the motion while I had the floor.

Mr. CONKLING. We agree about that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman could make the motion even after the previous question was seconded.

Mr. CONKLING. The previous question has not been moved.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is aware of that; but the motion could be made even under the operation of the previous question. It has been held so repeatedly.

Mr. PRICE resumed the floor.

Mr. LYNCH. What has become of my motion to lay the bill on the table?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa was upon the floor, and therefore the gentleman could not make the motion.

Mr. LYNCH. The Chair entertained the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is mistaken. The Chair could not recognize the gentleman from Maine when the gentleman from Iowa was upon the floor.

Mr. POMEROY. I would inquire if any committee of the House has the paternity of this bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. PRICE. Then it must be an orphan. [Laughter.]

Mr. POMEROY. I do not seek to father it at all.

Mr. PRICE. I am willing to father it.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I rise to a question of order. I would inquire if this bill is not a bill reported to the House by the Committee on Banking and Currency. The Speaker will remember that the question was raised in regard to this very bill, whether the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency was not entitled to report it, and the Chair said he would recognize his right unless he waived it; and the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. POMEROY,] then waived his right so as to allow the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] a member of the committee, to report the bill.

The SPEAKER. That is substantially a point of order which the Chair has already overruled, and he again overrules it on the distinct ground that when the bill with the Senate amendment was first reported by the Clerk, no gentleman in the Hall rose to claim the floor except the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE,] and the Chair recognized him. The Chair cannot recognize any gentleman in his seat, neither the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency nor the gentleman from Massachusetts. [Laughter.]

Mr. POMEROY. I raise the question of order whether any person has liberty to rise and move to make a disposition of a bill when it is announced from the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. Certainly some gentleman must make a motion in regard to it.

Mr. POMEROY. Have not the committee from which the bill has emanated priority over other members?

The SPEAKER. Yes, if they claim the floor.

Mr. POMEROY. I would inquire if this bill did not belong to the Committee on Banking and Currency?

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman who is chairman of that committee claim the floor by addressing the Chair when the bill was taken up?

Mr. POMEROY. I did not hear it announced.

The SPEAKER. That was not the fault of the Clerk or the Speaker. It is presumed by the rules that every gentleman is listening to what is going on in the House, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] was the only gentleman who claimed the floor when this bill came up.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I wish to state that I did hear the title of this bill read at the Clerk's desk; but it never struck me that any gentleman not a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency would have the presumption to claim the floor, [laughter,] and so I waited for the chairman of the committee [Mr. POMEROY] to rise.

Mr. PRICE. I think I can explain this matter to the satisfaction of the House in five minutes.

Mr. STEVENS. Will the gentleman from Iowa allow me to say that this bill never belonged to the Committee on Banking and Currency. I made the bill which went to the Senate. It passed through the House on my motion to amend, and there was not a vestige of banking and currency left in the bill, and I hope there never will be. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRICE again resumed the floor.

Mr. PAINE. I rise to a point of order. I heard the Speaker state a moment ago that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LYNCH] moved to lay the bill upon the table. I agree with the Speaker that it was impossible for him to make that motion while the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] occupied the floor, but I inferred from the statement of the Chair that for a time at least the gentleman from Iowa had yielded the floor to enable the gentleman from Maine to make that motion. Either therefore the Chair was mistaken in supposing that he had yielded the floor, or the motion to lay on the table was properly made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order, and will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that he is mistaken as to the facts. The Chair repeated the motion of the gentleman from Maine, but stated that that motion could not be made while the gentleman from Iowa was upon the floor. The first part of the sentence the gentleman from Wisconsin heard; the remainder, it would appear, he did not hear.

Mr. PRICE. I wish to say to the House in the first place that when I took the floor on this bill, I did it, not because I am upon the Committee on Banking and Currency, not because I had any better right to take the floor than any other gentleman present, but for the reason that I had received a letter from Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, who would certainly have had a right to take the floor if he had been present, stating that on account of a death in his family, he was compelled to go home and wished I would take charge of the bill. I suppose that will be considered a very good reason by every one present; even by my amiable and venerable friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOOPER.] [Laughter.]

In reference to yielding the floor, I have learned one thing since I have been a member of this House, and that is that after a man takes the floor on any question, it is exceedingly dangerous for him to take his seat unless he wishes to relinquish the floor, and therefore I have kept my feet ever since I rose and moved a non-concurrence in the amendment of the Senate and to ask a committee of concurrence.

Now, having fixed the preliminaries, I want to say to the House that the only question to be settled in this matter is the question whether the country is prepared to pay several million dollars in the shape of interest for years of the coming future.

Mr. KUYKENDALL. For the benefit of the banks.

Mr. PRICE. Yes, as my friend very properly and justly suggests, for the benefit of the banks; to place upon the statute-book of the nation a declaration that we will pay out of the pockets of the people to the bankers of the country four or five million dollars in the shape of interest when it can be just as well and wisely avoided by passing a bill for the issue of non-interest-bearing notes.

The whole question is in a nut-shell; it might be amplified and elaborated for an hour, but that is all there is in it. The currency of the country will remain, as I think I showed a few days ago in discussing this bill, at about the same volume, except the $4,000,000 now authorized to be retired and the only question; talk about it as you will, view it from what stand-point you may, for this Congress to decide is whether they will have notes paying interest, taxing the people of the country with that burden, or whether they will authorize the issue of notes bearing no interest to fill the vacuum occasioned by the retirement of the compound-interest notes. It is for that reason, and that alone, that I propose to non-concur in the amendment of the Senate and ask a committee of conference, believing that the matter can be amicably arranged between the two Houses.

I now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.]

Mr. CONKLING. I have moved that the House concur in the amendments of the Senate, not because I believe it necessary to pass this bill in order to accomplish the purpose which the Senate have in view, but because I believe concurrence with the Senate is likely to prevent the passage of a bill which I should deem a disaster. There being outstanding a large sum of compound-interest notes, so-called, one hundred millions and upward, a large part of which is held by the national banks as their required reserve, three ways present themselves of making provision for them.

One way is to take from the Treasury some part of that gold which at times men have been troubled to divine the reason of holding, and with it pay as far as it will pay compound-interest notes at maturity, in order that they may be canceled and destroyed, trusting to the income of the Treasury from internal revenue, customs duties, and miscellaneous sources to redeem the residue of these notes as they fall due from time to time.

Another mode is to exercise a power which I think the Secretary of the Treasury already has by existing law, the same power conferred in one form in the amendment of the Senate, namely, to issue certificates of indebtedness of some sort. This power can be found in the statutes now, I think, with only one restriction—

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, (in his seat.) Certificates of temporary loan.

Mr. CONKLING. A friend behind me says "certificates of temporary loan." I will not struggle about phrases or terms. I have not affirmed that they should be what are technically known as "certificates of indebtedness," "clearing-house certificates," "exchange bills," or "certificates of temporary loan." It is enough for my purpose if the laws as they stand invest the Secretary of the Treasury with the power to issue evidences of indebtedness with only one restriction, to wit, that they shall not bear more than six per cent. interest. The issue of such securities with any rate of interest, however low, and not above six per cent. is, as I understand it, warranted by existing statutes, and thus a second mode is found of retiring the compound-interest notes at the lowest attainable rate of interest upon the substitutes taking their place.

I may say, in passing, that we are not afflicted with a Secretary of the Treasury who is tender-footed in marching up to the line which Congress sets for him, and marching over it whenever he chooses to do so. We passed a bill at the last session restricting to $4,000,000 a month the maximum of legal-tender notes which the Secretary of the Treasury might retire and cancel; and yet in the face of that act, if my recollection serves me truly, when the day had come that the utmost total amount he might legally have retired could not exceed $20,000,000, he had in fact retired over thirty-six million dollars. Some statutes with some officials are rather loosening than binding. I mention this to show that the House need not be afraid that the Secretary of the Treasury is too abstinent of jurisdiction to avail himself of all the powers he possesses.

But there is another mode of retiring these compound-interest notes; and that is, to issue more paper money, legal-tender notes as they are called, under the specious idea of saving interest to the people of this country. Sir, there was once a great deal to be said upon the question of interest and how to save it; a great deal which I once vainly struggled to obtain the privilege of saying in this Hall when the national bank bill was first on its passage; a great deal which has never yet been answered by the financiers or the statesmen who originated that measure, and I beg leave to say that in my judgment it never will be successfully answered except by the vested rights which have intervened and the good faith which has become plighted. But the proposition now is that in order to save interest we can afford at this day, when we have descended safely in the scale of prices from gold at 280 toward par, when we have come down somewhere within the reach or at least near the hopes of the poor, to go once more into the business of kite-flying and issue suddenly another hundred million of legal-tender notes, inflating the currency to that extent, and sending prices wild again for the purpose, forsooth, of furnishing the Secretary of the Treasury with the means of taking up these compound-interest notes when they shall become due.

The last act issuing legal-tender notes contained a provision that no more should ever be issued upon any pretext, and this provision was in the nature of a compact, a covenant with the people of the country, which should be inviolable. Why should we violate it now?

We do not know precisely when these notes fall due; and I understand that in this respect we are as well informed as anybody else, because I am told that in paying off these compound-interest notes no record has been kept in the Treasury Department of the notes taken up and canceled nor of the dates of those notes. Hence no one can tell the dates of those that are outstanding, nor when they fall due. We know that they fall due within a range of months, and we know that they fall due in amounts of a certain general range; but precisely when or precisely in what amounts we know not, because the Department as I understand is deficient in that particularity and correctness in this respect which can be found in the rudest and simplest mode of keeping accounts. We may as well understand how these matters are conducted.

But finishing what I intended to say: as the gentleman loaning me the floor seems to wish to resume it, my purpose in moving to concur in the Senate amendments is to bring the House at once to a vote upon the question whether we are ready, in the face of the power already conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury, enabling him to provide for these notes in the most economical way that the markets of the world permit, whether we are prepared, in the face of provisions already inscribed upon the statute-book, to say that no surplus gold shall be devoted to this purpose, that no existing resources shall be employed, that no existing power shall be invoked, but that we, assuming the responsibility of administering the Treasury Department, while the control will nevertheless remain in the hands of the Minister of Finance, will indicate and insist upon a policy which must inevitably inflate the currency, which must inevitably toss values wildly up and cut us loose from those moorings which are slowly bringing down prices from starvation rates somewhere near the reach of the poor and of those who are compelled to live upon fixed incomes.

With one other remark I will cease to encroach further upon the courtesy of the gentleman from Iowa. I am not one of those who believe, as I understand some persons do, that we can with impunity descend at a single jump or fall from that point to which we have ascended upon the wings of expansion down to the basis of hard money. On the contrary, I believe that if the return to specie payments were brought about suddenly and remorselessly a period of financial gloom would pass over the country as an eclipse passes over the sun, leaving the land strewn with evidences of commercial disaster. But, sir, I also believe that it is safely within the power and clearly within the duty of the Government to fix its face like flint in the direction of a return to wholesome values and to specie currency, to a time when a piece of paper bearing the impress of the Government will be the symbol of real money behind it, and not merely an irredeemable promise to pay.

Where that point is in the future, perhaps "in the sea of years," I do not undertake to say. Suffice it to know that we are drifting, nay, rowing in the wrong direction, when, without the shadow of necessity, we take upon ourselves to direct the Minister of Finance to add to the currency of the country $100,000,000 more, with all the chances that may be involved in the proceeding.

I hope the House will concur in the Senate amendment, because we give but little additional power, but leave the question substantially where it is, and avoid the danger that a conference committee will report in favor of the issue of more paper money.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope the gentleman from Iowa will give me five minutes—not as measured by my friend from New York—but five minutes.

Mr. PRICE. Certainly, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not understand the logic of the gentleman from New York. He says the Secretary has the power now. If so, why give it to him again?

Mr. CONKLING. Does the gentleman ask that question to be answered? I should like to answer it, and I can do it in one word. Everybody knows the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE,] moving this conference committee, will be chairman of it, and that the committee appointed under parliamentary law will be in favor of the bill as passed by this House, which is for $100,000,000 more of currency. That is why I do not want to concur.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman from Iowa has so clearly stated this matter that it is hardly worth while to repeat it. There are $100,000,000 legal-tender notes out to-day bearing six per cent. interest. That all admit. What do we propose? We propose, in lieu of that $100,000,000 legal-tender notes, bearing six per cent. interest, to issue $100,000,000 of greenbacks, bearing no interest, to take the other up. And yet there are wise men about here who say that is inflation—wise men, who do not see that we save nearly six millions by it.

I cannot understand the gentleman's logic. I suppose I am obtuse, and will have to go to night-school to learn; but according to my present benighted ideas the objection made is the most absurd thing in the world. We are now retiring $48,000,000 a year, and when you pass the House bill you leave that contraction of $4,000,000 a month still to go on. Some gentlemen seem to wish to create this notion of inflation for the benefit of the speculators. The House passed on this the other day, and it then decided by the yeas and nays, in the most emphatic manner, in favor of the proposition I advocate. I do not suppose, like a set of whipped school-boys, we are to change now and vote the other way.

Mr. PRICE. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. CONKLING. The gentleman from Ohio allows me a moment of his time. The gentleman from Pennsylvania does not understand: he says that when you take up $100,000,000 of loan or investment and issue in its place $100,000,000 of money to circulate you inflate the currency. Everybody else in this House will understand that when you take up securities bearing interest, held and hoarded in the vaults of the banks, $100,000,000 of loan, and put into circulation $100,000,000 of money, you do inflate the currency. I am obliged to the gentleman from Ohio for his courtesy, and will not trespass further on his time.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, in one hour this House will dispose of one of the most important measures of the session next to reconstruction, and I wish to say to the distinguished and venerable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] that I am willing to go to his school and learn of him, but I appeal from his teachings of to-day to his teachings of three years ago.

When the bill was brought forward in the House in 1862, the gentleman is recorded in the Globe as opening his speech as follows:

"Mr. Speaker, this bill is a matter of necessity and not of choice. I hope this issue of $150,000,000 will be the last. I would be grieved to see any further expansion of the currency."

That was in the early spring of 1862, when but $60,000,000 of United States notes had been issued, and when he was proposing to issue $150,000,000 more. That $150,000,000 was issued, and $100,000,000 more, and $400,000,000 more, deluge on deluge, until the enormous total has swelled to $1,100,000,000! It is now nearly $900,000,000, and yet the gentleman talks of wanting more. I know of nothing which better illustrates the mania for paper money than the "Rum Maniac," as portrayed by Dr. Nott. The poor victim whom rum had ruined in family and property was in the mad-house, and in his insane ravings called on all the friends of his early years to save him; but the refrain of every prayer was—

"Will no one pity, no one come?
Oh give me rum, oh give me rum."

No one came to satisfy his burning thirst, but at last in his delirium he saw amid the flames of hell seething cauldrons of fiery rum, and springing forward, shouted with exultation:

"Open your gates, I come, I come!
In hell they never want for rum."

[Laughter.]

The vast volume of irredeemable paper money now afloat has played the chief part in disturbing all the normal relations of business. Business men and legislators have taken paper money in such overwhelming doses that they are crazed, and like the lotus-eaters wish to return no more to solid values. Forgetting the past, forgetting their own teachings, their votes and their records of a year ago, they join in the crazy cry, "Paper money," "Oh, give us more paper money!"

Why, sir, at the last session but six members of the House were found to vote against a resolution that we ought to return to specie payments, and to do it we must contract the currency. That was the almost unanimous opinion of this House at the beginning of the last session. We commenced the work of contraction cautiously and slowly, but when these gentlemen found it pressed them only a little they cry out like the maniac: "Press us no more;" "give us more paper money." A man's hand is hopelessly shattered; it must be amputated or he dies; but the moment the surgeon's knife touches the skin he blubbers like a boy, and cries "Don't cut it; take away the knife; the natural laws of circulation will amputate it by and by." Yes, gangrene and death will soon settle the difficulty and save him from the hurt of the knife.

I hope this House will resist the clamor on this subject and struggle to prevent the evil that has always followed inflation, and return by steady degrees toward resumption of specie payment, not rapidly, not suddenly, but by a steady, courageous process of contracting the volume of the currency.

From 1834 to 1861 the average amount of paper currency in this country was but $134,000,000. It is to-day seven times as much, and yet gentlemen ask for more. In 1861, under a system of free banking in many of the States, when hundreds of banks were struggling to push their paper into circulation, they could not get the people to use more than $202,000,000 of paper money; but gentlemen are courageous enough to affirm that $900,000,000 are not now enough. Eighty million dollars of compound-interest notes have been used as bank reserves without authority of law, and it is proposed to legalize that amount of inflation and $20,000,000 more.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PRICE. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. POMEROY.]

Mr. POMEROY. I wish simply to say to the members of the House that I propose to deal with this question as a simple practical business question, laying aside all theories in regard to gold and paper money. The House very well understands that I am desirous of the most rapid possible contraction toward a specie basis; and yet I have not favored and have not been disposed to favor, during this session of Congress, any measure which looked toward any greater contraction than has already been provided by preëxisting law. But we are brought to face this practical question: there were issued of these interest-bearing greenbacks $150,000,000, with the expectation that after the interest had accumulated upon them to some extent they would cease to float as currency in the country. That expected result was attained; that paper soon ceased to become a part of the circulation of the country. One hundred millions of it are now held by the banks as their reserve fund or otherwise, on which the Government is paying interest at six per cent. compounded. A large part of that paper is falling due this current year. Whatever power the Secretary of the Treasury may have, and I agree fully with my colleague on that subject, I understand that he requires further legislation by Congress before issuing loan certificates or certificates of indebtedness.

Now, then, I appeal to the candor and good sense of this House to sustain me in saying that neither the Thirty-Ninth nor the Fortieth Congress will authorize the issue of one dollar more of greenback currency. That is a fact, and we must look at it as such. I do not care whether men are in favor of expansion or contraction, more greenback currency cannot be had. The gentleman from Pennsylvania knows as well as I do that neither this Congress nor the next will issue another dollar.

Now, what is to be the result? If this bill of the Senate is defeated the Secretary of the Treasury must pay off these interest-bearing notes which are now held by the banks as a reserve, and the banks must make the reserve good by withdrawing from circulation legal tenders to supply their place; so that instead of an expansion there will come a contraction within a year that will make the bones of business crack.

Now, I for one desire to be relieved from the responsibility of all this. I repeat, I am for contraction, for the fastest possible contraction, and I have favored this bill of the Senate because I wish there might be contraction no faster than the business interests of the country can stand with safety. But if, in this struggle for further expansion, this bill is defeated, then no legislation can be had in regard to this matter, then there must come contraction; and let the responsibility rest with those who claim to be in favor of expansion, and not with us who claim to be in favor of an honest, fair, moderate contraction.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] is still entitled to the floor.

Mr. PRICE. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. LYNCH.]

Mr. LYNCH. I do not propose to go into a discussion of this question in the three minutes allowed me; but I wish simply to say that the bill now before us is substantially the same that was voted down the other day in this House, or rather that for which the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] was substituted. That bill went back to the Senate, and they returned to us precisely the same bill; and now upon that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] proposes to have a committee of conference.

Now, sir, I have no sort of confidence in any favorable result from a committee of conference upon this bill at this time; and if the House vote down that proposition, as I hope they will, I shall move, as I attempted to move when the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] was on the floor, to lay this whole matter on the table.

The compound-interest notes for which this bill proposes to provide will not mature until December of the present year; and by that time the Fortieth Congress will be in session and can deal with this matter much better than we can deal with it here now under the marked disagreement which exists among gentlemen upon this side of the House. Therefore, if the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] does not prevail, I will move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask the gentlemen from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] to yield to me for five minutes.

Mr. PRICE. I will say to the gentleman from Vermont that I cannot possibly do so, in justice to the other gentleman who have appealed to me to yield them portions of my time. There are not less than twenty of them; and the friends of the bill are finding fault with me because I have yielded my time so far to the opponents of it.

A MEMBER. Has the bill any friends?

Mr. PRICE. Yes, it appears to have some; and like most measures and most men, its friends increase in number in proportion to the growth of its popularity and the prospects of its success. A short time ago this bill was without father or mother; and now there are at least fifty men who are anxious to be both father and mother to it. [Laughter.] I think the House will agree with me.

Mr. HOOPER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment. I wish to state—

Mr. PRICE. I cannot yield to the gentleman now. I think I will not be charged with being unreasonable in refusing to yield further when it is remembered that the opponents of this bill have occupied nearly all the time that has been spent in the discussion of it.

Now, sir, we have had this subject treated in almost every possible way. One gentleman has gone up into the ethereal regions to a point to which the keenest vision can scarcely penetrate. My friend from Ohio, on the other hand, has gone for his illustrations down into that region of despair from whence those who go there are said never to return. [Laughter.] The discussion has raged—

"From grave to gay, from lively to severe;" and gentlemen have attempted by all the arts of rhetoric and oratory to bring this bill into disrepute. But after all that has been said, after all these various kinds of attack upon it, we come back to the naked, plain, common-sense proposition, "Will this country continue to pay annually from three to seven million dollars for a circulating medium, or shall we have a circulating medium without any interest?" Hide it as you may, dodge it as you will, that is the question, and you cannot avoid it. And when gentlemen upon this floor say that this is a proposition to inflate the currency, I ask them to show me, either by figures or by rhetoric, how it comes that if you take $100,000,000 of greenbacks that are bearing interest out of the vaults of the banks of the country, and at once put back into those vaults $100,000,000 of legal-tender notes bearing no interest, you thereby inflate the currency?

Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to another fact. My friend upon the left, [Mr. CONKLING,] with an eloquence that I can never hope to equal, insists that we are out upon a sea of inflation, boundless, fathomless, without a bottom or a shore. The chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, [Mr. POMEROY,] on the other hand, claims that this bill proposes a contraction that will ruin the country in a very short period.

Now, sir, any bill that will allow two gentlemen as eminent for their abilities as these gentlemen are to prove two diametrically different propositions in regard to it, from the same stand-point, must be a measure fraught either with great danger or great good to the country—which is to result from this bill I leave it for this House to determine.

In one moment it expands beyond the reach of human calculation; in the very next moment, an opponent of the bill taking the very same ground, but viewing the subject from a different stand-point, there is contraction to such an extent that no man can find a dollar in his pocket. Now, the very fact that gentlemen who are opposed to this bill are driven to such straits as these, in my judgment, ought to prove that their ground is not tenable, and that this bill as it comes to us from the Senate ought not to be allowed to pass.

Now, I will say to members of this House that if the amendment of the Senate is non-concurred in, and a committee of conference is charged with the consideration of this subject, in my opinion this bill will be placed in some such shape as will provide for the proper employment of this reserved fund which my friend from New York [Mr. CONKLING] is so anxious to get out of the Treasury. And I will say to him that I agree with him entirely in regard to the use to be made of that reserve fund; as I agree also with him in a great deal of what he has said; but not in all. I take all the sugar that he has put about the pill, but I am opposed to taking the pill itself.

A committee of conference can so arrange this bill as not only to allow but to compel the Secretary of the Treasury—I do not like to use the word "compel" in reference to a public officer and functionary, but I will use it in this case—to compel the Secretary of the Treasury to use the surplus fund in the Treasury for the purpose of retiring those compound-interest notes, and to issue legal-tender notes bearing no interest no faster than will be absolutely necessary to take up the amount of compound-interest notes falling due over and beyond what the surplus fund in the Treasury can take up. If that can be done I think we will have accomplished a good work. I do not say it can be done; I only say it may be done, and if so it will be "a consummation most devoutly to be wished."

I will close all I now propose to say by repeating what I said at the outset of my remarks: that by this proposition we put upon the country legal-tender notes bearing no interest, which take no money out of the pockets of the tax-payers, in the place of the compound-interest notes, upon which we are now paying interest at the rate of about eight million dollars a year. And if this bill, or one like it, shall not become a law, we will be compelled to fund these compound-interest notes into long bonds, upon which we should have to pay about the same amount of interest; all of which would be saved to the country by retiring these compound-interest notes, by the issue of legal-tender notes bearing no interest.

I now call the previous question upon this question, and hope it will be seconded by the House, and that we shall now come to a vote.

Mr. LYNCH. I move to lay this bill upon the table.

Mr. CONKLING. I hope the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LYNCH] will withdraw that motion and let us first take a vote upon seconding the previous question.

Mr. MORRILL. I would inquire of the Chair if the previous question should not be seconded would there not then be an opportunity for me and others to occupy five minutes or so in debating this bill?

The SPEAKER. If the motion to lay the bill upon the table should not prevail, and the call for the previous question should not be seconded, then the bill would be open to discussion. But the Chair cannot now say whom he would then feel bound to recognize as being entitled to the floor.

Mr. CONKLING. I rise to a question of order. Even if the call for the previous question should be seconded, would it not be in order for the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LYNCH] at any time afterward to move to lay this bill on the table?

The SPEAKER. That is hardly a question of order. But the Chair will state that if the motion to lay on the table is now withdrawn it would be in order for the gentleman from Maine, or any other gentleman, to renew it, even after the previous question should be seconded, if he could get the opportunity.

Mr. LYNCH. I insist upon my motion to lay this bill upon the table; and upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 13, nays 127, not voting 50; as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The question recurred on seconding the demand for the previous question.

On the question there were—yeas 81, noes 29.

Mr. MORRILL. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MORRILL and PRICE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 77, noes 31.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first question is upon the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

So the House refused to concur in the amendment of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion that the House non-concur and ask the appointment of a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PRICE moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

STATUE OF GENERAL WINFIELD SCOTT.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate amendments to joint resolution (H. R. No. 205) for the erection of an equestrian statue to the memory of Brevet Lieutenant General Winfield Scott.

The amendments were read, as follows:

"After the word 'hereby' in line one, page 1, insert 'authorized and.'"

In line two, page 1, strike out "and authorized." Strike out all after the word "placed" in line six, page 1, and insert "on Franklin Square, in the city of Washington, or such other place in the said city as the Secretary of War may designate."

Mr. BINGHAM. I move that the House concur.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1173) entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes," with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

And then, on motion of Mr. CONKLING, (at ten o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITION.

The following petition was presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committee:

By Mr. CULLOM: The petition of numerous citizens of McLean county, Illinois, asking Congress to stop by proper legislation the further contraction of the currency.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 21, 1867.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. YATES presented the credentials of Hon. LYMAN TRUMBULL, elected a Senator by the Legislature of the State of Illinois for the term of six years commencing on the 4th day of March, 1867; which were read and ordered to be filed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILSON presented resolutions of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Union of Washington city, District of Columbia, remonstrating against the passage of any bounty act which shall deduct the amount of State, county, or other local bounties from the Government allowance, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of North Carolina, remonstrating against the exclusion from the bounty of the Government of that class of soldiers who served in the Union armies and had previously been connected with the armies of the rebellion; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. YATES presented a petition of soldiers of Illinois regiments, praying that a bounty of eight and one third dollars per month may be allowed to all soldiers who served in the Union Army during the late rebellion, for the time they served, deducting the amount of bounty already received; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. EDMUNDS presented the petition of Sylvanus Blodget, a soldier of the war of 1812, praying for an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ANTHONY. I desire to present a petition from citizens of Doniphan county, Kansas. I do not know why it is sent to me unless it is that I am from one of the States to be benefited by the change proposed. It is a petition for reconstructing the boundaries of the States. The petitioners suggest that the map would be very greatly improved by adding to Rhode Island that portion of Massachusetts which lies east and south of the island; and as that part of Massachusetts was all stolen from Rhode Island originally I think that part of the proposition is very judicious.

Mr. CONNESS. To whom do they propose to give the rest of Massachusetts? [Laughter.]

Mr. ANTHONY. They do not interfere with California, but they request that Delaware shall have all the eastern shore of Maryland, and that Maryland shall be compensated out of Virginia, with a strip of Pennsylvania; and that Wisconsin shall have the upper peninsula of Michigan, which the petitioners think would make the map of the United States more geometrical. I suppose that this petition ought to go to the Committee on Reconstruction, but I have not entire confidence that that committee would consider it properly, and I therefore move that it lie upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I present a memorial of citizens of Michigan, remonstrating against any curtailment of the national currency with the view of a return to specie payments within a limited time, and against the passage of any act requiring the national banks to redeem their circulation in New York or prohibiting them from paying or receiving interest on bank balances. As that subject will not probably come before any committee at the present session, I move that this memorial lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to present resolutions of the Legislature of Maine, relative to the ship-building interest of that State. I will read them:

Resolved, That this Legislature views with alarm the depressed and suffering condition of the ship-building interests of the State, which condition has arisen, in a large degree, from the heavy duties imposed by Congress upon the foreign materials entering into the construction of ships, and other burdens imposed by Government, and which are depriving our ship-builders of a successful competition with foreign-built ships, especially with those of the British North American Provinces.

Resolved, That the memorial to Congress, adopted by the ship-builders of Maine, assembled in convention at Augusta on the 30th and 31st days of January last, in which is set forth the depressed and suffering condition of the ship-building and ship-owning interests of this State, as having been caused by the onerous burdens imposed by the Government, and indicating in what manner relief should be afforded, should receive from Congress that attention which the great importance of the interests involved demands.

Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to use their best efforts to procure such legislation as will afford to the ship-builders and ship-owners of Maine that relief which they so ardently desire.

Resolved, That the Governor be, and is hereby, requested to forward a copy of these resolves, with a copy of said memorial, to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State.

In connection with these resolutions of the Legislature of Maine, I desire to present to the Senate the memorial of a committee appointed by a convention of ship-builders and ship-owners of Maine. They say:

"Your memorialists are a committee raised for a specific purpose by a large and intelligent convention of ship-builders and ship-owners held in Augusta, Maine, January 30, 1867.

"The following is the resolve under which they act:

"Resolved, That a committee consisting of Hon.

Samuel Cony, Hon. N. G. Hichborn, Hon. E. W. Stetson, Hon. Isaiah Stetson, and Hon. J. P. Morse, be raised to memorialize Congress and ask that the ship-building interest of Maine be relieved from the heavy burdens imposed by Congress upon this important branch of industry, through a drawback on duties on all foreign articles entering into the construction of ships."

I move that these resolutions and the memorial be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

DONATION OF CERTAIN PROPERTY TO OHIO.

Mr. WILSON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 266) granting certain public property to the State of Ohio, to report it with an amendment, and as it is very brief I should like to put it on its passage.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If it gives rise to no debate I shall not object.

Mr. WILSON. It is very brief, indeed, and will take no time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent to consider the resolution at this time. Is there any objection?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I do not object if it does not give rise to debate. It will be remembered that yesterday morning a very important bill was under consideration and was laid over informally to take up the reconstruction bill, and that bill will come up as a matter of course this morning.

Mr. WILSON. If any debate arises on this resolution I will not press it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It proposes to donate the buildings, sheds, furniture, lumber, and other property, now at Camp Chase, near Columbus, in the State of Ohio, to the State, to be used in the erection of the State asylum for the idiotic.

The Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia reported the joint resolution with an amendment in line six, to strike out the words "used in the erection of a State asylum for the idiotic," and to insert "appropriated by the State Legislature to the use and benefit of homes for disabled soldiers."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

BINGHAM, of Ohio, and Mr. J. H. KETCHAM, of New York, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. #### REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HOWARD. I am directed by the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, to whom were referred the following bills, to ask to be discharged from their further consideration:

A bill (S. No. 484) to secure the speedy construction of the Union Pacific railroad, southern branch and telegraph line, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes;

A bill (S. No. 518) to amend an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific ocean," approved July 27, 1866, and to facilitate the early construction of the Atlantic and Pacific railroad;

A bill (S. No. 520) to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley railroad, connecting the great lakes, Iowa, Missouri, and Kansas, with Texas on the Gulf of Mexico, and the Southwest with the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes;

A bill (S. No. 516) additional to an act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, on the Pacific coast, by the northern route.

In respect to these several bills which I have reported back to the Senate, asking to be discharged from their further consideration, the committee also instruct me to say that owing to the pressure of other business at the present session of Congress they have deemed this the most expedient course; but they do not make these reports with a view to prejudice the merits of any of these bills.

The reports were agreed to.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, to whom were referred the memorials of the Chamber of Commerce of Memphis, Tennessee, praying that the Union Pacific railroad, southern branch, may be as liberally endowed as the Union Pacific railroad and its northern branches, and the memorial of the president of the St. Paul and Pacific Railroad Company of Minnesota, praying for a grant of land and money equal to that made to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and the Union Pacific Railroad Company, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom was referred the memorial of the State Historical Society of Iowa, praying for a modification of the postal laws, so as to permit postage on pamphlets, paper, books, &c., forwarded to historical societies to be paid on delivery, reported a bill (S. No. 618) to amend the laws relating to the Post Office Department; which was read and passed to a second reading.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 283) authorizing the Secretary of State to present to Captain James G. Smith, of the British brig Victoria, a gold chronometer, in token of appreciation of his services in rescuing from death the master, officers, crew, and passengers on board of the American brig E. H. Fidler, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1167) to authorize entry and clearance of vessels at the ports of Boothbay and Saint George, Maine, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 616) to reduce the number of members of the levy court of the county of Washington, District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CONNESS, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 603) to authorize the establishment of ocean mail steamship service between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1039) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending 30th June, 1868, to report it with amendments; and I give notice that I shall call it up for consideration on Saturday next.

FORT GRATIOT MILITARY RESERVE.

Mr. HOWARD. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 607) to amend an act granting the right of way over the military reserve at Fort Gratiot, Michigan, to report it without amendment and recommend its passage; and I hope, if there be no objection, that the bill may be put upon its passage at once. I do not think it will occasion any debate at all. The committee have looked into it. I think its passage is quite necessary for the benefit of the public as connected with a railroad that has possession of a portion of the military reserve.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the bill on the day it is reported. Is there any objection?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I shall not raise any objection on the statement of the honorable

Senator that it will lead to no discussion. I desire the Senate to-day to proceed with the Indian bill that was up yesterday.

Mr. HOWARD. If it leads to discussion it may be laid aside.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend the act entitled "An act granting the right of way over, and depot grounds upon, the military reserve of Fort Gratiot, in the State of Michigan," passed February 7, 1859, by inserting in the last proviso, after the word "wood," the words "fire-proof;" so that it shall read, "that all buildings to be erected upon said reservation shall be of wood or fire-proof."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TAXES ERRONEOUSLY PAID BY BANKS.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the petition of Benjamin W. Horn, cashier of the Providence National Bank, of Providence, Rhode Island, praying that the amount of certain taxes alleged to have been erroneously assessed and paid may be refunded, to report a recommendation that the further consideration of the petition may be postponed indefinitely.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I am also directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 178) in relation to national banking associations, granting them the relief claimed in the petition which I have just reported, to report it without amendment, and recommend its passage; and as it is simply to facilitate the business of the Treasury Department I ask that it may be considered now.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will ask the honorable Senator if it is a resolution that will lead to discussion?

Mr. VAN WINKLE and Mr. ANTHONY. None at all.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It provides that in all cases where a national bank has paid, or may pay, in excess of what may be or has been found due from the bank on account of the duty required to be paid to the Treasurer of the United States, the bank so having paid or paying such excess of duty may state an account therefor, which, on being certified by the Treasurer of the United States and found correct by the First Comptroller of the Treasury, shall be refunded in the ordinary manner by warrant on the Treasury.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I will state in a very few words that this is to enable the Treasury to pay back certain taxes paid into the Treasury under an erroneous construction of that Department. The courts have acted upon the subject and pronounced the construction erroneous, and this resolution is simply to enable the Treasury Department to pay back taxes which have been paid in by the national banks under an erroneous construction of the law.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EZRA B. GORDON.

Mr. LANE. There are a couple of pension bills on the table which have been returned from the House with amendments. The Committee on Pensions have examined them and recommend a concurrence in the amendments of the House. They are mere verbal amendments, and I hope the Senate will concur in them and let the bills become laws. I ask for their present consideration. I will first call up Senate bill No. 602.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 602) granting a pension to Ezra B. Gordon, which was to strike out all of the bill after the word "roll" in line seven, and to insert "subject to the provisions of the pension laws."

The amendment was concurred in.

PATRICK MEEHAN.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 513) granting a pension to Patrick Meehan, which was in lines seven and eight to strike out the words "at the rate of fifteen dollars per month," and to insert "subject to the provisions of the pension laws."

The amendment was concurred in.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. CHANDLER. It will be necessary for the Committee on Commerce to have one day to close its business, and I desire to fix a day for the consideration of business from that Committee. I move that Saturday next be set apart for that purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. On Saturday I propose to call up the Indian appropriation bill, which has been reported from the Committee on Finance to-day.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will Monday suit better? It will suit me just as well as Saturday.

Mr. SHERMAN. On Saturday I shall call up the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am willing to say Monday.

Mr. CONNESS. You do not want a whole day.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall require one day, perhaps two days. I vary my motion so as to name Monday next for the consideration of business reported by the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 619) to confirm certain sales made by the direct tax commissioners for South Carolina to persons in the Army, Navy, or Marine corps, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. No. 180) to authorize a trial of the comparative power of resistance of iron-clad ships and stone fortifications to the fire of heavy artillery; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, and ordered to be printed.

POST OFFICE ADDRESS OF SENATORS.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate is hereby directed to furnish to the official publishers of the Debates in Congress, to be inserted therein at the close of each session the name and post office address of each Senator, and of each officer of the Senate, with a diagram of the Senate Chamber showing the seats of Senators.

CLINTON BRIDGE.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 965.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I have no objection to that bill being disposed of if it leads to no debate; but I suggest that the bill in relation to Indian affairs was under consideration in the Senate yesterday and laid aside informally to dispose of the reconstruction bill, and if the Senate will allow that bill to come up I shall have no objection to allowing this bill to come up informally.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I think this bill will not lead to any discussion.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move that the Senate postpone all prior orders and take up Senate bill No. 204, which was the bill under consideration yesterday morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Iowa is already made.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I hope I shall be allowed to get this bill up.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. With the understanding that it will lead to no debate I shall not object; but if it does I shall move to take up the bill which was under consideration yesterday.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. If it leads to any extended debate it can be laid aside.

The motion of Mr. KIRKWOOD was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 965) declaring Clinton bridge, across the Mississippi river, at Clinton, in the State of Iowa, a post route.

It provides that the bridge across the Mississippi river erected by the Albany Bridge Company, and the Chicago, Iowa, and Nebraska Railroad Company, under the authority of the States of Iowa and Illinois, between the towns of Clinton, Iowa, and Albany, Illinois, shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission of the mails, troops, and munitions of war of the United States, than the rate per mile paid for their transportation over the railroads or public highways leading to the bridge.

The draw of the bridge is to be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats whose construction shall not be such as to admit of their passage under the permanent spans of the bridge, except when trains are passing over it; but in no case is unnecessary delay to occur in opening the draw during or after the passage of trains.

In case of any litigation hereafter arising from any alleged obstruction to the free navigation of the river, the cause may be tried before the circuit court of the United States of any State in which any portion of the obstruction or bridge touches.

The right to alter or amend this act so as to prevent or remove all material obstructions to the navigation of the river by the construction of said bridge is expressly reserved.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads whether this bridge bill conforms to the other bridge bills on the Mississippi, or whether it authorizes a bridge of a different character?

Mr. RAMSEY. There is a slight difference. The bridge was built previous to the passage of the general law of the last session. The deviation from the rules established by that law will doubtless be explained by the gentleman more particularly in charge of the bill from the committee.

Mr. HENDERSON. At the last session of Congress we passed through both Houses a bill legalizing all the bridges that might be built on the Mississippi with a span of one hundred and sixty feet. I understand that the bridge which is now to be made a post road and legalized has a span of only one hundred and twenty feet.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. One hundred and twenty-eight feet. If the gentleman will permit me, there is a report in this case which sets forth all the particulars and will explain the bill to Senators better than could be done by word of mouth. I ask that that report may be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. VAN WINKLE, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads on the 14th instant:

The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom was referred House bill No. 965, declaring Clinton bridge, across the Mississippi river, at Clinton, in the State of Iowa, a post route, respectfully report:

That the object of the said bill is to legalize the railroad bridge across the Mississippi river at Clinton, Iowa, and to establish the same as a post route and that the said bridge was constructed at an expense of nearly half a million dollars, under authority granted by the States of Illinois and Iowa, and was used for the passage of railroad trains about two years since, and long before the passage of the act of Congress approved July 25, 1866, prescribing, among other things, the width of the draws of bridges constructed across the said river. The Clinton bridge was begun some time after the bridge at Rock Island came into use, and it is evident, from the evidence before the committee, that in the location and construction of the Clinton bridge every effort was made to avoid the alleged faults of the former structure, and to create as little obstruction to the navigation of the river as is compatible with the existence of a draw-bridge.

Believing, then, that the Clinton bridge was planned and constructed in good faith, with a due regard to the easy approach to, and passage of steamers and other vessels through its draw with the least possible detention, and in the absence of any regulation imposed by law, the committee directed their attention to the inquiry whether the said bridge, from its location, mode of construction, or the dimensions of its parts, presents any obstruction to navigation so serious as to demand its removal or alteration. To determine this they carefully examined a large mass of written evidence taken under oath, consisting partly of depositions taken before the House Committee on Post Offices, &c., which accompanies this report. But inasmuch as General Warren, a distinguished engineer of the United States Army, had been detailed by the Secretary of War to examine the Upper Mississippi and report upon the subject of constructing railroad bridges across it under a law of the last session, and had made some progress in the survey, the committee called him before them. With the aid of a map of the site of the bridge and of the course of the river for some distance above and below, the engineer detailed the information he had acquired on the subject, which he subsequently condensed into a written statement, which accompanies this report. It is proper, however, to state that General Warren was but one day at the site of the bridge, and this at nearly the lowest stage of water.

From this statement it appears that "the channel-way in which the pivot-pier and turning bridge are placed is not less than forty feet deep, and the current does not exceed two miles an hour. The clear spaces each side of the pivot-pier are on the Iowa side, one hundred and twenty-eight feet, and one hundred and nineteen on the other." It will be perceived that these openings are several feet wider than those of the Rock Island bridge, while it also appears that at the site of the piers the thread of the current is parallel with them, although for some thousand feet above the bridge the current follows the curve of the Iowa shore.

In the course of his letter General Warren specifies seven principal requirements of a perfect draw-bridge. He concedes that the Clinton bridge fulfills four of these; the remaining three, in which he thinks it is deficient, are the following:

"1. The open spaces of the draw should be in the channel-way at a point where it is permanent at all times and stages of the water, and both openings should be available."

"In the Clinton bridge but one draw space is useful."

"2. The current should not only be in the direction of the draw-piers where they are placed, but should have the same direction from one thousand feet above the bridge to three hundred feet below at least."

"This requirement is not met by the Clinton bridge."

"3. Where the steamboat pilot when approaching the bridge at night could have the bridge and opening clearly defined against the sky or its reflection on the water surface."

"This is not the case with the Clinton bridge."

These requirements are unquestionably correct in theory, but the departure from them may be so inconsiderable, or there may be such compensating features in the case as to render variance from them hardly worthy of attention. The mass of evidence before the committee renders it highly probable that such is the case in the present instance. The committee, therefore, present the following brief synopsis of the sworn testimony before them, showing what has been the actual effect of the bridge upon the navigation of the river.

In the first place, it appears that there is always a depth of water of thirty feet and upward in the main channel, or between the draw-piers, even when the river is at the lowest stage; and that whenever the river rises a few feet it spreads over a large extent of land, so that the current at, and for some distance both above and below the bridge, never exceeds the rate of two miles per hour. These facts certainly render the approach to and entrance of the draw-openings much safer and more practicable than they would be under other conditions, and the slow current certainly tends to mitigate all objections that can be drawn from a want of the above requirements.

A record has been kept at the bridge from the time of its erection to the close of 1866, embracing a period of nearly two years, from which it appears that during that time 1,914 steamboats, 1,211 barges, and 984 rafts passed the bridge. Of the barges, 396 were towed up, 353 were towed down, and 50 were dropped down with lines. In 1865 there were 76; and in 1866 there were 74 different boats which made the above number of passages through the bridge. And yet the whole number of boats and barges that even touched the piers in passing was only 36, and it is believed that about one half of them did so purposely or for their own convenience. These numerous passages were made in all states of wind, weather, and water, and by night as well as day, and it is not uncommon for boats, even with barges in tow, to pass through without slackening their speed. The only accident that occurred in 1866 by which property was injured was to the steamer Starlight, which, with barges in tow, passed down without checking her speed on the night of the 1st of July. At the time some extensive saw-mills below the bridge were firing up with sawdust, and owing to the state of the atmosphere, the smoke settled on the river and obscured the lights of the bridge. One of the barges struck the pivot-pier, became leaky, and was landed just below the bridge.

Of the eight hundred and sixty-five steamboats which passed the bridge in 1866, of which one hundred and forty-three passed during the night, but two were detained in consequence of wind and weather. Each were detained eight hours. All the rest passed without other delay than that caused by checking their speed. No accident, except the above-mentioned, occurred to any steamboat passing in the night.

The opposition to the bridge is principally made by the Northern Line Packet Company of St. Louis. Their boats, fifteen in number, made five hundred and thirty-six passages through the bridge in 1866, but not one of these boats, or any barge towed by them, was injured or delayed by the bridge during that year.

Other facts of a similar tendency as evidence could be cited, but the committee forbear. They believe what has been stated fully justifies them in recommending, as they do, the passage of the House bill on which this report is based without amendment, particularly as the right is retained by Congress to alter or amend it at pleasure, thus enabling that body to require such alterations or additional constructions as will obviate all such objections as future experience may show to exist.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I call the particular attention of the Senate to the last remark in the report and to the last section of the bill. The committee have reported the bill as it passed the House, without amendment. The last section provides that it shall always be in the power of Congress to alter or amend this act at their pleasure, so as to require such alterations to be made in the bridge, or such constructions, or whatever may be necessary for the perfect safety of steamboats passing through it as experience may demonstrate to be proper or requisite. The report of General Warren, who was detailed by the Secretary of War to examine the Upper Mississippi with a particular view to the location of bridges on that river and the state of the bridges there, is among the papers here. He is very careful, as a scientific man should be unquestionably, in all his statements. He admits that he had but one day's time to spend at the bridge, and his remarks are founded on the observation he was able to make in that time and upon what was related to him by others in whom he had confidence. While he states some seven or eight requisites which are desirable in order to make a perfect draw-bridge, he admits that this bridge is only deficient in three, which are enumerated in the report.

He lays the most stress upon the fact that there is a curve in the river running up from the bridge on the Iowa shore, and that boats approaching the bridge are necessarily bound to follow that curve, so that they do not approach squarely to the opening. While he admits that the piers stand parallel to the current, and that there is every facility there for passing the bridge without difficulty, he says that this curve renders the passage not so certain as it would be if the pilot approaching the bridge, at the distance of a thousand feet could look directly through the bridge. The committee have in their report cited evidence which convinced them that while that is correct in theory and while it would be better perhaps if the bridge stood in such a position that the daylight could be seen through the opening from that distance above, yet it has not proved in practice to be any difficulty at all. The evidence shows that steamboats with barges in tow coming down the river, without slackening their speed, pass under the bridge, and that there has been no difficulty which was not occasioned by extraordinary circumstances such as it was impossible to avoid; as, for instance, the boat that is mentioned in the report and which injured one of her barges by striking it against the pivot-pier. It was under peculiar circumstances. There was a lowering atmosphere at the time and some saw-mills in the neighborhood—there are very extensive saw-mills there—lighting their fires with sawdust, which makes a dense smoke, and that smoke settling on the face of the river obscured the lights of the bridge. It appears also that two boats have been detained at that bridge during the year 1866 for the period of eight hours each, and including that the detention will not average seven minutes to each boat. That has been the experience at the bridge. A very correct and full record has been kept of every boat, the state of the wind and weather, the height of the river, and other circumstances of that kind, which enable even unscientific men, as I suppose most of the committee are, or at least not experts about bridges, to determine with a good deal of satisfaction to themselves that the bridge does not offer any unusual obstruction or any obstruction that can be avoided where there is a draw-bridge.

I think the Supreme Court of the United States have once decided—I forget in what case—that a draw-bridge properly constructed was not such an obstruction to navigation as could be abated. This bridge was built before the passage of any law of Congress on the subject of the construction of bridges. The bridge has been built, the committee are entirely satisfied, in good faith with a view to comply with all the requirements of a good bridge that were possible on the occasion. Having had the warning given by the Rock Island bridge, the piers of which do not stand parallel to the current, this company went two miles down the river in order to find a suitable site, and were thereby obliged to build a bridge structure over a larger extent of low land at an increased expense. It seems to me, therefore, the good faith of the company in erecting this bridge must be entirely evident to every Senator.

Now, this bridge having been built and in operation a year or more before Congress legislated on the subject or prescribed the width of the draws, before in fact they had made any requirements, this bridge having been built in good faith, accommodating the public as it does in the trains that pass over it daily, it being proved that it has been well kept—it being admitted by General Warren that the draw is opened promptly on all occasions, and that there is very little or no detention on that account—all these things being admitted, as they will be by anybody who will peruse even General Warren's report or examine the other testimony that is there, the question is simply this: shall we now compel the abatement of this bridge or the destruction of it, you may say, because nothing less than that could alter what is insuperable from the structure that has been chosen, and which appears to be as good a one as can be found in that part of the country? Shall we put these people to the expense of rebuilding their bridge; or shall we suffer it to remain under the provisions of this bill, preserving the right to Congress to require any alterations in it hereafter that experience may suggest are necessary? It appears to me that every consideration of duty to our fellow-citizens who are engaged in this matter and common justice between man and man require of us, until the bridge is shown actually to be injurious to the navigation of the river, to let it remain, preserving the power, as this bill does, to alter it when we shall think the occasion demands it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the fourth section of the bill by inserting after the word "amend" in the second line the words "and repeal;" and in lines two, three, and four to strike out the words "so as to prevent or remove all material obstructions to the navigation of said river by the construction of said bridge;" so that the section will read:

That the right to alter, or amend, and repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The object of this amendment is to reserve to Congress the supreme control over the navigation of the river, so that if at any time hereafter it shall appear necessary for the public interests to pass any law on the subject, even going to the extent of repealing this whole authority, we shall have the power to do it. It is the same provision that was inserted in the bill of the last session touching the passage of a railroad over a river, I think at Cleveland, Ohio, and another touching the passage of Lake Champlain between Vermont and New York, near the Canadian border. I think it a very proper and necessary control which ought to be reserved over all acts of this description. I trust the amendment will not be objected to.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I think the Senator from Vermont does not precisely view this question in its proper light. The bills to which he refers were bills authorizing the erection of bridges; and of course what may have been inserted in such bills might by possibility be regarded in the light of a contract with reference to those bridges. This is not that case. Here a bridge has already been built, was built before the passage of the law passed at the last session regulating bridges across the same river, and this bridge, having been built before the passage of that law, does not conform in all particulars to that law. The object of the present bill is to legalize for the present the bridge as built. There can no implication arise from the building of a bridge under a law in which a contract was made that it might be built in a particular way. The purpose and scope of this bill is but to say that so long as Congress may find that this bridge as it stands presents no material obstruction to the navigation of the river it shall be considered a post route, but with power in Congress to amend or alter the law in any way so as to remove any obstruction that future experience may show it does present. Now, the proviso in this bill is the same as that in the general law passed at the last session with reference to bridges over this river throughout its length. Section thirteen of that law reads thus:

"The right to alter or amend this act so as to prevent or remove all material obstructions to the navigation of said river by the construction of bridges is hereby expressly reserved."

In the general law that we passed at the last session authorizing the building of bridges across this river, we reserved the right to ourselves to alter that law or amend it as we might see fit, in order to preserve the navigation of the river, if experience should show that the bridges built under the law presented obstructions. So we do in this bill. We say, in substance, in this bill: although the bridge already built does not comply with the provisions of the law passed after it was built, yet experience thus far has shown that it is not a material obstruction to the navigation of the river; and so long as experience shall continue to show that to be the case, so long as actual experience, year by year, shall show that the navigation of the river suffers no material injury by reason of this bridge, so long it may be considered a post route. But if in the future experience should show that by reason of a change in the mode of navigation or otherwise the bridge shall become a material obstruction, then the power is reserved to Congress to amend and alter the act so as to remove any obstruction that experience may show has arisen. I think the right and power of Congress is fully reserved as it stands, and at this late period of the session I should prefer that the bill should not be amended.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I made the inquiry on this subject, and from the statements made by the honorable gentleman on the committee, as the power is reserved in Congress hereafter to change the draw in that bridge if it is found to be insufficient, and as the bridge is an existing fact, and has been actually made at great expense, I shall not make any resistance to the passage of this bill.

Mr. CONNESS. I cannot hear the Senator.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I say I shall not make any resistance to the passage of the bill, inasmuch as it retains in Congress the power hereafter to compel the building of a wider draw, if it should be necessary.

Mr. POLAND. I believe I was entitled at one o'clock to the consideration of a bill that was up for consideration last night. I do not desire to interfere with this measure if it be understood that I can have a vote on that bill when this closes.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I take it that the bill which is properly pending before the Senate is the Indian bill, which is pending between the House and the Senate, and which was laid aside to allow this bridge bill to come up, supposing that there would be no discussion upon it.

Mr. POLAND. I believe the Senator from Wisconsin is mistaken. I profess to know nothing in relation to my rights under the rules; but it was announced by the Chair last night that the bill before the Senate was the one that was partially considered, of which I had the care. I rely upon that.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I did not understand that any bill was taken up last evening at the adjournment. The bill in relation to Indian affairs was under consideration in the Senate at the time the reconstruction bill came in from the House, and it was laid aside informally to let that go on. It did go on until it was finished, and when we got through with it the adjournment took place, as I understand. No new bill was substituted.

Mr. HENDERSON. The business of the Committee on Patents was the special order for last night.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I was not aware of that fact. I will ask the Senator if his bill is one that is likely to give rise to debate?

Mr. POLAND. No, sir; I think it will take two minutes perhaps.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Then I stand corrected in relation to the business; but this Indian bill is one which must be disposed of before the Indian appropriation bill comes up, and the Senator from Ohio has given notice that the Indian appropriation bill is to come up on Saturday.

Mr. WADE. I have been waiting a long time to obtain an opportunity to take up again the amendment to the Constitution which we had up once before. I think nearly all, if not all, the Senate of all parties are in favor of that proposition. The session is drawing toward a close, and it will have to pass both branches. I think we can dispose of it in a short time, inasmuch as I do not understand that there will be any serious opposition to it. I am very anxious that it should be taken up and disposed of. I gave notice more than ten days ago that I should ask the Senate to take it up on the very first opportunity that I could get; but on every occasion I found a wrangle made among other Senators with regard to other matters, and we have had a great and important measure before the Senate that it seemed proper should supersede all other business. I have been content until now; but I think I ought to ask the Senate now to postpone all other orders and take that up. I presume we can settle upon its provisions very soon, inasmuch as I do not understand that there is any serious opposition to it in any quarter.

Mr. POMEROY. I had supposed that the Senator from Ohio would call for a vote on the Colorado question. The amendment to the Constitution is a provision which, of course, I intend to support; but I thought our first duty was to settle the question whether Colorado should be admitted or not. I hope at a very early period, if the Senator from Ohio will call up anything, he will call up that measure.

Mr. WADE. I have not by any means forgotten Colorado. It is in my mind night and day. I am as anxious to take it up as anybody; but I want to settle it right when we do take it up. I want all the power I can get to carry it through; because I know the people want it; I know it ought to be done, and I shall not lose sight of that. But, then, that measure only presents one single question that can be passed upon very soon. I hope we shall agree now to take up this, which I think one of the most important measures that we can take up. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator repeat his motion?

Mr. WADE. My motion is to postpone the present and all other orders and proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 33) proposing to amend the Constitution of the United States so as to limit the term of the President of the United States.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am in favor of the constitutional amendment which the Senator from Ohio desires to call up, and I reported it from the Judiciary Committee, but I shall not vote to postpone the matter now under consideration to take it up. I hope we may have time to act upon it; but I wish to say to the Senator from Ohio and to other Senators that I have struggled here nearly every morning for two weeks to get up bills which are upon the table, and have been upon the Calendar for a long time, of public importance, and I have been unable to get the attention of the Senate to them. Here is a bill upon your table to prevent whipping in the rebellious States.

Mr. SUMNER. Rebel States.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Never mind about the precise term, whether "rebel" or "rebellious," I presume I am understood. There is a bill here to prevent the payment of money on claims which are set up for services rendered before the war by men who went into rebellion. It is a House bill. Then there is a House bill to dispense with the services of certain commissioners who are engaged in some of the late slave-holding States in assessing damages and the claims of persons who claim to have been the owners of slaves who entered the Union Army. There is a bill pending to establish a Department of Education. All these subjects ought to be considered by the Senate; and therefore I shall vote against the Senator's motion now. I hope we shall waste no time in its discussion. Let us dispose of the bill we have under consideration, and then there is the bill which the Senator from Wisconsin is urging all the time, that ought to be considered before the Indian appropriation bill. We must go on with this ordinary legislation; but I think if we get into a debate on the constitutional amendment we shall have to lose a good many bills that it is necessary to pass. If there is time afterward, let us take up the constitutional amendment and dispose of it; but let us do this essential business at any rate.

Mr. WADE. This is the most essential of all measures, and I think it supersedes in importance any bill before the Senate. It is true, it is not of that immediate, pressing necessity that an individual bill bears upon the minds of some men; but when we contemplate the future, it is very important. This is probably the only time we shall ever be able to amend the Constitution in this respect, as it seems we all desire to amend it, because in ordinary times the proposition itself is so invidious and meets party lines in such a manner ordinarily, that although everybody has wanted the Constitution amended in this way for a good many years, this seems to be the only occasion when it is possible to do it. If this opportunity is lost and the Government passes into its regular channels in the course it has pursued heretofore, it will be exceedingly difficult and perhaps impossible to ingraft upon the Constitution this amendment that everybody seems to be in favor of, and which our greatest statesmen for many years have been anxious to adopt. I hope we shall not fail to do it now. I know very well that we shall have a session right after this, and if anything should fail us now it would not be fatal.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the motion of the Senator from Ohio to postpone the present and all prior orders, and proceed to the consideration of the resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope that will not be done, because I am very strongly of the impression that we ought to finish this Indian bill to-day. The day after to-morrow we must take up the Indian appropriation bill, and this Indian bill must be disposed of before that comes up, because if it is passed it will make certain very essential changes, and it ought to be considered first. I hope, therefore, that we shall take up the bill which the Senator from Wisconsin has charge of, in order that the way may be clear for the Indian appropriation bill.

which must pass, and which cannot be acted on before that time.

Mr. SUMNER. Perhaps the Indian bill may be disposed of promptly without debate by a motion that the Senate do not concur in the amendment of the House, and ask for a committee of conference. I will suggest that in advance, so that that question may be eliminated from our discussions.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not agree to that. That bill I consider of too much consequence to be disposed of in that summary manner.

Mr. SUMNER. I made the suggestion with a view to the economy of time, and after consultation with several Senators who are much interested in the measure. Of course we are all interested in it. It is a measure of very great public interest.

Then with regard to other matters, I must confess that the Senator from Illinois has presented an array of measures which certainly do challenge the attention of the Senate. There is one of those providing for a Bureau of Education, which I think at this moment of infinite importance.

I should not, however, have said a word now except that it is my duty to call attention to a joint resolution reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, which ought to be acted upon promptly. It was reported as long ago as February 6, and I have not been able to get it before the Senate from that time to this. It is a joint resolution supplementary to other joint resolutions to enable the people of the United States to participate in the advantages of the Universal Exhibition at Paris in 1867. Action on that resolution ought to be prompt, or it will be of very little avail. We have already entered into the preliminary arrangements, and it seems to be our duty to go on and complete them. I merely throw out this suggestion now in order to ask the attention of the Senate in advance to this measure. I should like to bring it forward to-day if I could.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to suggest to my friend that this Indian bill involves a very important question, as I understand. It is whether the control of Indian affairs shall be taken from the Interior Department and transferred to the War Department. I think that is a very important question. The Senator suggests a committee of conference upon it. I want to suggest to him whether it would not be exceedingly dangerous to leave a question of that importance to a secret conclave of six members? Would it not be attended with very great danger if the Senate were to abdicate their authority on that great subject? [Laughter.]

Mr. SUMNER. There is great force in that argument.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I will suggest, with a great deal of deference to older members of the Senate, that we sometimes consume a great deal of what they claim to be very valuable time in talking about what we shall do next.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask the Senator from Ohio to withdraw his motion at present and let this pending bill be voted upon. It will not occupy five minutes of time, I think.

Mr. WADE. I will endeavor to see if I can get a day fixed sometime during this session when the Senate will agree to have this measure taken up.

Mr. CONNESS. We will join you on any other occasion.

Mr. WADE. I will say Saturday.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Indian appropriation bill comes up on Saturday.

Mr. WADE. What day can gentlemen, who have important measures in charge, name when they suppose we could take it up? Say next week; Tuesday or Wednesday.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In my judgment we cannot name any day for the consideration of a particular subject. How much time have we left? Just look at it: we have now before us the Indian appropriation bill, the Army appropriation bill, the Navy appropriation bill, what is called the omnibus bill or the civil appropriation bill, a deficiency bill, probably, and in addition to that we have the internal revenue bill, now under debate in the House, and the tariff bill.

Mr. WADE. They are not ready yet.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They are not ready yet, but they are being got ready. All those bills are essential to be acted upon. At this period of the session, I think it exceedingly important that we should hurry them as much as possible, and not take up subjects that can be dispensed with. My own opinion is, in relation to the business of to-day, that as soon as we have passed the bill, if we shall pass it, which stands in the way of the Indian appropriation bill, which is awaiting action upon it, we should clear ourselves of another difficulty which is ahead of us, and that is, to act upon the Calendar of nominations. Those appointments should be acted upon. Great numbers have been rejected. Great numbers more will be rejected if the advice of the committees is taken, which is very probable, and new nominations must be sent in and acted upon before we adjourn to fill those vacancies. I think myself that as soon as the Indian bill is disposed of, we ought to go into executive session and dispose of the Calendar; and then, if there is any time left, we can take up these other bills which seem to be pressing and pass them. My own judgment is that that is the proper course to take, in view of what is ahead of us. If we put off disposing of the executive Calendar, until the very last period of the session, we shall adjourn with a very large number of nominations not acted upon; while if we dispose of them early, we can receive nominations to fill the places of those rejected. I hope that that course will be taken. Although I am in favor of some sort of measure, I do not know exactly in what form, but the general idea of the measure suggested by the honorable Senator from Ohio, the Senator will reflect that that is a matter that can be acted upon at the very last moment, as it has not to go any further than ourselves.

Mr. WADE. Well, Mr. President, I should like to give notice of a time when I shall endeavor to get this up. I do not believe it is going to excite a great deal of debate, because every one is in favor of it. I find nobody here, and I have canvassed the Senate pretty closely, who is not in favor of it. I shall endeavor to get it up on Tuesday next, and for the present I withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Ohio is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to the fourth section of the bill (H. R. No. 965) declaring Clinton bridge across the Mississippi river, at Clinton, in the State of Iowa, a post route.

Mr. HOWE. Now, I wish the Senator from Vermont would withdraw that amendment and let the bill pass as it stands. It seems to me there are very great reasons why he should withdraw it. The form of this section is modeled after a precedent already on the statute-book. That is a good reason for adhering to this form, it seems to me. But, in addition to that, there is another good reason, which is, that the power reserved to Congress in the section as it stands is ample. If Congress reserves to itself the power so to alter or amend this act as to prevent any material obstruction of that river hereafter, it will always have the control, being the judge of what is a material obstruction, to insist upon any alteration of the bridge so as to avoid that. Why reserve a power in terms to repeal the act when it has the power given to it to so amend it as to prevent any material obstruction? I would not resist this amendment at all but for the fact that it will send the bill back to the House of Representatives, and we are near the close of the session; it is an important measure; very important interests hang upon it; and I do not wish it to be subjected to that risk.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think it right for us to legislate improperly, or to omit any proper legislation on the ground that the session is near a close, and that a bill of the House which needs to be amended must, if amended, go back there for further consideration. It appears to me to be a very dangerous mode of legislating, to do that. The question, therefore, is whether the amendment which I propose is one that ought to be made, intrinsically considered.

The question, then, is whether in allowing obstructions to the public rivers of the country—as bridges are to a certain degree, no matter how perfectly they are constructed—it is right for Congress to reserve complete control over the subject, so as to have the power at any future time to require the absolute removal of the bridge completely? Now, I think that the proper policy for this country is, over all its harbors, public works, and public rivers, to reserve that control.

If that be so, then the question is, whether this act and the act of last summer, upon which this is said to be modeled, does that thing? The act of last summer, and this act, provides that Congress shall have the power to alter or amend for a specific purpose, so as to prevent any material obstruction. What is a material obstruction of the river under such an act would be a question for the courts and not for Congress, I take it. It excludes from the act the word "repeal," which has been usual where a legislative body has desired to retain complete control over a subject. Now, therefore, unless the reservation of the power to alter and amend is equivalent to a reservation of the power to repeal, this bill does not contain what it ought to contain, if I am right in stating what the policy of the Government ought to be. The difference between a power to repeal and a power to alter and amend is, I think, in the eyes of courts and lawyers, a distinguishable difference; and it is a difference of something more than phraseology, of substance, and intent. If the Senate think it is fit for Congress to surrender full control of any part of its paramount authorities over this subject, then I have nothing more to say; but as I do not think so, I felt it to be my duty to offer the amendment.

When a similar bill last summer passed this body, declaring a bridge over Lake Champlain to be a lawful structure, which had not been erected in conformity to law, as this bridge has not, it is said it was provided that the act should be subject to amendment or repeal at the pleasure of Congress. I do not say that that was the deliberate sense of the Senate on a contest, for the reason that having the matter in charge I inserted the provision myself, and of course it met the approval of the Senate as a right and proper thing. So I do not use that as a precedent where upon a contest the Senate has settled a policy; but I only speak of it as a precedent which shows what in my judgment the true course of legislation is. I do not wish to occupy the time of the Senate in more than stating the ground on which I have proceeded.

The amendment was rejected; there being on a division—ayes 12, noes 15.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move to insert at the end of the first section of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall have the effect to defeat any suit or other proceedings against said bridge or the company constructing it now pending in the courts; nor shall it in any manner affect any right of action already accrued.

Mr. HOWE. I do not see the necessity for that amendment. This bill has passed the House of Representatives, and it is reported back by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate just in the form in which it stands, after a most laborious examination of the case, and I do not think it ought to be embarrassed by amendments that are not absolutely necessary to the perfection of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the honorable member will permit me, I will state what I understand to be the law on the subject.

Mr. HOWE. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. In the Wheeling bridge case the Supreme Court decided that the bridge was an obstruction to the navigation of the river. They did not change that opinion at any subsequent time; but after that decision was given Congress passed an act making the bridge a post route, and the court then held that that of itself, notwithstanding the opinion that the bridge was to come down before the act was passed, made the bridge a legal structure and took from Pennsylvania the right which she had originally to sue and took away the right which had been consummated by a judgment in favor of the State directing the bridge to be taken down. Now, in this case there are I understand suits already pending against the bridge company. If you make it a legal structure now, according to the Wheeling bridge case those suits necessarily fall. It is therefore for Congress to decide whether they will take from a party a right to sue, which he has attempted to exercise by bringing a suit by legislation of this kind.

Mr. HOWE. If I remember the case of the Wheeling bridge, the litigation with which the act of Congress interfered was a litigation commenced for the purpose of removing the bridge as a nuisance, and there was a judgment of abatement against the bridge. The act of Congress then intervened and declared it a legal structure or made it a legal structure, and of course when by the authority of the nation it was declared a legal structure a judgment of abatement could not be executed. But I ask the Senator from Maryland if this bill as it stands now, supposing it to become a law, will prevent any man who has been injured by the existence of this bridge from recovering damages?

Mr. JOHNSON. I think it will. If the honorable member will excuse me for interrupting him, I think the decision was that the legalizing act related back to the time the bridge was first built, and therefore exempted the company from any liability for any acts of loss or any damages suffered by any person in the navigation of the river consequent upon the manner in which the bridge had been originally constructed. If so, these suits, if there are any, will fall.

Mr. HOWE. My recollection of the judgment in the case of the Wheeling bridge was very different from that; that it only affected the judgment of abatement and affected the right of no man in the world to damages; and I cannot conceive that this act would operate to defeat the suit of any man who may have sued the bridge company for damages already sustained or who may hereafter sue for damages sustained before this act shall become the law of the land. But suppose there were a suit pending now for the very purpose of abating this bridge—I do not know whether there is or not—

Mr. VAN WINKLE. If the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me, I understand that not only are there no suits pending against the bridge company for damages, but no suit has ever been brought for that purpose. The only suit pending was an injunction commenced by the Northern Line Packet Company of St. Louis, to abate the bridge and prevent the use of it. I think by the law a month's time is given them to offer their proofs and so on; but they failed entirely to do so, and the bill is now set down as an original bill, and remains upon the records of the court. Whether they intend to proceed with it or not I do not know. There are no suits for damages, and have been none.

Mr. HOWE. Then there is a suit pending for the abatement of the bridge, and the purpose of this amendment is to leave that suit in full force.

Mr. HENDERSON. Let us get the evidence under that.

Mr. HOWE. The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads in both Houses have taken testimony upon the question whether this was a material obstruction or not. They have reported here that it is not a material obstruction. This company was authorized to build the bridge by the two States of Iowa and Illinois. They had not any instructions from either of those States, nor from any law in the world as to precisely what kind of a bridge should be built. They put their money in there at the peril of losing it if they did not build a bridge which would protect navigation, which would not furnish reasonable facilities to the commerce on the river. They have spent $480,000. The question is whether they shall be protected in that expenditure. Congress at the last session, in providing for bridges elsewhere on the Mississippi, adopted a wider draw. This bridge has stood there two years. How it operates upon the commerce is known, is established by testimony; and now they ask protection for the capital they have put in it. It does not seem to me that Congress will use capital right when it allows it to be destroyed upon such allegations as are presented here.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope this amendment will be adopted. If it is the purpose of Congress to adopt a measure of this character, lessening the width of the draws of the bridges upon the Mississippi, I surely shall not enter into any further objection than I did at the last session. But as was very properly stated by the Senator from Maryland, if I remember the Wheeling bridge case aright, this amendment ought to be adopted. Now, a suit it seems is pending already to abate this bridge; a suit instituted by a company, saying that they are grievously injured by the construction of the bridge. At the last session we authorized the construction of bridges with draws of a hundred and sixty feet. The Post Office Committee at this session report to us a bill to legalize a bridge that has been constructed under State law, with a draw of a hundred and twenty-eight feet on one side of the river, and a draw on the other side of a hundred and nineteen feet, which is utterly useless, as I understand from the report. It has been examined by a competent engineer, General Warren, and out of the seven requisites of a draw-bridge, he says this bridge wants three, and three very important ones. He says:

"1. The open spaces of the draw should be in the channel-way at a point where it is permanent at all times and stages of the water, and both openings should be available.

"In the Clinton bridge but one draw space is useful.

"2. The current should not only be in the direction of the draw-piers, where they are placed, but should have the same direction from one thousand feet above the bridge to three hundred feet below at least.

"This requirement is not met by the Clinton bridge.

"3. Where the steamboat pilot when approaching the bridge at night could have the bridge and opening clearly defined against the sky, or its reflection on the water surface.

"This is not the case with the Clinton bridge."

The chief objection, in my judgment, is the second point made by the engineer, that the current is not in the direction of this draw for the distance above and below that is required, and thereby the channel may be changed and thrown under another part of the bridge, and the present draw rendered utterly useless. Here we propose to legalize this bridge with a draw of a hundred and twenty-eight feet, when we said at the last session that no bridges should be constructed with a draw of less than one hundred and sixty feet. That is a material change. If this be done, why may not Congress at the next session say that another bridge shall be constructed with a draw of a hundred feet, and at a subsequent session eighty feet, at the next session afterward forty feet; and I suppose that abundance of testimony could be produced that such a bridge would be no obstruction to navigation. Who the witnesses are that testified on this matter before the committee I cannot state; but the committee undertake to tell us:

"These requirements are unquestionably correct in theory, but the departure from them may be so inconsiderable, or there may be such compensating features in the case, as to render variance from them hardly worthy of attention."

Upon what testimony this conclusion is based

I cannot tell. If testimony can be procured to vary three very essential requisites of a bridge so as not to interfere with navigation, I apprehend that at the next session other very important requirements may be dispensed with, and we shall go on getting bridges of narrower and narrower span until we get them reduced to the width of forty feet, which is about the width of the beam, I suppose, of the steamers that ply upon the river.

The Senator from Wisconsin says that this company have invested $480,000 in building the bridge. What right had they to bridge a navigable stream at all except in the mode and manner pointed out by Congress? In other cases companies have appealed to Congress to say upon what terms bridges could be constructed, except in the Rock Island bridge case, and that bridge has caused the loss of an immense amount of property on account of the want of the second requisite referred to by General Warren, that the current did not flow on parallel lines with the abutments. I suppose, however, that in this particular case, as the water passes through, it may be upon a parallel.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. Allow me to correct the Senator. General Warren says expressly that the piers are in the direct line of the current.

Mr. HENDERSON. Right at that point, but not above and below.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. Where the curve affects it, is one thousand feet above, and he is of opinion that that could be remedied by a little cut-off a short way above where it makes an eddy. But the Senator will permit me to say now as to what the committee stated in the passage of the report from which he has read, that the committee go on to cite only a portion of the evidence before them to show that there has been no practical obstruction on the part of this bridge to boats going through by day or by night, in all winds and all weathers, with their barges at their sides, without slacking. The boats of the St. Louis Company made five hundred and thirty-six passages in one year without a single one of them touching the piers. The evidence before the committee warranted the conclusion that the bridge was no obstruction. We have evidence also that while the insurance companies raised their rates as to boats passing the Rock Island bridge, they have made no increase of rates as to this bridge.

Mr. HENDERSON. The committee say in their report, and now the Senator repeats that the Northern Line Packet Company that is making objection to the existence of the bridge, and that has instituted a suit for the abatement of the bridge, is a St. Louis company. I should like to ask the Senator if the testimony before the committee established that fact?

Mr. VAN WINKLE. Only from its name, which I understand to be the Northern Packet Line Company of St. Louis, or something like that. I think "St. Louis" is a part of the name.

Mr. HENDERSON. I can state to the Senator that if I understand properly the origin and condition of the company, it is principally owned in St. Paul. Perhaps the Senator from Minnesota can enlighten me on that subject. It is not a St. Louis company; I understand a large portion of the stock is owned in the northern towns upon the Mississippi river.

Mr. RAMSEY. I understand that the stock of the company is almost entirely owned in the city of St. Louis.

Mr. HENDERSON. That certainly has not been in accordance with my information on the subject.

Mr. RAMSEY. Much of the stock of the Northwestern Company is owned in Galena, Dubuque, and towns further up; but most of the stock of the Northern Line Packet Company, as it is called, is held in St. Louis.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. Let me say to the Senator from Missouri that in designating it as a St. Louis company, I had no intention to cast a slur on that company. My object was simply to designate the company that was contesting the matter.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have no idea that the Senator intended any such thing; but it was considered at the last session when this subject was up that St. Louis was interfering with the building of bridges on the Mississippi river. It has been repeatedly said that St. Louis interests wished to prevent the building of any railroad bridges across that river. I thought that the statement in the report was very well calculated to carry out that idea, suggested at the last session, that it was the commercial and trading interests of St. Louis that continually presented these objections against the construction of bridges. Now, in my judgment, the people of St. Louis are no more opposed to the construction of proper bridges on the river than the people of any other town on the Mississippi river or anywhere else. They do not desire to present any obstructions to railroad interests; they desire that railroads may transport their freight and passengers across the river; they ask that bridges may be constructed; but they believe that when they are constructed without proper draws they will be an obstruction to navigation. In other words, they want to consult and foster and uphold both interests.

I think that the amendment I have offered ought to be adopted. There is a suit pending to abate this bridge. The parties built it without an act of Congress, without any authority at all. Those who wished to build bridges at Quincy and St. Louis did not undertake to construct them until they came to Congress and ascertained on what terms they would be allowed to do so. If we are to legalize an act of this sort because an enormous amount of money is invested in the enterprise, may not some other individuals or railroad companies within the next year or two construct bridges across the river with draws sixty feet wide, and will not the argument which is urged by the Senator from Wisconsin be just as strong in that case as it is now? Will he not be able to say, "Parties put their money in these bridges on the idea that they were to realize something, and now is Congress going to so act as to make them lose their money?" The argument would be as strong in that case as in this.

Now, what does the bill do? In the first place it legalizes the structure. The committee tell us that this bridge has been in operation for two years without any injury to any interest. If nobody has been injured by it, why is it necessary to get an act of Congress to legalize it? I suppose nobody can succeed in an effort to abate it as a nuisance unless it really is a nuisance; and nobody can succeed in obtaining damages unless he has been actually injured. Then what is the necessity for an act of Congress legalizing the bridge? I do not see any. If it is a nuisance, why not let us take the evidence of individuals who live there, and let us get that evidence in such a shape that we can see it? All that my amendment does is to provide that if it is an obstruction to the navigation of the river, and if proved so hereafter, any pending suit shall not be affected by this proceeding. If it be true that the parties are not prosecuting their injunction against the bridge, no damage will be done. If they do not propose to go any further with it, as suggested by the Senator from West Virginia, why not then adopt the amendment? If they are really in earnest, the amendment ought to be adopted, because I think evidence taken before a court ought to have as much weight with the Senate as evidence taken before a committee. I have entire respect for the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of this body; it is an able committee, but I am not informed who testified before them. They seem to have had testimony; but there may be thousands and thousands who would testify to the contrary. I suppose forty witnesses to each one that testified before the committee that the bridge was no obstruction could be found who would testify to the contrary. I am not informed that even ten witnesses testified before this committee, or that two testified. The report itself does not show that even two testified.
